I had such a pleasant companion on my way home from Aurora. He got on at Bristol and took dinner at the "Cosmopolitan." He sat with me at dinner and didn't seem to have much appetite. He groaned when he took up the bill of fare, and sighed as he looked across the table at my order, and then shook his head dolefully and told the waiter to bring him a little boiled trout, with egg sauce; a bit of boiled mutton, with caper sauce; some roast beef, a trifle rare; just a taste of roast lamb, turkey with cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes, roast duck, some pork and beans, Boston style; stewed tomatoes, corn, turnips, squash, peas, a bit of cold tongue, some sharp relishes and a cup of coffee. Then he ordered some assorted cake, cranberry pie, Indian pudding and ice cream for dessert, and said he felt a darned sight more like dying than eating.

If he dies as well as he eats, just imagine, just think, what a glorious, triumphant death that man will die.

Shortly after dinner the poor man came into the coach and sat down opposite me.

"Ah," he said, with a deep groan; "I don't know what I wouldn't give if I could eat like you."

"Sir!" I said, in a fine burst of indignation, for I feared he was going to accuse me of swallowing my knife every time I took a bite of pie, and I just made up my mind that I would cut his heart out if he hinted at such a thing.

"Oh, it's a fact," he replied. "I haven't enjoyed a meal for years."

"Was it possible?" I asked in amazement.

"Indeed, yes," he replied. "I'm all out of fix. I've got no liver at all, to speak of."

I didn't suppose one liver would be of any account to him. I rather thought that if he could get a couple of gangs of livers, and work them by reliefs, they might be able to help him along, especially if he had them made of tin. But then he was a stranger to me, so I didn't feel justified in making the suggestion.

"No," he continued, "my liver is no more account than a lump of lead. I suppose," he said, plaintively, "it's as big as four of yours."

And he looked at me with an appealing glance, as though he expected me take my liver out and let him examine it, as though it were an oroide which he wanted to trade for.

Now, if there is anything in this wide, beautiful world that will make me mad, it is to have a man who is ailing sit down and bore me with a list of his diseases and a detailed description of his anatomical derangements. And the men of free America, it seems to me, would rather talk about their perishing livers than their never-dying souls, and it always makes me mad for a man to come at me and burden me with complaints about the torpidity of his liver as though I were his physician. I am proud to confess to the blindest, densest ignorance concerning my own inner life. I don't know whether my liver is round or shaped like a gun-case, and I don't know where it is, and I don't care a continental, although I always had the impression that it was just under the shoulder-blades. So I said to the man with very great enthusiasm:

"Oh, do tell me all about your liver! I should like to know all about it. I am so interested in such things."

The man looked a little surprised at my sudden enthusiasm, but he said there wasn't much to tell about it. It was as torpid, he said, as a snake in December.

"Oh, charming, charming!" I exclaimed. "And is it tame? Do you let it run around loose or do you have to keep it chained up?"

The stranger started, and looked as though he would like to sit a little further away. He said he didn't just exactly understand me.

"And how is your spleen?" I asked, eagerly, "and your ventricles? And do tell me about your thoracic duct, and how do you get along with your tonsils? And have you raised any new bones since I saw you last; and when did you hear from your diaphragm? Do tell me all about all your viscera; make a clinic of yourself, and tell me the Christian names of all your bones and the appurtenances thereunto appertaining. Tell me——"

But he got up and slowly backed out of the car, and the conductor shortly afterward told me that the man with a liver told him that the man who escaped from the asylum at Jacksonville last week was in the rear coach.

Perils of Divorce-Seekers.

A tale of incompatibility and infernal machinery comes from Holyoke Dam, in the noble old commonwealth of Massachusetts. A man who had brought suit for divorce received, by express, a cigar-box neatly wrapped in brown paper. The end of a wire caught his eye, and and he suspected foul play, so he placed the box on the bank of the canal fired stones at it. The bottom fell out and the box was found to contain cans filled with gunpowder, shot and lead slugs, and surmounted by percussion caps arranged so as to fit hammers that were sprung by wires attached to the cover.

Heavy Damages.

An accident occurred at Arlesey, on the Great Northern railway of England, in December, 1876. One of the passengers injured was Mr. Warschawski, a professor of legerdemain, popularly known as Bosco, being a relative and former pupil of the conjurer of that name. The muscles of his hand were so hurt that he can never again practice his art, and in a suit against the railway company he has just recovered $7,500 damages.

San Francisco Prices in 1850.

The following is an extract from the diary of an old Californian: "Nov. 7, 1850.—Dined with Mr. H——. The town has very much improved; all is business and bustle; hotel crowded with strangers, wild, west-countrymen-looking fellows, some strong and athletic, others sickly and emaciated from disease contracted at the mines. Gold is seen everywhere, in tubs and other vessels. Enormous prices are asked at the stores; a pair of blankets $75, a serape $100, etc. I attended an auction of the sale of a cargo belonging to Mr. C., of Valparaiso; fifty-three barrels of pork sold for $63 per barrel; common blankets, worth $1 in the United States, $18 apiece; common woolen socks, $14 per dozen; 800 barrels of flour, $24 per barrel; brandy in casks, $8 per gallon, $24 a dozen in bottles; hams, 25 cents per pound, etc., etc.

The people bid with the greatest enthusiasm. In a side-room champagne, wine, etc., were opened almost ad libitum. The salesman, Mr. S——, a shrewd and smart fellow, a wag besides, knew how to manage his wild buyers. For the sales in two days he received $8,000 commission. Those goods, bought at such exorbitant prices, are immediately sent to the mines (in launches hired sometimes for $5,000 for ten days, sailors receiving $10 and $15 per day), where a barrel of flour sells at $400, a barrel of pork $500, $2.50 per pound. A man standing by me said he sold a common horse-blanket for $100; another that he sold hams at $4.50 per pound. All this seems very incredible, but it is most undoubtedly true, gold being in such profusion that its value is not regarded where a person feels a want of any article of absolute necessity. The holders do not hesitate to take every advantage of their customers, particularly if they happen to be Indians. A very respectable gentleman said he saw with his own eyes twenty-five pounds of sugar weighed out for twenty-five pounds of gold, to an Indian. The common way for an Indian to buy a dollar in silver is to pile it up with gold-dust. The Yankee dealers, too, take all kinds of advantages of them, by false weights, etc. An ounce will be made to weigh two; two ounces four ounces. A disbanded volunteer, who shipped aboard the Lexington, told me that one day, being very hungry at the mines, he paid $13.50 for one meal. Mr. W. told me he himself made an Indian pay him $3 for a small mess of food standing in a sauce-pan, at which he was enviously looking."

The Milling Business.

Our milling industry, the American Miller maintains, ranks next to that of iron. The number of mills is over 25,000, affording employment for more than 60,000 men, whose annual wages are about $20,000,000, and turning out yearly 50,000,000 barrels of flour, of which 4,000,000 barrels are exported to foreign countries. Pennsylvania has the most mills, nearly 3,000; New York stands next with about 2,000, and other States follow, with from 700 to less than 100. Minnesota's mills are largest, and employ the greatest average number of men, namely, five in each.

A Debatable Question.

While much has been written concerning the use of "put up" medicines, the question is still an open one, and demands of the people a careful consideration. The salient points may be briefly stated, and answered as follows: 1st—Are the sick capable of determining their real condition, the nature of their malady, and selecting the proper remedy or means of cure? 2d—Can a physician, no matter how skillful, prepare a universal remedy, adapted to the peculiar ailments of a large class of people, residing in different latitudes, and subject to various climatic influences? In answer to the first proposition, we would say, diseases are named and known by certain "signs" or symptoms, and, as a mother does not need a physician to tell her that her child has the whooping-cough, or indicate a remedy, so people when afflicted with many of the symptoms concomitant to "impure blood," "torpid liver," and "bad digestion," require no other knowledge of their condition, or the remedy indicated, than they already possess. Second proposition—Many physicians argue that diseases are sectionally peculiar, and that their treatment must therefore vary, and yet quinine, morphine, podophyllin, and hundreds of other remedies are prescribed in all countries to overcome certain conditions. Is it not, therefore, self-evident that a physician whose large experience has made him familiar with the many phases incident to all impurities of the blood, general and nervous debility, liver complaint, dyspepsia, consumption and catarrh, can prepare a series of remedies exactly adapted to meet the conditions manifest, wherever, and by whatever means, it may have been engendered? The family medicines prepared by R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., fulfill the above requirements. Many physicians prescribe them in their practice. His Golden Medical Discovery has no equal as a blood-purifyer and general tonic, while his Favorite Prescription cures those weaknesses peculiar to women, after physicians have failed. His Pleasant Purgative Pellets, which are sugar-coated and little larger than mustard seeds, are a safe and certain cure for "torpid" liver and constipation. If you wish to save money by avoiding doctors and keep or regain your health, buy The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, an illustrated work of over 900 pages. It contains instruction concerning anatomy, physiology, hygiene, and the treatment of disease. Over one hundred thousand copies already sold. Price (postpaid), $1.50. Address the author, R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Result of Obstructed Digestion.

Among the hurtful consequences of obstructed digestion, is the impoverishment of the blood, and since a deteriorative condition of the vital fluid not only produces dangerous organic weakness, but, according to the best medical authorities, sometimes causes asphyxia, it is apparent that to improve the quality of the blood by promoting digestion and assimilation, is a wise precaution. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is precisely the remedy for this purpose, since it stimulates the gastric juices, conquers those bilious and evacuative irregularities which interfere with the digestive processes, promotes assimilation of the food by the blood, and purifies as well as enriches it. The signs of improvement in health in consequence of using the Bitters are speedily apparent in an accession of vigor, a gain in bodily substance, and a regular and active performance of every physical function.

Cottage Gingerbread.

Take one cup of butter and lard melted together, and one cup New Orleans molasses; stir into this one cup each of sugar and cold water, two large teaspoonfuls ginger, two eggs beaten, and four cups of flour, having in it three large teaspoonfuls of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. Bake in moderately hot oven.

Look Out for Them.

Certain unprincipled parties have been for years flooding the country with immense packages of horse and cattle powders which are utterly worthless. Don't be deceived by them. Sheridan's Powders are the only kind now known in this country which are strictly pure. They are very powerful.

MOTHERS! Mothers!! Mothers!!! Don't fail to procure Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for all diseases incident to the period of teething in children. It relieves the child from pain, cures wind colic, regulates the bowels, and, by giving relief and health to the child, gives rest to the mother. It is an old and well-tried remedy.

Glad Tidings to Rheumatic Sufferers.

The great internal remedy of Dr. Herndon, the Gypsey's Gift, but lately introduced in Chicago, is all that is claimed for it, a true specific for rheumatism, acting through the blood, and prompt and certain in its curative power. One bottle sufficient. Try it—and prove it.

DR. GRAVES' HEART REGULATOR has sold largely and been universally recommended by druggists as a cure for Heart Disease, and has given satisfaction, as can be seen by reference to a letter received from F. W. Kinsman, druggist, Augusta, Maine.

"Having sold at retail more than a gross of your HEART REGULATOR, I take pleasure in saying that it has given great satisfaction in every case I have heard from. Almost every day I receive testimonials similar to the one inclosed. F. W. KINSMAN."

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

IF we had a voice like thunder, we would use it to advise all people everywhere to get at once a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, or at least to find out about it. As a preventive of diphtheria, pneumonia, congestion and all dangerous throat and lung diseases its value is priceless.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction.
J. H. SMART, of Allen County.

—The election in New Hampshire has been sadly cut down from 4000 last year to 1300 this year, and yet a few Republicans rejoice over that. While we do not believe the Republican party is totally dead, we feel that it is tottering about as bad as the Democracy did when it was pronounced a corpse by our enemies.

—The Ways and Means Committee of Congress have a proposition before them to relieve the tax on incomes. During and after the war it was the most fair and rational manner of raising a revenue we had, and we hope it will become a law. The man who makes more than two thousand dollars a year is amply able to pay a per cent. of his income, above that figure. It gives the poor man a chance, and is not oppressive to those better off. By all means let us have it restored.

—We hope, in the coming spring election, that good, competent men will be selected as road supervisors. This is really one of the most important offices to be filled at this election. This thing of paying no attention to our road ways, is getting monotonous, and we want to see a change. Dumping the contents of the side ditch of a road with a scraper is not making roads, by considerable. There are men who know better how to improve our highways with the same labor, and we hope they will be elected, and their good sense and energy brought to the relief of the traveling public.

Junction Items.

—Meetings every night at the school house.

—J. J. Martin is building an addition to his house.

—A sudden death at the Junction—Link's pet crow.

—The post office at this place is under way. May it soon come.

—F. W., J. & S. pay car passed through Friday, making the boys all happy.

—David McMabb visited Muncie Wednesday on business. Is she well, David.

—Starr, of the Albion New Era, gave us a friendly call one day last week. Come again.

—We understand that J. Whittington is going to lay in a stock of groceries here for the Junction trade.

—Plumpy started for Bremen Saturday on business. The young fellows all leave on business, you know.

—Baker has the boss hen. She lays two eggs daily, and think by a little improvement she can be made to lay three Try it Chris.

—J. S. Gale started for Jackson Saturday with the intention of visiting many friends at that place. We hope he will succeed.

—Parties wishing to purchase tickets for points in the west, would do well to consult the B. & O. agent before buying elsewhere.

—Frank received a handsome cake of maple sugar from friends in Mt. Vernon Ohio, Saturday night. We are all sweet now. Come girls.

—The B. & O. stock yard has been removed from the Elevators to the Junction, making it much more convenient for shippers of live stock.

—Mr. F. Hulsenbeck has completed a fine board walk in front of his house and lot at the Junction. We wish others would follow the example.

—Sam., the tonsorial artist, laid in a large stock of goods Monday morning, and said he was compelled to on account of business. We are glad to hear of one man being rushed.

—Mr. Thompson, braseman on the Eel River local, came near loosing his life last Wednesday morning. In making a flying switch he pulled the pin and succeeded in getting on top of the car, when the engine gave the train a sudden jerk throwing Tompson between the cars. How he managed to escape is a mystery to himself and others. He was badly bruised.

PERKINS.

Jackson Center.

MR. EDITOR—Have been reading your valuable paper, and noticing the many items from other points, thought this vicinity should be represented, so I send the following:

—The roads are impassible.

—Curt is tickled—its a girl.

—New fences are the order of the day

[We hope Almy will write again, and give us all the accidents, incidents, &c.]

—Clark's mill is quite an addition to the Center. He is kept busy, as what little snow we had was utilized in drawing in logs, by the farmers.

ALMY.

—Time is money, but health is happiness. If you have a bad cold or cough use Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. It will cure you. 25 cents a bottle, at all drug stores.

Spencerville Items.

—The Rev. Bishop Chaney of Spencerville, will deliver another of his inimitable sermons at St. Joe chapel, in a few days.

—Smith, the barber and photographer, having removed to Avilla, leaves an opening for a good steady barber at this place.

—The Rev. Wm. Smith, a celebrated street preacher, held forth for the edification of some of our young folks, a few evenings since.

—Billy, the cabinet man, says he would be a good fisher if the little minnows were not quite so plentiful.

—Chris Wamsly says that the mud is hub deep in the solid road.

—If there is any hereafter, if there is any place in that hereafter that burns, if there is any individual in that place that will burn, it is the man that will cheat a poor idiot out of his possessions, and make him and his family a charge upon the community in which he lives. We would not be moved to the least sympathy towards such an individual, if Satan would seize him bodily and carry him to the lowest depths of perdition.

—Thomas Johnson of this place, mysteriously disappeared on Sunday evening, the 10th. It seems he left his brother-in law's late on that evening, for Levi Shutts, with whom he had engaged to go to Michigan. Late in the night his horses was found about two miles south of town, and a boat, the property of Somers' boys, living near where the horses was found missing. It is supposed Tommy took the boat and from it jumped into the St. Joe, as nothing has been heard of him since. There has been some difficulty existing in his family for some time, which is the supposed cause.

PATSEY.

St. Joe Items.

—A number of buildings will be erected in this place this summer. Several having been already contracted for.

—How is the roads? is the question asked a thousand times a day: getting no better fast, is the invariable answer.

—Alonzo King, an old resident of this county, living one mile east of this place, died Tuesday of last week of lung fever.

—Those boys who broke down and pulled up Jake's shade trees, had better keep shady as Jake has them spotted.

—A correspondent in the Waterloo Press, from Newville, wants to know where the joke is, in Newville parties having to pay 35 cents for meals. Not much joke in the 35c, but in the amount of grub took up by such party.

—O. H. Widney, between fishing spells, has found time to plow all his corn ground this spring, 21 acres. O. H. is always up and dusting, some one, we feel sure, will get case hardened by him soon. Go in to win is the Widney motto.

—Our town was visited a few days ago by a Mr. [illegible] who is, judging from his talk, quite a greenbacker, anything in the shape of paper with One Dollar stamped thereon is good enough for him, without any promise to pay. Clute wants the greenback, but wants some one to make it good by their promise to pay.

—George Kimes, an old and respectable citizen of Spencerville, died Sunday the 17th. He died very suddenly, having been seen on the street Tuesday. He was 67 years of age. Mrs. Kimes is laying dangerously ill at the present writing.

St. John and New Era.

—Every two weeks, Dan.

—Wes wants to fight somebody.

—The farmers are beginning to plow.

—Republican convention next Saturday.

—Post has got a new girl, who cooks good hash.

—Madam Larimore went to Fort Wayne last Tuesday.

—Elmer says Dan went to Wayne and bought his wedding breeches.

—Rev. Tedrow is holding meeting nightly at the school house, and our young men and girls are happy. Beaning and getting beaned.

—Several of our young men are getting up a base ball club. They act pompus, feel good, feel big and talk big, with the right foot forward.

—We learn that Orvill Broughton of this place, will run for the nomination of township trustee, and we think our Republican friends can not do better than to confer upon him the nomination.

—At the Democratic convention last Saturday for township officers, all the former ones were renominated, including Sam Knott, Perry Fitch, John Quince and the nominees for Constable are Houser and Ira West. We do think the Democracy of this township could not have chosen a better set of men.

—The Republicans met in caucus in this township last Saturday and nominated the following ticket:

Trustee, Wm. Walsworth; Justices of the Peace, Henry C. Shull, Simon Z. Dickinson and C. R. Reed. Assessor, James N. McBride; Constables, A. F. Smith, Alex. McEnterfer, L. J. Hopkins and Joseph Stafford.

LaOtto Items.

—Democratic Caucus at Swan Center next Saturday.

—Service at Lee Chapel next Sunday, by the Rev. Worth.

—Some of our worthy citizens "took in" Beecher's lecture last Tuesday.

—LaOtto has got a watch doctor direct from the village where P. T. Barnum found Jenny Lind.

—Henry Holbrook has rented Young's Hall, for the purpose of opening up a sale room for agricultural implements

—There is some talk of a Grist mill being located here. That's right. Bring her along, LaOtto is just the place for mills.

—The "King Beat" of Chicago is going to ventilate himself in this place, the 21, 22, and 23 of this month, on anti Free Masonry.

—The dance at Young's Hall was a success in the way of general exhibition "hustling in" the staff of life, in a liquid state, seemed to be the order of the night, "and many were they which entered there in."

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the Steuben Circuit Court in a cause wherein Samuel Haverstock is plaintiff, and Wm Richmond and Mariah Richmond are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of twelve thousand, nine hundred and twenty-three dollars and forty-four cents [$12,923.44] with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on

SATURDAY, 30th day of MARCH 1878

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House, in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate to-wit:

The north-west quarter of section thirty-three [33], and the north-east quarter of section thirty two [32] except twenty-five [25] acres off the west side of said quarter section, and the south-east fractional quarter of section twenty-nine [29], all in the township number thirty-four [34] north of range fifteen [15]. Also the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four [24], in township thirty-three [33], north of range fourteen (14), east.

I will first expose to sale the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four (24), township thirty-three (33), north of range fourteen [14], east, and in case it does not sell for enough to pay what is now due with interest, costs and accrued costs, then I will expose to sale the east half of the north-west quarter of section thirty-three (33), in township thirty four [34], north of range fifteen [15], east, and in case these two pieces fail to sell for enough to pay what is now due, with interest and all costs, then I will expose to sale the west half of the north-west quarter of said section thirty three [33], and in case these three pieces fail to sell for enough to pay the amount now due, with interest and all costs, I will then expose to sale the balance of the above described lands together

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interests and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs in the same order.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

—One of our farmers came to town yesterday with a two-wheeled vehicle, to which four good horses were attached, the load consisting of one man and a spotted dog. Who says the roads are impassible.

—The post-office called "Ider," said to be in this county is a myth. There is no such place in all the hoary register of the Postmaster General. It is Ider DeKalb county, Alabama, and not Indiana.

—Some thieves live in or about Auburn sure. The other night the smoke houses of G. C. Ralston and R. Elson were broken into, and a number of hams, shoulders, &c., were taken. Other small thefts have come under our knowledge.

—"As amber attracts a straw, so does beauty attract admiration." Quite true; but the strains of a brass band will pull a sick woman out of bed, and take the census of all the children on a street before the base drummer strikes his first rest.

—A very large stock of new dry goods are being received by Schaub, Beugnot & Co., many very handsome styles are being opened out, intended for the spring trade, and you should call early. They are offering great bargains in their dress goods and prints.

For Sale.

The undersigned having had very bad health for some time past, desires to sell out his Hardware and Tinware establishment, which he offers at reasonable rates. Possession given immediately. Inquire of JULES BURETT.

—Harry Weamer has started a peanut stand on the corner of Maine and Seventh streets. He has just put on a bay window—on the building, we mean—which adds much to its appearance. He also intends to issue a small paper called the "Advertiser." It will be a two page daily, and when opened out resemble a last year's Almanac.

—Watt's Liver pills cure dyspepsia.

—The following is the township ticket, nominated by the greenbackers at Waterloo: Chas. Scattergood, Trustee; James McInally, George Wolf, Justices of the Peace; Sanford Bassett, Assessor; Constables, Sol. Beidler and Wm. Jackman.

—Abbott, who was brought back from State Prison the other day, where he was sent last term on a charge of forgery, had a new trial last week, and was discharged, because he wrote, if he wrote at all, so villainously bad that nobody could read it.

—The youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. John Knoder died last Tuesday morning, aged eight months.

Our darling babe has gone to rest,
We know her soul is free,
But she's gone to that beautiful place
Where an angel she will be.

—A band of regulators has been formed in District No. 8, this township, for protection against thieves and robbers, as follows: President, G. D. Denison; Vice President, Dan'l Stroh; Secretary, G. O. Denison; Treasurer, Adam Stroh; Captain, R. N. Crooks; Lieutenants, S. Baughman, S. P. Imhoff and G. W. Frick.

—The time is about at hand when you will want lighter clothing than that now worn, and as Schaab, Beugnot & Co. have received a large invoice of all the late styles, we would advise our friends to call and make an inspection. Their prices are low and their goods first class. Gents furnishing goods in large supply always on hand.

—We were glad to meet Messrs. Marshall & McNagny, both able young lawyers, of Columbia City, last Monday. They have formed a partnership, and start out with energy, ability and strict integrity to command for them the respect and patronage they so eminently deserve.

—List of unclaimed letters in Auburn P. O. March 16th, 1878:

Mrs. Caroline Bungey, Mary Carr, Alta E. Carr, Minnie Cruse, John Dunshee, Josie Diehl, Minnie Kroos, George Moore, Charley Myers, James Smith, Hattie Smith, Barbara Sliffe.

JOSEPH RAINIER, P. M.

—S. E. Morss, Esq., managing editor of the Sentinel, at Fort Wayne, gave us a call last Thursday. Sam is a graceful, pleasing writer, a genial, warm-hearted gentleman, and, in many instances, a public benefactor. The nerve he displayed in engaging Beecher at an enormous expense, and only making a $1000 in the opperation, is evidence to our mind, that he should rank next to Bismarck.

—The following handsome compliment came to the COURIER from the Republican of this place last week, and falls like the gentle dews of summer upon our editoral brow:

The Press of Auburn in time has passed into oblivion and it had no attributes worthy of preservation. It was not until T. C. Mays began the publication of the COURIER that home interests found an advocate and a permanent exponent. The circulation of this paper is extensive, and its patronage is not confined to the Democracy whose standard it upholds. Itself and its versatile publisher are town institutions which have a strong hold in popular regard.

—Two of our young men started west to grow up, you know, and after arriving at Churubusco, "without money and without food, and nowhere to rest their weary heads," they asked for one slice of bread, claiming that they had earned it by the "sweat of their brow." It was given them, and after devouring it, John said to Kin: "Let's go," and moved westward. "Hold on, pard. I'm going east." "What, not going back home, are you?" "Don't forget it," says Kin. "I'm going back to my father's house, live, get married and die there." They arrived home that night.

—We beg leave to express our unqualified admiration at the improved appearance of our neighbor, the Butler "Record." It has been enlarged to a six columns folio, and looks bright, fresh, crisp and newsy. Mr. Kist, the publisher, by persistency and industry, has developed the fact that Butler can support a local press. and we never knew of a good reason why a paper should be removed from that to this point. The editorial department under our accomplished friend, Mr. Baxter, (we will never forgive ourself if any one concludes we mean C. Kelly,) is made attractive and interesting, and with the encouragement extended to our friends, we see no good reason for anything but prosperity in the future, which we most heartily wish them.

—Marrilla King, wife of Alonzo King died Friday night of same disease, being sick only three days. Mrs. King, like her husband has been in the neighborhood all her life, her father having moved to the country about the year 1836, occupying at the first the farm where H. H. Hoisington now lives. The deceased leaves one child, Mrs. Marion Dermott, to mourn their loss. Mr. King had few, if any relatives living, but had hosts of friends. Mrs. King leaves two brothers, one in Nebraska, the other living at Lansing, Mich. The last one having been with her during her last sickness The sympathy of the neighbors are with the friends in their double affliction.

—Go to Littlefield & McIntyre for combs, brushes, and toilet articles.

Wit! Humor! Fun!

"RISE AND FALL OF THE MOUSTACHE."

R. J. BURDETTE, "The Burlington Hawkeye Man."

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 25th, at the Court House, Auburn.

READ WHAT THE PRESS SAYS.

[From the Muscatine (Iowa) Gazette.]

As a literary effort, it was one of the finest, richest, raciest lectures ever heard from the Muscatine stage. It bubbles with fun, sparkles with wit, bristles with sharp points, and is replete with tender sentiments and beautiful thoughts. And how wonderful the transition from "the sublime to the ridiculous!" While still in convulsion of laughter, the audience transported by a burst of eloquence or moved to tears by a touch of exquisite pathos.

From the Iowa City Republican.

The lecture of Mr. Burdette, last evening, on the "Rise and Fall of the Moustache," was one of the best received of the course offered this winter by the Lecture Association. Mr. Burdette, small in stature, delicate in mould, from the moment of his introduction prepossessed his audience by an unaffected manner, and held them convulsed with laughter as he heaped one droll description upon another for an hour and a half. He is no retailer of second-hand anecdotes, but draws his pictures direct from actual life, which is the secret of his popularity as a speaker and writer; and although humor was the predominant feature of his effort, it was not altogether devoid of pathos, showing his capability for a higher style of discourse.

Admission 50 cents, children under 15 years, 25 cents. Tickets for sale at Willis' book store. Doors open at 7 o'clock, lecture at 8. Secure reserved seats, no extra charge.

—Prof C. R. Reed's concert at Sedan will be repeated next Saturday evening, with an entire change of programme. Everybody come and have a good time.

—QUERY: "Why will men smoke common tobacco, when they can buy Marburg Bros. "Seal of North Carolina at the same price?

—Buy the Butler Nickel Steel Plow at J. Burett's hardware store. They are the best plow for general use ever offered in this city.

John Crooks had a finger taken off the other day while fooling with a tie on the railroad between here and Waterloo.

—A new brick smoke stack is being erected at the Eel River Elevator. Parties from Garrett have the contract.

—M. F. Long will offer his team, wagon and harness at the administrator's sale next Saturday, March 23.

—A social hop will be given at Ensley's Hall to-night, and none but invited guests will be admitted.

—Joseph Abright has been quite sick for several days, and at this writing is yet confined to the house.

—Best Rio coffee down to 20 cents, good at 18 cents per pound, at the Ft. Wayne Fruit House.

—Henry Wright is again in the city, assisting in the lumber yard of Wright & Co.

—Hi Parent went after Reub. Stevens at Warsaw, Tuesday. So says rumor.

—Johnny Robbins, of Garrett, was in town a couple of days last week,

Handsome shade trees have been planted around the Catholic church.

—Who will not buy Bull's Cough Syrup at Littlefield & McIntyre's.

—Rev. Mr. Ervin expects to leave for conference, on the 10th inst.

—The yards are being cleaned, which helps appearance somewhat.

—Littlefield & McIntyre have a fresh lot of drugs and medicines.

—B. F. Dawson, Esq., of Angola, gave us a call yesterday.

—The frame for Cool's new livery barn was raised Tuesday.

—Enos Weaver is lying very low, and his recovery is doubtful.

—Gregg and Grubb manufacture cigars at their residences.

—About fifty went to hear Tilton from this place.

—Frank Ryan, Esq., has not found his bird dog yet.

—S. U. Tarney has added a new counter to his room.

—Harry Rush is working for James Anderson.

—McQuiston will leave town in a few weeks.

—The Marshal sold a hog this week.

—Wheat $1.15, Corn 35c, Oats 25c.

—The roads are terrible.

"A LIVE TOWN."

"Sweet Auburn, Loveliest Village of the Plains."

A correspondent of the Fort Wayne Daily Sentinel, was spooking around our town last week, and below we give the result at which he arrived:

Auburn the capital of DeKalb county is not by any means a "deserted village," but, on the contrary, one of the liveliest towns in northern Indiana. The stranger is favorably impressed with the town at first glance, and the more he finds out about it, the better he likes it.

Auburn, like all other towns in "this neck of the woods," is now turning out some superior samples of mud. In this respect, however, she can't surpass Ft. Wayne, and she doesn't want to try.

For a town of 2,000 inhabitants, I find more fine buildings than could be expected. There is a very good court house, and one of the handsomest jails in the state of Indiana. The plans were drawn by the well known architect, T. J. Tolan of Fort Wayne. This structure would do credit to any city in the west. I did not investigate the interior of this edifice, although doubtless I could have found accommodations there.

Another elegant structure, just completed, is the public school building, a substantial and handsome edifice, which speaks well for the place.

There are a number of handsome brick blocks and beautiful residences with tasteful grounds. Notwithstanding the dull times the town has been constantly improving and considerable is to be done this summer.

Tom Mays, who is so well known all over the state, lives, moves and has his being in Auburn. He runs the COURIER, one of the best county papers in the state. It is issued from a fine brick building, the interior of which is constantly resounding with the strains of sweet music. Mays has an abundance of fine musical talent in his corps, and when the entire force unite to sing, "I've wandered through this wide, wide world," the effect is positively thrilling. He could make a first class concert company from his office and not half try.

Mr. Mays is immensely popular here and it is written down in the book of fate that he will be the next county clerk. He will receive the democratic nomination without opposition, and will doubtless be elected. The present clerk, Mr. Moss, is a clever gentleman, but is on the wrong side of the fence politically. The gallant democracy of DeKalb proposes to elect their entire ticket this year by a majority of 200 to 400.

Mays is extremely popular here and counts his friends in both parties by the hundred. He is a very influential politician, as was plainly seen by the excellent work he did for Mr. Fleming in the recent contest.

Auburn has other nobilities of whom I have not space to speak in the present letter.

The circuit court is now in session here and lawyers are present from all parts of the county, and some from adjacent counties. The DeKalb bar is known all over the state for its ability, and it contains among its members some of the best lawyers in Indiana.

Among the other evidences of public spirit in Auburn may be mentioned that afforded by a park or open square which has not yet been wholly completed. In summer evening it is devoted to concerts by the band—a pleasant feature of life here during dog days. Mays' suburban villa, of which so much has been said, fronts on the park.

PERSONAL.

Mr. McQuiston, formerly of Orff's store at Fort Wayne, is now running a store here, but is about to remove to Walkerton. He was so unfortunate as to be relieved of $500 worth of stock by burglars a few nights ago.

Prof. S. B. Morse, of Fort Wayne, has a large music class at this place.

Prominent in Auburn society is Mrs. Hazzard, wife of the cashier of the First National Bank. She is better known in Fort Wayne as Miss Mary Balcom, who was formerly such a social favorite in the Summit City.

RAMBLER.

—The largest audience ever assembled in Fort Wayne, was that of last Tuesday evening, to hear Beecher's lecture. The Rink was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the assemblage was a very intelligent one. Mr. Beecher appeared on time and succeeded admirably in disappointing his hearers. Perhaps expectation was pitched too high, for all were led to believe he was a great orator. His delivery was certainly poor for one who has been in the lecture field so long. It lacked eloquence, force, effect, and was delivered in a voice scarcely audible at times. For an old lecturer to address so large an assemblage in such a weak voice was simply abominable. While there were some strong points and a vein of humor and sarcasm throughout, we believe the effort will be regarded as an indifferent one in the lecture world.

—The organ business has been represented in this place for the last four years by M. F. Long, Esq., and we are sorry to hear that he is going out of the business. Poor health, we understand is the reason. Some good, live, active man can make this branch of business pay in this vicinity. Mike offers his team, wagon and harness for sale next Saturday.

—If you have a friend who is troubled with a cough or cold, tell to try Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. He will thank you for your advice. It only costs 25 cents a bottle, at all drug stores.

Garrett Items.

—The Garrett Herald has a correspondent who is an illiterate "cuss."

—Now is the time to plant shade trees, and we hope our citizens will take an interest in the same.

—Henry Levi, our butcher, bought a team of mules last week, had them two days, sold them and cleared $67. When shall those "three meet again."

—Our republican friends met in caucus last Saturday afternoon and nominated the following ticket: Trustee, O. C. Clark; Justice of the Peace, I. Ditmar; Assessor, L. Lockwood.

—John Robbins is improving remarkably well. He was able to spend a few days in Auburn, last week. Moses says that Robbins put the cartridge in himself so that relieves he and his pistol of all censure.

—The fences have been removed off of Randolph street at the south side of town, which greatly improves the appearance in that direction, and which is a good indication that Mr. Morse intends extending the streets. We are satisfied that he feels highly interested in the welfare of our town, from the interest he is taking, and we feel safe in saying that no better man could be placed in the position he occupies.

—Last Wednesday afternoon there appeared on our streets one of the grandest and most sublime scenes we have witnessed since we came to Garrett. Some kind of a miraculous object appeared on Randolph street, accompanied by three guardian angels. Every person ran to their doors to see the inestimable display. Even the little children ran home and called their mothers to come and see what they supposed to be another bear show, conducted by ladies, and wondered that they would venture on the street without having him muzzled. But lo, and behold, it was nothing more or less than our Grand Worthy Chief of Good Templars, dressed in a beautiful smoking robe and a grand regalia about his neck and shoulders. He made a beautiful appearance on the street, and he is a gentleman well qualified for the position. When he first came to this town Rev. Sawyer was conducting a protracted meeting, and he took right hold and helped him with his labors. Then the Christian church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and he went to work and with the assistance of his theological abilities, took one-half of the congregation and is now spiritually guarding them like a good loving shepherd. We are correctly informed that this Grand Worthy Chief, not long since, when at Auburn Junction, stepped into a saloon and took his glass of beer like a little man. We do not mention this through any disrespect whatever, but only to show how wisely nature has fitted some people to fill any position in which circumstances, ignorance or Divine Providence may place them. We think it would have been to the advantage of our Catholic friends if they could have secured his services at their festival on St. Patrick's day. With that beautiful robe and regalia and his head encircled with a shamrock wreath what a beautiful stature in commemoration of that venerable saint he would have made. It would not have been necessary to add any green foliage to give him an aspect of the Emerald Isle, as nature has endowed him with a sufficient amount of verdancy.

X.

—The lodge of Good Templars in this city organized two weeks since and is in a prosperous condition. Names are being handed in faster than they can be acted upon and initiated. They expect to number over one hundred within the next two weeks. It is determined that this meeting shall be a complete success. They meet in the Odd Fellows' Hall Monday evenings. The following are the officers for this term:

G. W. Gordon, W. C. T.; Josie Rush, W. V. T.; J. F. Kline, W. S.; Abbie Potter, W. F. S.; Mollie Kline, W. T., L. J. Hopkins, W. M.; Eliza Stahl, W. I. G.; Wm. Ensley, W. O. G.; Rev. E. E. Ervin, W. C.; Annie Robbins, W. A. S.; Emma Ervin, W. D. M.; Mrs. Dr. Casebeer, W. R. H. S.; Rebecca Hopkins, W. L. H. S.; D. Grover, P. W. C. T.; Enos Casebeer, D. G. W. C. T.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1878.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE long bridge at New Brunswick, N. J., on the line of the Pennsylvania railway, and spanning the Raritan river and Delaware and Raritan canal, has been burned by an incendiary. It will be rebuilt immediately.

PHILADELPHIA has had a panic among the provision dealers, and a number of failures are reported....R. W. Adams & Co., lumber dealers, New York, have failed. Liabilities, $1,542,044; assets, $80,860.

COL. DAVID CAMPBELL, a wealthy and hitherto respected citizen of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Secretary of the Iron City Insurance Company, has been arrested on a charge of embezzling $12,000 of the company's funds.

EASTERN underwriters are alarmed at the reduction of the Chicago fire brigade, and an advance of rates is threatened....There has been more hazing at Princeton College, and half a dozen students are under arrest for assault and incendiarism—some of them having attempted to set fire to one of the college buildings....A shocking tragedy is reported from Westchester county, N. Y. Theron Merritt, a well-to-do citizen, while laboring under a fit of insanity, murdered Mrs. Leggett, a near relative and neighbor, and committed suicide.

THE WEST.

A JOLIET dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says that "Rande, the wholesale murderer, has not been assigned to any occupation by the prison authorities, and it is said that he stubbornly refuses to work. He will probably be managed on the principle of 'No work, no eat,' and his backbone allowed to rasp his sternum until he is satisfied that a little healthy labor is better than a good deal of starvation."

THE Supreme Court of Nebraska has just announced a decision that dealing in grain options in Chicago is gambling, and all contracts made in Nebraska, founded thereon, are against public policy and void.

CHARLES L. WILSON, one of the founders of the Chicago Evening Journal, and for thirty years sole proprietor of that paper, died recently in San Antonio, Texas, whither he had gone for the benefit of his shattered health. Mr. Wilson was one of the oldest and most honored citizens of Chicago, having settled there in 1835. He was born at Fairfield, Ct., in 1818.... Chicago is to have another great dry-goods house. Arnold, Constable & Co., second largest retail dry-goods dealers in New York have leased the premises lately occupied by Field, Leiter & Co., on State street, and, as soon as the building is reconstructed, will open an extensive wholesale and retail store.

IT is reported from the far West that Sitting Bull and his followers are on the verge of starvation, and have notified Gen. Miles that they are anxious to surrender....Several persons were frozen to death in Wyoming Territory during the late terrible snow-storm.

THE statistics of the pork-packing and cutting trade in Chicago for the year ending Feb. 28, 1878, show a total, in round numbers, of 4,000,000 hogs packed and cut up—something over 1,000,000 in excess of any previous year.

THE SOUTH.

IN pursuance of a joint resolution which passed both houses of the Ohio Legislature, a national salute was fired at Columbus, on March 4, in honor of the final passage of the Silver bill....Two Missouri murderers were hung on Friday, March 1—John W. Daniels at Warrensburg, and Richard Green at Kansas City.

REPORTS from the Upper Missouri river country represent that three couriers from Gen. Miles have been killed by some of the runaway savages from Red Cloud agency, and there is something of a scare at Buford. It is also reported that Sitting Bull has visited a Yankton camp, near the boundary, for the purpose of trying to buy provisions for his people. He said there was no buffaloes across the line, and that the Sioux in Canada are starving.

EX-SENATOR BEN WADE died at his home in Jefferson, Ohio, March 2, at the advanced age of 78 years. Mr. Wade left an estate valued at $50,000, and made no will.

ON Sunday, the 11th of March, the city of Atlanta, Ga., was visited by a wind tornado of unprecedented violence, which did great damage to property. The storm struck suddenly, about 11 o'clock, when the churches were filled with worshipers. The Episcopal church, like the others, was filled. During the early part of the service the wind suddenly rose, and shook the whole building to its foundation. The officiating minister realized at once that a tornado had struck the building, and, knowing that it was merely a question of minutes to secure the safety of the people, cried out to them to throw themselves under the seats. This advice the congregation at once followed, and not a moment too soon. With a few fearful creaks and jars the whole building crumbled into a shapeless ruin, burying the congregation under the debris. Luckily the shelter afforded by the seats protected the great mass of the congregation, but eighteen were more or less seriously wounded by the falling timbers. The City Hall was unroofed by the storm, and many other buildings sustained serious injury.

A TELEGRAM from Charleston, S. C., says the programme of the Liberian Exodus Association is now completely arranged, and a vessel has been chartered for the carrying of emigrants. There are 30,000 shares of stock at $10 a share, and it is claimed that 25,000 colored people through the South have invested in the joint-stock association, and that over 150,000 are enrolled to go when the occasion offers.

A FEARFUL earthquake prevailed at Columbus, Ky., at 4 o'clock on the morning of March 12. The shocks were so violent as to rock houses, to roll bedsteads across floors, to turn over safes and presses, smashing them, and to ring locomotive bells. A portion of the Mississippi bank caved in, leaving a house on the ragged edge. All the people were suddenly awakened and badly frightened...Two very distinct shocks of earthquake were felt at Milford, N. H., on the same day.

IT is said the public lands in the vicinity of Pensacola, Fla., have been almost entirely stripped of growing trees by the rapacious timber thieves....A negro who grossly assaulted a child aged 5 years, causing its death, at Pensacola, Fla., was wrested from the officers and lynched by a mob. The Sheriff's posse resisted the lynchers, killing one and wounding five dangerously....A negro murderer by the name of Brown Coble was hanged at Winchester, Tenn., on Friday, March 15. He made a speech, at the close of which he said: "I feel now as Paul says: 'I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is near at hand. I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.'" ....Miss Mary Hampton, a prominent school-teacher in a Memphis public school, has been discovered as a forger, she having forged the names of prominent persons to notes on which she got from banks and private parties $3,500.

GENERAL.

THERE were thirty-six mercantile failures in Montreal, Canada, last month, aggregating $1,935,000 of liabilities, and showing nominally $969,000 of assets, which will not realize more than $500,000.

THE United States Consul at San Domingo has been arrested and thrown into a dungeon, and the war steamer Plymouth has been ordered thither for the protection of American citizens.

BY a recent ruling of the Postoffice Department, all weekly papers may now be sent by mail at 1 cent each, without regard to weight.

THE Pennsylvania Colonization Society has authorized the American Colonization Society to send, at its expense, fifty emigrants to Liberia. They will leave the 1st of May.

WASHINGTON.

THE Government's new silver certificates will soon be ready for issue, and are of the form of bank notes, engraved in the best manner, and printed on bank-note fiber paper....The Secretary of the Treasury has asked Congress for $75,000 to build new vaults for silver....A Washington telegram says: "There are evidences of a dead-lock between the two houses similar to that in the last Congress. The Senate Appropriation Committee has increased the appropriation for the Military Academy bill $53,216. This increase was made after Gen. Schofield, the Commandant of the Military Academy, had testified as to the needs of that institution....The fishery award at Halifax is under consideration at Washington. The opinion is now rapidly forming that it is in no proper sense an award, and should not be paid even if payment is demanded by Great Britain, of which there is now said to be doubt.

THE President has nominated John W. Hoyt, of Wisconsin, to be Governor of Wyoming Territory.

J. F. RUSSLING, who has had some connection with the Erie railroad, was before the House Committee on Agriculture last week, and gave some testimony as to the existence of a live-stock ring, which created a sensation. According to the testimony, a close corporation controls the transportation of the entire live-stock product of the West, and is able to levy an annual tax upon producers amounting to about $4,590,000.

THE investigation of the notorious McGarrahan claim by the Senate Committee on Public Lands has resulted in some ugly revelations of corruption in high places. The evidence is furnished by the New Idra Company, which contests the ownership of the quicksilver mine, and consists mainly of letters written by McGarrahan himself, extending over a period of about twenty years, to one Fred Frank, who was the Secretary of the "Panoche Grand Quicksilver Mining Company," a corporation organized by McGarrahan to sustain his claim. These letters and the books of the company are said to reveal the fact that McGarrahan successfully intrigued to control the appointment of United States Judges and District Attorneys in his own interest, and that he bribed Congressmen, Cabinet officers, and others high in authority with stock in said company, much in the manner in which Oakes Ames placed Credit-Mobilier stock "where it would do the most good."

A WASHINGTON dispatch says there is a very bitter feeling between Jere Black and Montgomery Blair, in consequence of the McGarrahan claim exposures. The latter asserts that he can prove that Black was paid $15,000 to assist McGarrahan when he was Attorney General and a member of Buchanan's Cabinet.

GEN. O. O. HOWARD, of the army, in a suit brought against him at Washington, the object of which was to hold him to personal account for the disastrous failure of the Freedman's Savings Bank, several years ago, has been acquitted by the court of all blame and responsibility.....The Secretary of the Interior has decided that pre-emption filing is not absolutely required in making homestead entry, and that it may be entirely dispensed with in making final proof thereon. This ruling will save settlers a great deal of inconvenience and expense.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, March 8.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Communications were read from American type-founders, protesting against certain petitions for the abolition of the tariff duty on type. ...The House debated the bill to appropriate $375,000 to pay Southern mail contractors for services rendered the Government prior to the war.

SATURDAY, March 9.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Foster, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill providing for the appropriation of $1,832,448 for deficiencies for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878....The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the whole....Mr. Kelley delivered a speech in reply to Mr. Garfield's speech of Wednesday, and Mr. Hubbell addressed the House in favor of the extension of our foreign commerce.

MONDAY, March 11.—SENATE.—Mr. Blaine called up the resolution calling upon the President for the correspondence relating to the Halifax fishery award, and in a short speech attacked the award, claiming that it was excessive and obtained by unfair means, and ought not to be paid. Mr. Hamlin appealed to the Senate not to prejudice the case, and said that, while the award might not be just, national honor demanded its payment. The resolution was adopted....Mr. Hamlin submitted a resolution appointing Gen. William T. Sherman a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institute, in place of George Bancroft, resigned. Agreed to. The bill providing for a commission on the alcoholic liquor traffic, with the amendment that one member be engaged in the traffic, was passed—yeas, 29; nays, 13.

HOUSE.—Mr. Ewing introduced a proposed amendment to the constitution providing for the issuing of paper money, and making it a legal tender for all purposes....The Diplomatic Appropriation bill was discussed and amended in committee of the whole. During the consideration Mr. Hewitt, of New York, made a set speech against the President's civil-service policy, severely criticising his foreign and Cabinet appointments....Mr. Clymer, from the Appropriation Committee, reported the Naval Appropriation bill. The total amount appropriated is $14,046,684. ....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Biddle, to reduce the present high tax on distilled spirits and tobacco; by Mr. Knapp, to issue certificates on the deposit of silver bullion or bars; by Mr. Crittenden, to issue certificates on the deposit of silver bullion; by Mr. Martin (by request), to abolish the Court of Claims; by Mr. Patterson, fixing the measure of damages in suits waged by the Government for timber cut on public lands; by Mr. White, to repeal the act providing for the payment of certain Southern mail contractors; by Mr. Fort, for the preparation of uniform silver bars of the value of $100 and $1,000 standard silver, and for the issue of certificates thereon, which shall be receivable for all public dues.... Mr. Harmer presented a petition of citizens and type-founders of the United States, protesting against any change in the duty on foreign type.... An evening session was held, for debate only, at which half a dozen set speeches were delivered.

TUESDAY, March 12.—SENATE.—The bill in aid of the polar expedition designed by James Gordon Bennett was passed unanimously, without debate....The House bill for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon General, was taken up, and Mr. Plumb spoke in opposition. The bill was then passed without amendment—yeas, 55; nays, 1—Mr. Plumb....The Senate, in executive session, confirmed a large number of appointments.

HOUSE.—Consideration was resumed of the Diplomatic Appropriation bill, and Mr. Hale, of Maine, took the floor and delivered a set speech. He charged that while the Democrats were preaching economy, and a reduction in the amount of the appropriations for the several branches of the Government, bills were introduced in the House by hundreds to pay all sorts of Southern claims, and to forward schemes to defraud the treasury. Mr. Dunnell spoke in defense of the consular system, which was not only self-sustaining but actually brought $300,000 a year into the treasury. He attributed partly to want of consular agencies the decrease of American commerce. He declared himself in favor of voting Government aid to American commerce. Congress sullenly and stupidly refused to give aid to commerce, because the cry of "subsidy" was rung in its ears. The great American question to-day was, how American producers could reach foreign consumers. Mr. Cox, of New York, followed Mr. Dunnell, and criticised Mr. Hewitt's speech of Tuesday. The drift of that speech, he said, could not be misinterpreted. It was intended to quiet a title. His colleague, however, could not quiet one particular title. He could not read one title clear to the White House or any other mansion. His colleague was in great part responsible for the Electoral Commission, and he naturally desired to have the result certified as good. The result, however, was bad. No washing would rinse out the damned spot. With its stain the multitudinous seas would continue to be incarnadined till the present Executive retired for a better man.

WEDNESDAY, March 13.—SENATE.—Mr. Matthews offered a motion to print Secretary Schurz' communication regarding the Montana timber-thieves in the Congressional Record. At the request of Mr. Blaine, Mr. Matthews read the communication. The former then took the floor and spoke at length of the action of the Secretary of the Interior. He said that the Secretary did not happen to be a native of this country. He could not help that, and he (Blaine) did not mention it as a reproach to him. He was born in the Kingdom of Prussia, which was 15,000 square miles less in extent than Montana, and the Secretary, perhaps with the instinct of his boyhood, applied the land laws of Prussia to Montana, and not the land laws that had been used in settling the United States....The Military Academy Appropriation bill was discussed, amended and passed....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Merrimon, to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon. By Mr. Kellogg, to aid the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company; also, to establish a mint at New Orleans. By Mr. Gordon, a bill to promote the deposits of savings and the refunding of the national debt. By Mr. Morgan, for the relief of book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church; it appropriates $150,000 to compensate the parties for damage done to their property at Nashville during the late war.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the entire day to the consideration of the Diplomatic Appropriation bill, the discussion at times taking an extremely partisan turn. Mr. Hewitt again attacked the President for making personal appointments, the latter being defended by Mr. Keightley. An increase in the salary of the four principal Ministers from $15,000, as provided in the bill, to $17,500, the present salary, was rejected—86 to 110. A number of other amendments were offered and voted down.

THURSDAY, March 14.—SENATE.—A number of pension bills were passed, among them one granting $50 a month to the widow of Rear Admiral Charles Wilkes....Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill providing for the payment of all customs duties and all other debts due to the United States in legal-tender notes at par, except in cases where it is otherwise expressly stipulated on the face of the obligation or contract.... Mr. Teller introduced a bill to regulate passenger fares and freight traffic on the Denver Pacific railway and Kansas Pacific railway....Consideration was then resumed of unfinished business, being the bill in regard to the Pacific railroad sinking fund, and Mr. Matthews spoke in favor of the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads....Mr. Gordon, by request, introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Bismarck to the Black Hills. The bill was referred.... The Military Academy bill was taken up, and Mr. Sargent moved to amend so as to provide that the President should henceforth only be empowered to have in the academy ten cadets, appointed by himself at large, instead of forty, which he now has by appointing ten each year. Mr. Blaine moved to so amend that amendment as to provide that these ten cadets shall be appointed from among the descendants of Union soldiers, and that no others should be eligible. This was lost—30 to 13. The question was then on Mr. Sargent's amendment, against the passage of which Mr. Matthews objected, pleading that as President Hayes has already made ten appointments its passage would take from him the power of appointing any more unless there should be a vacancy in these ten. The Senate did not favor the President, and passed the Sargent amendment by a very large majority, and then passed the bill as amended.

HOUSE.—The House, after an exciting and close contest, passed the bill extending the bonded period for fine whiskies by a vote of 122 yeas to 105 nays. The purpose of the bill is to give domestic manufacturers of distilled spirits the same privilege that is given to importers of foreign liquors....A bill reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, limiting the number of special attorneys appointed to assist District Attorneys to one, and limiting the fee to $2,000, was passed....The House passed the bill extending the time for the payment of the tax on distilled spirits in bond to three years from the time of bonding.

Queer Superstition.

The military superstition that it is dangerous to change the color of a horse during a campaign has been illustrated by Gen. Skobeleff. He does not like a gray horse, but he happened to ride one in the first battle, and soon came to believe that he could not be killed on a horse of that color. A correspondent of a Sedalia (Mo.) paper, who served under Shelby during the American civil war, states that that officer had a similar superstition. His color was sorrel, and he firmly believed that he would never be killed while mounted on a horse of that hue. He was wounded three times, but never while riding a sorrel horse. He had twenty-four horses killed under him in the various engagements in which he was not wounded, and in every instance the horse that went down under him was a sorrel. Once a ball struck the brim of his large felt hat, and scratched his forehead, and he fell heavily from the saddle; but he was on his feet in an instant, shouting to his men: "I cannot be killed to-day, for I am on a sorrel horse."

WHEN Andrew Jackson received Count Bertrand at the Hermitage, the Frenchman ran up to the American, and, throwing his arms around him, exclaimed: "A second Napoleon!" "No," replied Jackson, "not a second Napoleon. Napoleon stood alone the man of his times, and it will be 500 years before the earth produces his equal."

THE LONG-BOND BILL.

Full Text of the Measure as It Passed the Senate.

The bill passed by the Senate of the United States, providing for the issue of bonds of the denominations of $25, $50, and $100, redeemable in coin after fifty years, and drawing 4 per cent. interest in coin, is printed in full below. This, or some measure similar in its provisions will become a law, unless the Presidential veto should interfere:

Be it enacted, etc., That in lieu of that amount of 4 per cent. bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by act of July 14, 1870, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to issue a sum not exceeding one hundred million dollars coupon bonds of the United States of the denominations of $25, $50, and $100 and of equal sums of each said denominations, redeemable in coin fifty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest payable semi-annually at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, and said bonds shall be exempt from taxation in like manner as those in place of which they are to be issued.

SEC. 2. That said coupon bonds shall be made payable to the order of the person who shall pay the money therefor, and the name of such person, or his or her assignee, or of any subsequent assignee, and his or her residence shall be registered as the owner of such bond in like manner as if the same was a registered bond, and such coupon bonds shall be transferrable only by assignment duly acknowledged before and certified under the seal of the Clerk of a State Court of Record, or Federal court, or United States Commissioner, which assignment shall also be executed in the presence of two subscribing witnesses; and such assignment may also be made leaving the name of the assignee blank, and when so made in blank and executed as hereinbefore provided, said coupon bond shall be transferable by delivery in like manner as if payable to bearer.

SEC. 3. That the coupons attached to said bonds shall be payable either in United States legal-tender notes or in coin, at the option of the United States, and the same shall be paid at any of the sub-treasuries or money depositories of the United States, or at any national bank, and it is hereby made the duty of each of said national banks to pay said coupons upon presentation without charges, and remit the same to the treasury for redemption, but said national banks shall only be required to do so upon the production of the proper bond to which the coupon presented shall have been attached.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary shall keep said bonds for sale at the different sub-treasuries, national banks, and money depositories of the United States, and shall dispose of the same at par and accrued interest for coin, or for United States legal-tender notes at their nominal value, and such legal-tender notes shall be reissued, and their proceeds and the coin received for such bonds shall be applied to the redemption of outstanding bonds of the United States which are redeemable and bear the highest rate interest of such bonds.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of sections 3,704 and 3,705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the issue of another bond in room of any registered bond lost or destroyed, are hereby made applicable to the bonds to be issued under this statute, but only in case of loss or destruction thereof before the execution of the assignment in blank thereon. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

End of the Cuban War.

All the circumstances seem to indicate that the Cuban war, which has now lasted about ten years, has been brought to a close by a triumph of Spanish authority. But it is evidently a triumph gained rather by concession than by the assertion of superior force. There is little doubt that the Cuban patriots could have maintained a formidable insurrection for many years longer had Spain fought them under the barbarous and inhuman tactics pursued during several years by Valmaseda, encouraged and sustained by the home Government. Then the policy was massacre, not war, and Spain found its fighting material under the name of "volunteers" in the penitentiaries, and galleys, and chain-gangs; the beautiful island of Cuba was laid desolate, and men and boys were slaughtered by the tens of thousands by these bloodthirsty wretches with commanders scarcely less brutal than themselves. Had this kind of warfare been maintained up to the present time, we believe that not only would the insurrection not have been crushed, but that some portion of the civilized world would have interposed on the ground of humanity and the confessed inability of Spain to govern Cuba as one of her provinces.

Whether or not Cuba shall long remain in a state of quiet will depend entirely upon the good faith of the home Government in following out the spirit of conciliation and fair treatment promised by the terms of peace. Cuba in the past has always been at the mercy of the Captain General, who ruled with as despotic a sway as if he were an Emperor in the Middle Ages, and the Captains General have usually been chosen by the home Government from men who would apply the screws and extort the utmost revenue from the residents of the island by fair means or foul. This is the underlying reason of the constant succession of revolts, insurrections and rebellions which have torn and rent the lovely island ever since the population was large enough to offer resistance to the policy of oppression. Nor is there any reason to expect a permanent cessation of outbreaks now unless the Spanish Government shall abandon the effort to squeeze out of Cuba, by taxations and impositions, the entire yield of its rich resources.

Nationalities and Ages of the Popes.

The journal of the French Statistical Society publishes some curious statistics concerning the Popes which may not be without interest at the present time. Pius IX. was the 252d Pope. Of these 15 were French, 13 Greeks, 8 Syrians, 6 Germans, 5 Spaniards, 2 Africans, 2 Savoisiens, 2 Dalmatians; England, Portugal, Holland, Switzerland, and Candia furnishing one each; Italy provided the rest. Since 1523 all the Popes have been selected from Italian Cardinals. Seventy Bishops of Rome, belonging, with very few exceptions, to the epoch preceding the establishment of the temporal power, have been proclaimed saints. The ten last centuries have seen nine Popes judged worthy by the Popes themselves of being sanctified. Of the 252 Pontiffs, not including St. Peter, eight died within a month of their elevation to the Popedom, 48 within a year, 22 were seated between one and two years, 54 from two to five years, 57 from 5 to 10 years, 51 from 10 to 15 years, 18 from 15 to 20 years, and 9 more than 20 years. Pius IX., in the years of his Pontificate, surpassed in 1874 all the Roman Pontiffs except the Spanish anti-Pope, Benedict XIII., of Luna, who, elected at Avignon in 1394, died at Pensicola, near Valencia, in 1424. In respect of age he has been surpassed by a very great number of his predecessors. There died at the age of over 82 years Alexander XIII. (1689-91), and Pius VI. (1775-99); at 83 years, Paul IV. (1555-59), Gregory XIII. (1575-85), Innocent X. (1644-55), Benedict XIV. (1740-58), Pius VII. (1800-23); between 84 and 86 years, Paul III. (1534-49), Boniface VIII. (1294-1303), Clement X. (1670-76), Innocent XII. (1691-1700); between 90 and 92 years, John XII., Pope of Avignon (1316-34), Clement XIII. (1730-40), at the age of 100 years.

Whittier.

The tradition that the poet is a master, leader, in human society has been somewhat lost in modern and highly-civilized communities, where he has been often told, as Jean Paul said to music, "Away! thou speakest to me of that which never was nor shall be." But his power is impregnable and his influence sure. The man whose song reaches and touches the heart of youth inevitably affects it. If, as is sometimes said, the poet is the child of his time, so also is he its teacher, and, in a certain sense, its leader. The influence of Byron upon his generation is an interesting study; that of Wordsworth and of Tennyson might also be traced. Our own poets, until the choir now living arose, were in great part echoes. But we should be surprised could we know the direct and positive influence that some of these have had upon the character and career of those who are more evidently public leaders. We are not now speaking of general but of special influence. The fact that Whittier, Longfellow and Lowell took part, as poets, in the anti-slavery protest was a distinct and efficient element of the movement, and Lowell's "Biglow Papers" were a powerful ally of good political influence. Those sharp and canny strokes of satiric humor were quite as effective as any speeches.

But the most prolonged and noted influence of this kind, the leadership of the poet in affairs, is undoubtedly that of Whittier in the anti-slavery crusade. It was very quiet and unobserved, but it was very radical. The heart that resisted argument and statistic was melted in the fervor of his appeal. It was absolutely impersonal and unselfish, and his voice was that of the pure conscience. The simplicity and directness of his Quaker training gave also a singular charm to his verse, and his personal isolation from politics and current affairs deepened its moral power. Those days happily are gone. The poet has lived to see the dawning of the golden age that he foresaw, and he has not sought to prolong bitterness of feeling as the condition of his own opportunity for distinction. It is, indeed, within the last fifteen years that his fame has been most truly national, and it is pleasant and significant to see that on his 70th birthday the tributes of honor and regard are not limited by sectional lines.—Harpers' Magazine.

Where Religion Failed in the Hour of Need.

At night old Gumbo was accustomed to retire to his lonely cabin to light his tallow candle and pore over a dog-eared, dilapidated Bible, and, as he read, he would at brief intervals pause and devoutly exclaim with tearful, upraised eyes: "Oh! cum de good angel of the Lor' an' take poor Gumbo home to rest." It happened of a dark night, when by the light of his tallow-dip he was intently studying his Bible, there came three solemn, measured raps on the cabin door. Gumbo heard and grew pale with fear, and immediately, with a spasmodic jerk, blew out the light, and demanded to know: "Who am dat are knockin' at dis are door?" when a dismal, sepulchral voice answered: "The good angel of the Lord has come to take poor Gumbo up to rest." When tremblingly, with superstitious fear, believing that the good angel of the Lord was really standing at the door, he answers: "I kno's dat niggah Gumbo, but dat ar niggah don't lib heah! Why, dat ar Gumbo ar jes dun gone ded dese fo' yeas! Yes, he am! he jes dun gone ded dese four yeas."

Stabbed His Mistress.

An old lady named Curtis and her son, residing on a farm in Stetson, had in their employ for some time a young man named William Kimball. Wednesday evening this young man was in the barn, feeding the cattle, when the old lady, with an overcoat over her head, went past the barn door. He noticed her and called out to her, "Who are you?" She answered, "It is I. Don't you know me, Willie?" He answered, "You are a tramp, and I'll give you enough of it," and plunged his fork into her side—one tine penetrating her lung. Her son heard the outcry and rushed to her assistance and rescued her from the mistaken man. A physician was called, and, after a careful examination, he pronounced her injuries fatal. It is now understood that the members of this family have read and talked so much about the depredations of tramps—and taken such precautions to protect their property from these roving nuisances—that this young Kimball, upon this subject, became somewhat affected with monomania, and in this peculiar state of mind committed this unfortunate act.—*Belfast (Me.) A DEPLORABLE state of affairs exists in one of the counties of Minnesota. In the past two years 18,300 acres of growing wheat have been ruined by grasshoppers, and now the farmers, who have 20,000 acres ready for seeding, say that unless the grain is furnished them by the State they cannot plant more than one-half of the land prepared.

CHINESE are starving—70,000,000 of them the cable says. How many is that, do you know? Why, it is so many that if you were to count at the rate of ten a minute, night and day, without eating or sleeping, it would take you fourteen years to count them.

THERE are seventy-four penny savings banks in Liverpool, located in schools, churches, factories, etc., which receive small amounts from depositors up to $10, when accounts are opened in larger banks. Last year these banks reported 296,800 accounts.

Fording the Missouri.

One of the most remarkable escapades of modern times is that of Henry Johnston, of Clay county, who made a swim over the Missouri river from Kansas City to Harlem. The Missouri river, opposite this city, is about a half mile in width, and is quite rapid, inasmuch as it whirls rapidly against the rocky bluffs at this point, after having rolled resistlessly on from the mountains 2,800 miles above. It is one of the worst curves in the river, and one of the last places which could be selected to ferry the river on horseback. It was about midnight when the stranger rode down to the river near the bridge. He was full of whisky and quite loud in his exclamations of disappointment when he was informed that the ferry-boat was not running. He rode from the bridge to a point on the river just above the first pier, and plunged into the current of the Missouri river opposite Broadway. It was not dark, and the moon was visible, and the shouts of the reckless horseman, as he urged on his horse, attracted the police and the night watchman. The current was so rapid that the horse and rider made but little progress across the river until after the crib of the swinging span had been passed. There was nothing to be seen except the head of the horse and the head and shoulders of the reckless rider these could be seen on the surface of the current as it floated by. The horse and rider disappeared from this side long before any notice was received that either had reached the Clay county shore. But "blood will tell," and the mettle of Johnston's horse saved its drunken master's life.

About 1 o'clock Harlem was aroused by cries for help on the river bank, nearly opposite the school-house. A man and horse were found mired in the mud on the river bank, and help was wanted. The river bank at that point is a slough of mud just now, and the tired horse and its sobered rider were helpless and waiting for assistance. Horses and ropes were brought, and, with a united effort of the citizens of Harlem, the reckless horseman and his brave animal were taken from the river.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

Social "Deceptions."

I heard an amusing criticism upon Washington society the other day, and not without its sober lessons. A sable Chloe, entering the room of her employer a few days ago, delivered herself emphatically thus: "Well, ma'am, yestiddy was surely a deception day. I was out on K street, and the whole place was jammed up with carriages and people. Most everybody out there deceived. I believe that Mr. Evarts must have plenty of money. He paid a man $5 just to stand there and open the carriage doors. He is going to give another deception to-morrow night, and have 1,500 people at it. Well! well! what I wonder at is, what time do they 'low themselves to serve the Lord?"—Cleveland Plain-Dealer Washington Letter.

A Prompt Mule.

A good story is told of a deacon in Tennessee, who was in the habit of riding a bucking mule—that is a mule that can make a camel's back of its straight one, and, by a spasmodic movement of its four legs and hump, discharge its rider like a cannon ball. The other day they came to the edge of the worst mud hole in the State, and the mule gave unmistakable indications of bucking. The good deacon knew that he was about to be thrown, and his mind skurried about for a prayer. His table grace came easiest: "Lord, for what we are about to receive make us humbly thankful," he exclaimed, and the mule had bucked and he was in.

POOR young thing! She fainted away at the washtub, and her nose went kerslop into the soapsuds. Some said it was overwork; others, however, whispered that her beau had peeped over the back fence and called out: "Hello, there, Bridget! Is Miss Alice home?"

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

It is generally considered that at the full moon in August is the best time to cut timber, with the least probability of sprouting.

It is said of Mr. Gillett, of Illinois, probably the most prosperous farmer in the United States, that he is always found at home, a practice he has followed for forty years.

"Nothing but a farmer." And yet nearly all those holding high and honorable positions in this country are the sons and daughters of farmers. And who wants to be "anything but farmers."—Des Moines Register.

Brood mares, cows and heifers in calf require from the demands on their system feed of extra quantity and nutritive value. While they should not be kept fat, their condition ought to be such as to stand the drafts upon their vitality and endurance.

Books and papers form as much a part of a farmer's working tools as do the plow and shovel and hoe. The farmer who attempts to use the latter without the assistance of the former does an "up-hill business," which nearly always ends in failure and poverty.—Prairie Farmer.

The Commissioner of Agriculture has reported favorably upon samples of guano from caves in Texas inhabited by bats. He reports the material as worth from $15 to $80 per ton, and comparing favorably with fish guano for fertilizing purposes. There are several caves containing such deposits in Texas, and the estimated amount of guano is very great.

The hens—and especially the pullets—are beginning to sing in their cheerful, contented manner on the sunny side of the barn, or in the comfortable coops. This means more eggs; and, unless you expect to get something from nothing, you know what the biddies require. Only don't forget the shell-making material, fresh water, clean nests and warm breakfast.

The garden seeds are ready. Recollect that sweet wife, who is wondering and studying each day of the year, "What shall I have for dinner for my dear ones?" and, when her tired brain fails to solve the problem, finally exclaims, "I wish John would fix the garden. It would be so nice and convenient to have young vegetables and fresh berries."—Iowa State Register.

"What is worth doing, do well." Put this into your memorandum-book where you can see it often. Did you ever hear of a slovenly farmer getting rich? No, not one of you. Then do your work well, as it pays the best in the end. If you are making fences, make them to stay as built for years. A good farmer may be known by his fences alone.—Rural New Yorker.

Obtain good help, if possible, as half of your success in farming depends on the kind of hired help you have; and don't employ too many hands, as a man and a boy will often do as much as two men, especially if the latter are left to work by themselves, as they frequently spend half of their time in talking; but a man is not apt to talk much with a boy, and the consequence is that he attends to his work.

Feed your land, if you expect it to feed you. Make all the manure that you can, as this is the bank that pays your drafts and notes. The best farm that exists may be ruined in a few years by a continued cropping without supplying manure: and put under the plow only what land you can fertilize liberally. Adopt a rotation of crops, and keep your pasture and meadow lands in good condition, as the profits on your cows depend on the quality of their pastures, and the quality and quantity of the hay that you cut; and keep good stock, as a cow that gives twenty quarts of milk a day can be kept almost as cheaply as one that gives only five quarts.—T. B. Miner, in Moore's Rural.

The easiest manner of preparing bones for use is to burn them with wood. The phosphate of lime is all in the ashes, but the nitrogen is lost, as the animal matter is burned away. But an equivalent of ammonia could be purchased in the shape of dried blood, meat, or fish guano, for less money than it would cost to reduce the bones to a fine powder in their raw condition. One hundred pounds of dry bones contain forty-five pounds of gelatine, in which there are about five pounds of ammonia. This could be replaced by twenty pounds of sulphate of ammonia, at a cost of 5½ cents per pound, or $1.10. As the sulphate is at once available, while the ammonia of bones is only slowly produced, half or a fourth of the former would supply an equivalent of the bones.—American Agriculturist.

About the House.

To Make Boots Waterproof.—Yellow beeswax, Burgundy pitch and turpentine, of each two ounces; boiled linseed oil one pint. Apply to the boot with the hands before the fire till well saturated.

King's Pudding.—Beat six eggs; add one quart of sweet milk, one pound of white sugar, one dozen of soda crackers, four large apples cut in very thin slices, and a little salt. Spice to taste. Bake about two hours.

Gingerbread.—Two cupfuls molasses (coffee cups), one cupful sour milk, one and a half dessert-spoonfuls ginger, three cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in water, piece of butter the size of an egg melted. Bake half an hour.

Handkerchiefs with Colored Borders.—To wash such articles, put in a pail of water one teaspoonful of sugar of lead or one teaspoonful of spirits of turpentine; let them soak in this solution one-quarter of an hour before washing.

Poverty Cake.—Two cups of flour, one cup of sugar, one cup of cream, a small piece of butter half as large as an egg, one table-spoonful of buttermilk, one teaspoonful of soda, nutmeg and one egg.

Brown Betty for Breakfast.—One cupful Indian meal, two cupfuls rye-meal, one egg, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful soda, one large table-spoonful molasses; mix with cold milk about as thick as pound cake; drop in hot lard and fry.

Seasoning Sausages.—I notice various recipes for sausage-making, many of which are excellent. All I have to suggest is that, in place of sage, lavender be used (pulverized leaves), and no one will ever regret it. Cloves and spice are also excellent condiments, where the flavor is liked.—Letter to Country Gentleman.

Stewed Oysters.—Take each oyster out separately from liquid; strain juice to get out any pieces of shells there may be in it; add one pint of milk to every quart of oysters; boil milk and juice, adding salt and pepper to taste; when the above is boiling put in oysters, and, when just beginning to boil, take off at once and serve. The last direction insures the oysters being tender, plump, and cooked also.

Pigeon Pie.—Take six young pigeons, have them neatly drawn, trussed and singed, stuff them with the chopped livers mixed with parsley, salt, pepper and a small piece of butter. Cover the bottom of the dish with rather small pieces of beef. On the beef put a thin layer of chopped parsley and mushrooms. Season with pepper and salt. Over this place the pigeons. Between each two put the yolk of a hard-boiled egg. Add some brown sauce or gravy. Cover with puff paste, and bake the pie for an hour and a half.—Forest and Stream.

COFFINS FOR FIRE-WOOD.

How a Family Caught the Leprosy from Dead Men's Fuel.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

The Chinamen who have the pious and melancholy contract for exhuming, polishing and packing the bones of the ill-fated heathen who strike out for the shining shore from a foreign strand have recently been engaged in preparing a fresh consignment for shipment back to China from the temporary Golgotha where the defunct repose, near the Presidio, awaiting convenient transportation of their bones. The business appears to require the co-operation of a white man in the work of delivering lumber at the bone-yard for the manufacture of tidy and comfortable coffins in the place of those that had become impregnated with the odors of a foreign and unsanctified soil. This sub-contract was accepted by Terrance Mahoney, a resident of the Western Addition, who could conscientiously accept such service in the view of aiding the quiet exodus of the obnoxious population. As a stroke of economy which suggested itself to Mr. Mahoney while fulfilling the labor of humanity at $2 a load, he improved the opportunity of pitching a few of the old coffins into the wagon for domestic consumption in the form of fuel. Since the employment of this sort of Mongolian mortuary debris in the concoction of the toothsome stew some six or seven of Mr. Mahoney's offspring have been temporarily debarred the privilege of the public school in consequence of the development of a malady of a cutaneous eruptive type. The singular coincidence that presents itself in the case has prompted Mr. Mahoney to an open confession of his imprudence, and excited in his mind the horrible suspicion that it has transformed his household into a colony of lepers. The matter is creating considerable excitement in the neighborhood, but the physician at present treating the family is still retaining the remedies peculiar to the Scotch materia medica. There is a wholesome lesson, nevertheless, in Mr. Mahoney's affliction, and it is well to suggest to all who view the Chinese question from a conservative standpoint to refrain from utilizing Mongolian coffins as fuel while the exodus of the obnoxious element is proceeding.

S and Z.

The letter s often takes the sound of z, a type which printers have tried to abolish as far as possible, or drive its use to a minimum. To the close of the last century books show to us rouze, comprize, surprize and many other words with z, not s. This suggests a general law—that whenever two modes of writing exist we ought to select that which comes nearest to the received pronunciation. This will give us jail (not gaol), chymist (not chemist), artizan, partizan, reprizals, civilize, with z, as numerous other verbs in ize. But there will remain many other traps to the foreigner. How is he to know that this has the s sharp, while in his, is the s is sounded like z? That in loose, dose, chase, grease (as substantive), goose, geese, it is sharp; but in lose, choose, cheese, peas, chaise and the verb grease the s is blunt? That grease, use, house, when nouns, also, diffuse when an adjective, have all sharp s, while the s is sounded like z when they are verbs, is more than accident, and deserves attention. Some mark or other ought to distinguish the blunt s, if we shrink from uniformly changing it to z. At present (we suppose) the public could not bear hiz, iz, roze, shoez, wize, wizdom; but they would not resent a dot (or, better, three dots) under the s whenever it has the z sound, for the dots would be omissible at pleasure. Even if three dots be all faint, yet collectively they are always visible, and are never mistaken for a blot. Indeed, this triple dot, added to the double dot, as in dieresis a, e, o, will help us through many difficulties. But another admissible device would be to print a long ſ (without horizontal line) whenever s is sounded as z.—Fraser's Magazine.

C. O. D.

A boy has been sent by express over the crooked roads of Pennsylvania. The way-bill ran: "One boy from T. H. Walton, Doylestown, to W. W. De-Witt, White Haven; weight, fifty pounds." As it was necessary to make several changes, his friends concluded that it would be safer to send him by express; and, accordingly, a tag was fastened to a button-hole, eight messengers checked and receipted for him, and finally he was delivered at the destination in excellent order.

The idea that the wake scene in "The Shaughraun" is sacrilegious has taken a firm hold in Western cities, and on several occasions the performers have been pelted with eggs. The same feeling was riotously manifested in New Orleans, where the unpopular part of the play was greeted with hisses, groans and a shower of eggs.

MONEY OF THE UNITED STATES.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The public questions of this generation are to be question of finance. The duty of the law-makers of this epoch is to establish an American system of finance, based upon sound principles, built for permanency, for equity, and for the people. No question so vitally concerns the welfare of all the homes of the land as the questions relating to money, to the currency of the country, the machinery for all of its business. No question is settled till it is settled right, and this greatest of political questions, which is now, fortunately, in the process of agitation, "will not down" till a system is permanently established which is adapted to our people, to our condition, to our century. Our Federal Government has always assumed control of the currency. It has rested and should rest nowhere else. How shall that control be exercised? The constitution wisely left the Congress almost unfettered in the matter of making money. There are no constitutional limits placed upon the action of Congress in ordering what shall be money, save by implication. The States were forbidden to "make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts," in the words of the constitution. The States, by the constitution, were forbidden to "coin money," or "emit bills of credit." This clause in the tenth section of the first article of the constitution suggested the possibility of the true American system of finance. With all of the recognitions of the rights of the States that are fixed in the constitution the doctrine is plainly indicated, if not named in words, in that constitution that the Federal Government has, and alone has, the control of the issue of money. The wise decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is that the Congress is not limited to gold and silver in its making of money. It can make copper or nickel or greenbacks money. There are those who say that there is no express authority given to Congress in the constitution to make gold and silver even a legal tender, or to make a legal-tender law of any kind. If this is granted, the constitutional right to make other things than gold or silver legal tender rests on the same grounds with the right to make even these metals lawful money. But the highest court has settled this question. The power to make money inheres in the Federal Government, and the Congress has power to determine what shall be money.

Our Government has always assumed control of our currency, and always will. This is why that control should be right. There have been really three distinct phases of our currency system. The first Congress under the constitution established the Bank of the United States. Certainly that was a recognition of the fact that the control of the currency was placed in the General Government. The Government could give it away. The United States Government was itself in the banking business. This bank was rechartered during Madison's administration, and was the basis of our currency system till the noble veto of Andrew Jackson. Then came the era of State banks. They were the basis of our system of finance. For twenty-eight years prior to 1860, under that regime, we had a "specie basis." It was called a "sound financial system." It was "hard money." It was the epoch of State banks and solid basis. But the statistics show that for twenty-six years prior to 1860 this basis was 18 cents of coin to 100 cents of promise outstanding. The average of all the banks of the country presented this showing, when little corporations scattered over the land were allowed to make money, and when men looked at a "bank-note detector" before making change when selling a pound of sugar. Ohio notes were looked on with suspicion in Indiana or Kentucky, and "wild-cat" banks were always possible.

The next era in finance in the United States came with the war. The State banks were taxed out of existence, and the Government made one-half of the money of the land (made millions more of bonds legal tender) and indorsed the remainder. It made greenbacks and authorized the issue of national-bank notes as a "war measure," and to coax the sale of the Government bonds. However vicious the national-banking system—and it is a financial heresy—it has helped to perform one work in our financial history that is valuable. Its adoption helped to place the control of our currency where it belongs—to the Federal Government. The war pointed out the path to the American system of finance. The direct necessity forced the system on us. It stood the test of war, and it has stood the test of peace far better than it endured the war. Even the National Bank act was an advance step in our financial story in that it carried all of the control of our currency that is not otherwise carried to the Government of the United States. The Congress can now handle it as it could not prior to 1860. The third epoch in our currency system—the present one—is that in which the Government makes half of the money and indorses the other half. The next currency epoch will be that in which the Government indorses no money, but makes it all.

The Financial Situation.

The prognostications as to the evil effect of the passage of the Silver bill have been signally falsified. The press of this city, for months, did all in its power to create a panic among the holders of United States Government bonds, and, unfortunately, this attempt had the assistance of the President himself. But it has utterly failed. Gold has gone down, contrary to prediction, and governments have gone up, contrary to prediction. If we had not been eye-witnesses of the folly and recklessness exhibited by the Eastern press in the recent struggle of a few brokers who make money by turning over Government securities, we could scarcely have believed that men making any pretence to clear-sightedness or patriotism would have endeavored to discredit their own Government in the way that we have been made so familiar with during the recent discussion of the silver question. Of course, the bankers and brokers in whose interest the fight was made are now laughing in their sleeves at the sorry plight of their newspaper allies. They were too familiar with financial affairs to have pinned their faith to the prognostications of the press that represented their interests though not their intelligence. It should be distinctly borne in mind that the bondholder—the man with his money permanently invested in Governments—has not endeavored to throw discredit upon his Government. He lives upon his interest, and as long as that is secure he is satisfied. But the insinuations that have been so galling have emanated from the small knot of speculators who live by handling the evidences of indebtedness—they have come from brokers who manipulate bonds and the small party of bankers who lend money and are not satisfied with getting back the principal and interest, but who want the principal largely increased by means of a surreptitious change of the standard of value.

The Silver bill has become a law, and, far from producing the evils predicted, it brings about benefits. The passage of the Silver bill has marked the end of the long era of coddling one small interest to the neglect of every other. Since the close of the war every step in financial legislation taken by the Government was in the interest of the holders, or, rather, the manipulators of one form of debt. The national debt was made a deity—an idol, with a head of gold. All the patriotic feelings engendered by the war were ingeniously appealed to on more than one occasion to aid in giving by law a bonus to the bondholders, when they already had made a good thing out of their investment. Every new device to increase the principal was hailed with delight by the organs of the money power here and in Europe. It is simply amazing that Congress and people should have alike neglected every great interest in order to coddle one small interest. Our shipping was allowed to rot and disappear from the seas, our commerce was uncared for, the interests of agriculture were permitted to be crippled by railroad discriminations, but neither Congress nor people moved; but any scheme for providing new offerings on the altar of our national fetich—the debt—was sure to be hailed with acclamation.

This is now past. The bondholder must take his place in the struggling crowd. His interest is only one of many. He is not to be clothed in purple and fine linen and all the rest of the world in rags. This is certainly a change for the better. Congress and people will now find time to think about some of the other interests that have been permitted to languish. As we have said again and again, free coinage and unlimited legal tender is necessary to give silver its true place in our metallic circulation. Free coinage is a thing to keep in view.

Resumption on the 1st of next January is impossible, and hence Congress ought to quietly repeal so much of the Resumption act as fixes a date, but at the same time the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be clothed with the necessary power to resume at such time as he deemed it expedient so to do.—New York Graphic.

FINANCIAL FACTS.

SILVER COINAGE.

Though it has been stated several times, it may not be out of place to repeat, says the Chicago Tribune, that the dollar of 412½ grains of silver was a legal tender from 1793 to 1874; and that the statement so often made that only $8,000,000 of legal-tender silver dollars were coined is not true in fact. The silver dollar was not only a legal tender itself, but all its fractional parts were legal tender for any amount whatever, and of this full legal-tender silver (excluding the subsidiary silver) there were coined to the amounts and of the denominations following:

Dollars	$8,045,838.00
Half-dollars	66,249,153.00
Quarter-dollars	3,909,040.50
Dimes	5,890,062.50
Half-dimes	1,822,798.90
Total	$84,007,392.90

A PUBLIC DEBT A PUBLIC CURSE.

The debts of the civilized nations amount to more than eight times the total of all the gold and silver used as money in Europe and America. National debts amount to $23,400,000,000; railroad debts, $5,000,000,000, and State and municipal debts, $4,250,000,000. The aggregate of this vast sum is $32,650,000,000. The principal is never to be paid. It is designed to constitute a yoke of perpetual bondage upon workingmen. It is to be the means of supporting an aristocracy for all time. It is the foundation upon which an oligarchy may stand within the halls of legislation, the temples of justice, the chambers of the Executive, and dictate as effectually as despots to those who obey the Almighty's first canon to man and earn their living by the sweat of their brow.—Exchange.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The total amount of gold in the country in 1859, says a contemporary, was $275,000,000. The total amount of paper circulation the same year was $198,306,000. This was composed exclusively of State-bank notes. The total amount of gold in 1870 was $121,090,000. Now it is about $110,000,000, while the amount available for resumption is less than $50,000,000! Is it not absurd to talk of resumption under these circumstances? We were better prepared to resume in 1870 than we are now. In 1859 we had a much larger amount of gold than currency, and yet specie payments were maintained with the utmost difficulty. Now the volume of the paper money is nearly seven times as great as all the gold in the country, and yet some talk of resuming specie payments! Would that the fool-killer were not sent away!

REPEAL THE RESUMPTION ACT.

Grateful as this measure of relief [the Silver bill] will be to the business interests of the country, it will fall of the full measure of success unless it is complemented by a repeal of the act fixing the date for the resumption of specie payments. That statute is one of the prime factors of our financial distress, and it is as wrongful, mischievous, and unjust as was the act of demonetizing silver. It is by the repeal of the Resumption act that we will relegate to the laws of trade the fixity or relativity of money values. Under these laws we believe silver will soon appreciate to the gold standard of the United States, which is sixteen to one. The absorption of currency in business will be the reliable measure for the volume of the circulating medium, and hence in the future this great money question will virtually settle itself and be kept out of Congress, except where interference by the National Legislature is warranted by the organic law of the nation.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

DISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The following shows the number of national banks in each State and Territory, as well as in the leading cities of the country, as reported last year. It will be seen at a glance that the great preponderance of them is in the East, and that will go far toward accounting for the great strength of the money power in that quarter:

WHAT WAS PAID FOR THE UNITED STATES BONDS.

People forget statistical facts very quickly, and what they retain of figures and quantities is apt to get mixed up with error. In regard to the sale of the bonds constituting the national debt, many people think they were mainly purchased with gold—at least all that portion which found a market in England. Others are in the habit of declaring that the bonds realized the Government but 37 cents in coin value to the dollar's worth of bond. It is true there were a few sold in 1864 as low as 37 per cent. of coin, and the whole year's sale of 1864 only realized 46½ per cent. gold value, but that was the worst year of all. A statistical table has been prepared during the debate on the Silver bill and bond question showing just how much the Government obtained each year from the sale of its 5-20 and 10-40 bonds. All the bonds were sold for greenbacks at their nominal value, regardless of their gold value. Secretary Chase maintained that it was better to disguise the actual discount on the bonds by receiving depreciated greenbacks at par than to sell them on a coin basis for their market price, and thus expose the frightful loss of credit caused by what was deemed by capitalists "a doubtful struggle," and yet every intelligent man knew from month to month what the depreciation actually was. The following is the table referred to:

6 per cts.	Amounts.	Sold for Gold.	Profits.
1862	$ 60,982,450	$ 44,030,649	$ 16,951,801
1863	160,987,550	101,890,654	59,096,894
1864	378,392,250	186,697,636	191,694,614
1865	279,746,150	208,214,090	71,532,060
1866	124,914,400	88,591,773	36,322,627
1867	421,469,550	302,215,503	119,254,047
1868	425,443,800	312,826,323	112,617,477
5 per cts.	195,136,550	122,957,410	72,183,140
	$2,069,975,700	$1,371,424,238	$678,551,460

The 5 per cents. in this table consist of the 10-40 bonds; nearly all the others were 5-20s. Several hundred millions of these bonds have been called in and paid off, and $700,000,000 of them have been converted into 5, 4½, and 4 per cents. The amount of loss on the sale of those bonds originally exceeds $678,000,000 of dollars.—Chicago Tribune.

Forrest and Greeley.

It was up the old steep wooden stairway on the Spruce street side that the great American tragedian, Edwin Forrest, marshaled his way one afternoon to "say a piece" to Horace Greeley. A certain critic had discovered that Forrest was not according to Shakspeare's ideal in a portion of one of his performances. Forrest wanted to know the man who dared to reveal such a thing in print. He supposed that Mr. Greeley could be commanded by his imperious tones to make a clean breast of the offender's name. Greeley stood face to face with the great tragedian, and kept moving toward the doorway, Forrest moving backward until he felt himself in danger of toppling down the steep stair, and emptying out into Spruce street. To be brief, Forrest was afraid of Greeley, and "made tracks" down that stair as speedily as if he had traveled the road as often as Greeley. All Greeley said in the conversation was, "My name is Greeley; what do you want?" Forrest said all the rest, and did not articulate very well, either. William H. Fry, who witnessed the performance, asked Mr. Greeley, in a cynical way, why he did not treat Mr. Forrest like a gentleman. Mr. Greeley replied, "Is that Forrest, the play-actor?" Fry said, "Yes, that is the great tragedian." After a few moments' pause, Greeley said, "Well, I reckon he didn't scare anything up here."—New York Letter.

Where the Man Was Stabbed.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said a Tuscarora lawyer, "what kind of swearing has been done in this case? Here we have a physician, a man who, from his high and noble calling, should be regarded as one who would scorn to stain his soul with perjury, or be guilty of giving utterance to an untruth. But what did he testify, gentlemen? I put the question to him plainly, as you all heard: 'Where was he stabbed?' And what was his reply? Unblushingly, his features as cool and placid as thought cut from marble, he replied that the man was stabbed about an inch and a half to the left of the medial line, and about an inch above the umbilicus, and yet we have proved by three unimpeachable witnesses that he was stabbed just below the Young America hoisting-works."—Elko (Nev.) Post.

Short-Sightedness.

The alarming rapidity with which short-sightedness is increasing among German students formed the subject of a recent debate in the Prussian Parliament. From extended observations made in the gymnasia, it appears that the number of the short-sighted increases from 23 per cent in the first year to 75 per cent. in the ninth or last year. The too frequent custom in Germany of forcing lads to study during the evenings with insufficient light, in ill-ventilated rooms, is undoubtedly a main cause of this widespread evil.

Next to Americans, the Germans procure the most patents.

ALL SORTS.

The Persian Minister in England sent the Shah a telephone.

A man of quiet taste goes behind the door and takes it.

A one-legged man was arrested in Pittsburgh for kicking a boy.

Thirteen African women accompanied Stanley's exploring party across the African continent.

A farmer drove 1,400 turkeys into Concordia, Neb., the other day, to be shipped to Chicago.

The works of the great German gun-maker and manufacturer, Krupp, are insured for $6,500,000.

Deacon Block has been expelled from the Presbyterian church in Atlanta, Ga., for permitting a dance in his parlor.

The number of persons of nearly all nationalities who have this year taken part in the pilgrimage to Mecca is 132,450.

Capt. Boyton is about to swim from Toledo to Lisbon, a distance of 70 miles; then he will try to cross the Straits of Gibraltar.

The prairie grouse is gradually following the progress of the railroads from the Nebraska prairies westward. California's effort to introduce and acclimate them has failed.

The following dispatch to the Emperor William from an insane man, and for which he paid $20.41, was sent from Albany: "I am the conqueror of the world—don't vote for the Pope."

The celebrated Eddystone lighthouse in the British channel, which has suffered the waves of a century, will probably soon disappear, owing to the undermining of the reef below it by the waters.

The native press of India regard the Russo-Turkish war as an indication of coming danger to Great Britain, and some of them even express the hope that British rule may shortly be overthrown.

William Pavitt, of St. Paul, on being arrested for branding his unruly son's tongue with a hot iron, said that things had come to a pretty pass when a parent could not discipline his own children.

Mr. Ferdinand Lesseps, of Suez canal celebrity, is now 70 years of age. His young wife, Mlle. Autard de Bragard, whom he married in 1869, recently presented him with a pair of twins.

A Dubuque man, some four years ago, buried $4,000 in a field, and soon after left the State. He returned, and only found his treasure after many months of search, the old landmarks having been removed.

Of the sixty-four members of the Sacred College, all but Cardinal Godefroy Brossais Saint Marc and Cardinal McCloskey were present when Cardinal Pecci was elected to the Pontifical throne as Leo XIII.

A pocket-book and $65, which a lady of New Britain, Ct., had lost over a year ago, were recently returned to her by a Moody and Sankey convert. Moody's sermon on "Restitution," at Hartford, did the business.

President Bartlett, of Dartmouth College, argues elaborately that endless punishment is the just result of sin. He says that it "harmonizes with the whole current of nature and the general scheme of God's word."

A Mr. Higgin is called the "Grand Khan of Kern," because he owns and pays taxes on 187,281 acres of land, covering over 292 square miles, in Kern county, Cal. Only five British peers own as large or larger tracts of land.

The number of British subjects in Constantinople is under 4,000, and of these more than half are not Englishmen, Irishmen or Scotchmen, but Greeks, Levantines, Italians and Turkish subjects, who have clothed themselves with British nationality.

A printer in Wellsville, N. Y., who has been deaf for many years, was placed in a highly-heated room to help him out of a case of chills. He was seized with sharp pains in the head, and fell down insensible. The whistle of a locomotive woke him next morning, and he since has been able to hear well, and speech, which had also left him, has returned.

Some of the English scientific men are disposed to do with the telephone as they did with the telegraph—claim it as an English invention. Mr. W. H. Preece, C. E., has just delivered a lecture before the Royal Institution, in which he finds that the telephone was "shadowed forth" by Hooke in 1667, and "practically applied" by Wheatstone in 1819.

The Army Medical Museum at Washington has among its curiosities the withered and parched hand and arm of a man who left it on the battle-field of Gettysburg. A cannon-ball carried it to the top of a high tree, where the wind and sun shriveled it to its present well-tanned condition.

The day of lawlessness is over in Deadwood, and the streets are as safe at any hour of the day or night as those of New York. It has school-houses, two churches, two daily papers and five weeklies, and well-organized fire and police departments, and efficient county and United States courts.

A sensation was created in a Newport colored church recently, by the minister's public reproof of a mischievous sister, who put peanut shells instead of money into the contribution box. His remarks were seconded by an aged woman, who called the reprobate a vain, conceited hussy, and advised her to wash the paint from her face. Then the young woman indignantly replied and bustled out of the church.

A well-known Oxford man, who was at the same time fellow of his college and head master of a prosperous grammar school, was once detected by an old pupil skating on a Sunday afternoon. "I think, doctor," was the not unnatural observation, "you once flogged me for boating on a Sunday." "Yes, my dear boy," was the reply, "and I did quite right. If a man really likes boating, one day to him is the same as another. Skating is entirely different. It may freeze hard on Saturday night, and then thaw again before daybreak on Monday morning."

A quantity of arsenic, amounting to about 7 cwt., has been accidentally sunk in the Rhine.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound is the very best compound ever prepared, advertised, or sold by any person, or under any name or under any name whatever, for the immediate relief and permanent cure of coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, asthama, and all diseases of a consumptive type. It will thoroubly eradicate these alarming symptoms in one half of the time required to do so by other medicine. It is purely vegetable, and contains not a particle of opium or other dangerous drug. It never fails. Every bottle guaranteed to perform exactly as represented.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumania, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and villiage on this continent. Samepie bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Singing in the Family.

Cultivate singing in the family. Begin when the child is not yet three years old. The songs and hymns your mother sang, bring them all back to your memory, and teach them to your little ones; mix them all together, to meet the similiar moods, as in after life they come over us so mysteriously sometimes. Many a time and oft in the very whirl of business, in the sunshine and gayety of the streets and amid the splendor of the drives in a park, some little thing wakes up the memories of early youth—the old mill, the cool spring, the shady tree by the little school house—and the next instant we almost see again the ruddy cheeks, the smiling faces and the merry eyes of schoolmates some gray-headed now, most "lie mouldering in the grave." And "the song your mother sang" spring unbidden to the lips, and sooths and sweetens all these memories.

At other times amid the crushing mishaps of business, a merry ditty of the olden time pops up its little head, breaks in upon the ugly train of thought throws the mind into another channel; light breaks in from behind the cloud in the sky, and new courage is given us. The honest man goes singing to his work, and when the day's labor is done, his tools laid aside, and he is on his way home where wife and child and tidy table, and cheeful fireside await him, he cannot but whistle or sing.

Jay Gould Snubbed by Senator McDonald.

It is Judge Thurman's intention, at an early day, to press the consideration of his bill forcing the Union Pacific Railroad to give the Government good security for its indebtedness. Under the ruling of the Supreme Court the interest is not due until the maturity of the bonds. When this time comes it is folly to suppose that the government will ever realize the enormous sum that will be due at that period, for the reason that the accumulated interest and amount of principal will aggregate a much larger sum than the entire road and all its properties are worth. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, after having had the use of its immense profits for years, would throw up the road to the Government rather than pay their indebtedness.

Jay Gould is understood to be close pressed in carrying the stock of this road, and he is in Washington watching very closely any legislation looking toward forcing the road to pay its dues to the Government. Any such result would undoubtedly depress the stock, and possibly prove his ruin. He has been a successful operator with the Legislature at Albany, and he has transferred his Albany tactics to Washington. His mode is to come directly to his men, and employ no third party or agents.

Senator McDonald, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, before which the legislation on the subject of the Union Pacific is pending, went to his room the other day, and he discovered a little man in black curled up in his most comfortable easy chair before the open grate. The little, keen, black-whiskered, darkly attired visitor arose with a nonchalant air when Senator McDonald entered, and said:

"You are Senator McDonald, of Indiana, I presume?"

"Yes," said McDonald.

'My name is Jay Gould of New York,' said the visitor.

"Ah!" was the reply.

"You are a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, are you not?"

"I am," said McDonald.

"I have very heavy interest pending before your committee," said Gould, with great emphasis upon the word "heavy." And then with a sinister grin he added: "I have come to see you about them," slowly and carefully emphasizing the word "see," as he looked McDonald straight in the face. Gould's manner put McDonald upon his guard at once. He arose and said in a frigidly cold tone of voice, "Mr. Gould, you cannot see or talk to me upon the subject of Union Pacific interests except in the Judiciary Committee room and before the Committee."

Gould laughed in reply, in a sort of contemptuous way as if he had no faith in McDonald's protestations, and began in a wheedling way, after the fashion of the old gentleman in black, to talk about his interests, how much they were and what great sums were involved, when McDonald put an end to the conversation by putting on his hat and coat as he said, "Mr. Gould, I am going out of this room. I shall not listen to you, and I think you had better go, too. This ended the conversation, as Gould saw that McDonald was in earnest.

SITUATION WANTED—By a competent druggist of fourteen years experience. Salary no object at beginning. Address this office.

How to Keep Boys at Home.

[Rev. W. H. H. Murray in the Golden Rule.]

Amuse your boys if you wish to keep them at home. Play whist with them. "What!" I hear some of you say, "why I am a member of Dr. So-and-so's church." Well, let him go to the dogs for once; let your church go to the dogs and save your boy from going. When I was a young man at college there was a deacon's son there at the same time, and he told me he learned to play 'old sledge on the hay mow when his father was reading commentaries. It is a fact and not a matter of laughter, and that same young man died a drunkard and a gambler. He lived in the Connecticut Valley, and I could give you his father's name if I was so disposed. "Bob" told me more than a dozen times if his father had only played some kind of a game with him—"if he had only been human with me, Deacon Murray," said he "I should have been a church member just as you are." I want you to understand I was a deacon then. I think "Bob" was right. So I say to you, play whist with your boys, play dominoes or checkers—in fact any pleasant, healthy game. Read poetry with them; for boys like poetry; if not read their stories. Get him to read to you; and here let me say that this is one of the best possible ways to keep your boys at home, and one of the most beneficial in its effects. Teach them to feel that you are dependent upon them for company. So I say to you make your home happy in a way that boys like, and not in the way that some churches like. Boys are worth more than church form, for boys are germs of angels, or else they are the seeds out of which devils spring. If I felt that my boy would eat peanuts in church, that he would go to sleep because he was not interested, I should spend one half of the day under the hedges or by some running spring. I should preach to that boy in a way that would make him forget his peanuts and sleeping in church. The running spring should remind him of that fountain of living water which flows from the throne of God. If there was a bit of sea, it should remind him of the sea of crystal before the throne of God. If there was an empty acorn, it should remind him of the temple of the temple of clay out of which the spirit has departed. All things should be a service to God. The fields and the skies should be the church, and that boy should be a follower of Christ in that way, because he is best adapted to that kind of service.

Every time the subject of an income tax is mentioned the Shylock organs set up a lively howl and demand that the rich who deal almost exclusively in government bonds shall be exempt from taxes to aid in support of the government. They are opposed to the equitable distribution of the burden of taxation. They desire to build up in this country a moneyed aristocracy more odious than that which exists in England, where incomes are taxed, and large revenues derived therefrom. The man who invests a million dollars in government bonds doesn't contribute one cent for the support of the government, municipal, state, or national, while the man who invests his cash in any branch of business to carry forward the progress of the country, is taxed heavily and compelled to pay. We are satisfied that a judiciously guarded income tax is absolutely right. We take no stock in the general hue and cry that such a tax will prove demoralizing and lead to perjury to an extent that will damn the country. We are quite willing to admit that here and there men will swear falsely to avoid paying something for the support of the government that protects them. If they do commit perjury, and it can be proved, let them go to the penitentiary like other felons, and that difficulty will soon be obviated. What is wanted now in this terrible ordeal through which the country is passing is help from all. And the country must have it.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The re-districting of the State for Congressional and Legislative purposes, and the election of a United States Senator by the Legislature, which will convene in January 1879, are matters of such paramount political importance that both parties will bend all their energies to gain controle of that body. Indiana is emphatically a Democratic State, but under the infamous apportionment of 1878, a relic of Mortonism, the Radicals have the decided advantage. The State has been so gerrymandered, that though the Democrats carry it by thousands, yet the Radicals may have a majority of Senators and Representatives. It is to wipe out this unjust discrimination against the majority that will require judicious action and hard work from the Democrats of the State. To retain power, the Radicals will fight with desparation. Their only hope is to hold to the present appointment, well knowing that if it is wiped out they are gone.—Col. City Post.

Township Elections.

The Auditor of Kosciusko county says:

1. No trustee or any other person who is a candidate to be voted for at the April election, will be eligible to sit on the board as inspector, judge or clerk. See Sec 3, page 29, acts of special session, 1877.

2. "The board of judges shall count the votes given for each person for each office, and certify the result, and the inspector shall file one of the poll books and tally sheets with ballots on a string, in the clerk's office of the county within ten days after such election."

3. The day after election inspectors shall make certificate of election, and deliver the same, on demand, to persons elected, which certificate shall entitle the holder to qualify and enter upon the discharge of his duties at the expiration of ten days from the day of such election. See Sec. of act approved March 3, 1877, regular session, page 58.

4. Where there is more than one voting precinct in a township, the inspectors of the several precincts shall meet on the day following the election, at the offices of the township trustee, at or as near the hour of ten o'clock a. m. as is practicable, and compare the poll books and certificates held by them, and having aggregated the vote of the township, declare and certify the result, and give a certificate accordingly. See Sec. 2 of act approved March 3, 1877, regular session, page 58.

5. "Any political party having candidates or a candidate to be voted for at an election, may be represented by two qualified voters of such precinct, in the room where the votes are counted, who may witness the counting of the vote, and remonstrate against any fraud or irregularity that may occur: Provided, that such persons shall conduct themselves in an orderly manner, and shall not unnecessarily interrupt the board in the discharge of their official duties. Said persons may be selected by the central committee of the county or township in which such precinct is located, or by the candidates to be voted for, or a majority of them, or by the voters of the respective parties."

See Sec. 7 of the act approved March 14, 1877, special session, page 41.

6. Each inspector and judge of elections shall attend at the place of holding elections in his township or precinct at or before eight o'clock in the morning of the day of elections; and should such inspector not appear at that hour, then the qualified electors of that township or precinct, who may be present, shall appoint an inspector of the election, and such inspector shall proceed to elect two jddges, and such judges two clerks. Act approved June 7, 1852.

Circuit Court—Length of Term.

We hear bitter complaints on the part of many of our citizens, and have noticed several unfavorable comments by our neighbors of the press upon the amount of litigation in this county, and they almost invaribly close with a comparison of the number of cases on the DeKalb Court Docket with that of Steuben or some other favored county. This comparison is an unfair one and always appears to the disadvantge of DeKalb By the census of 1870 there were 17,167 people in DeKalb county, and 12,854 in Steuben, while the length of term for each county is the same. The three weeks of court in Steuben is barely sufficient to dispose of the business there, and as we have a few more cases than they, on account of the greater number of people, whatever is left over the three week's work is a balance to accumulate upon the docket with every term until we have from 300 to 500 cases upon our docket at the beginning of every term. If it takes Steuben three weeks to do the business of 12,000 people, and DeKalb, with 17,000 people, has as much litigation as Steuben in proportion to her inhabitants then the business of 5,000 of her inhabitants must be left undone at the end of one term, and 10,000 at the end of two, and so on, until our docket assumes monstrous proportions, when we, in fact, are equally as agreeable as the favored sons of Steuben. In Noble county, where they have 20,000 people, they have four weeks of court at each term, which is sufficient to clear the docket, and they have no residue to accumulate upon their hands. Give us a four week's term, and we can soon have as small a docket as our neighboring counties with an equal number of people.—Butler Record.

THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1878.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

Joseph Lapaige, alias Joseph Parish, was executed at Concord, N. H., last week, for the murder of Josie A. Langmaid, aged 17, at Pembroke, on the 4th of October, 1875. Lapaige confessed to the murder of Miss Langmaid, and also of Miss Ball, a school-teacher, at St. Albans, Vt., in 1874.

A thief entered the Lechmere National Bank, at Cambridge, Mass., the other day, and, while a pal engaged the attention of the President, abstracted $47,000 in money and bonds from the safe. The rascals got away with the plunder.

Josephus Sooy, the defaulting Treasurer of New Jersey, who has spent nearly three years in the State prison, has been pardoned out. His term would have expired May next.

Owing to the recent panic among savings-bank depositors, the Massachusetts Legislature has enacted a law to prevent depositors from drawing their money. It is entitled "an act for the better protection of depositors in savings banks," and an idea of its provisions may be obtained from a Boston dispatch, which says "The Brighton Five-Cent Savings Bank promptly availed itself of the law, and the Bank Commissioners directed that from March 21 to Sept. 21 not over 10 per cent. be paid each depositor; 10 per cent. additional be paid between Sept. 21 and March 21, 1879. No further additional amount to be paid after the latter date except by order of the Commissioners."

THE WEST.

Navigation through the Straits of Mackinaw opened earlier this year than ever before, so far as the records show. The first vessel of the season passed through on the 16th of March. In 1871 the straits were opened as early as April 3, and that was commented upon at the time as a remarkable circumstance.

Chicago papers announce the death of O. A. Willard, editor-in-chief of the Evening Post. He was 43 years old....Advices from the Northwest, by way of Manitoba, report that Sitting Bull's band are near the boundary, and pay little attention to it in the pursuit of buffaloes, frequently crossing to this side.

The building occupied by the Non-Explosive Lamp Company, at Cleveland, Ohio, has been destroyed by fire.

Reports that seem to be trustworthy from the region on both sides of the Dominion line, north and northwest of Fort Benton, leave little room to doubt that the hostile Indians are preparing for a general war upon the Montana and Dakota settlements. More than a dozen large bands of Indians are roaming about, ostensibly engaged in hunting, but with supplies of ammunition so abundant as to prove their hostile intentions. Scouts who have visited the camps of these savages, just across the boundary, estimate the number of warriors at 5,000 or 6,000.

THE SOUTH.

Hot Springs, Ark., has been visited by another fire. Four large buildings were burned. Loss, $15,000....A negro murderer named Gus Johnson was executed in the presence of an immense crowd at Rome, Ga., on March 15.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana has given a decision in the appealed case of Thomas C. Anderson, the convicted member of the Returning Board. It reverses the verdict of the lower court, and orders his release. Chief Justice Manning, in delivering the opinion, said that "nowhere in law is a consolidated return required as a declaration of the result, and its alteration or modification can in no way affect the election. If every consolidated return were forged, and the Returning Board complied with the law, and made their statement from the Commissioners' returns, no injury could result. It does not appear that any paper has been forged that is calculated, with a compliance with the law, to change the result. It is the essence of the crime that it should be committed by a public officer, and on a document which would change the result of the elections. This was not done." The letter of John Sherman, Stanley Matthews and others, which appeared in the record, was alluded to by the Chief Justice, who stated that it should be treated by the public in like manner as that of a member of the House of Commons who attempted to influence the decision of the court in the Tichborne case.

Four masked men recently robbed a Central railroad train, near Hutchins, Texas. The train was rifled, the express matter taken, and the messenger wounded. About twenty shots were exchanged. The highwaymen were all young men.

A shocking tragedy was enacted near Wheeling, W. Va., a few days ago. The wife of John Wallace, her infant child, and a niece 14 years old who was living with them, were murdered and their bodies horribly mutilated. The husband and a brother have been arrested on suspicion of being the authors of the horrible deed.

Several heavy financial failures are reported from Memphis, Tenn....Five men were recently drowned below Richmond, Va., while attempting to cross the James river.

GENERAL.

Hon. J. Edwards Leonard, member of Congress from Louisiana, whom the President recently dispatched as a confidential envoy to the island of Cuba, died of yellow fever in the city of Havana on the 15th of March.

By a new law of Congress, just signed by the President, it is now lawful for defendants in criminal suits brought under the United States statutes to testify in their own behalf, if they so choose.

The city of Toronto, Canada, has been the scene of a tumultuous riot, caused by the appearance there, for the purpose of delivering a lecture, of O'Donovan Rossa, the well-known Fenian. The windows of the hall where he spoke were riddled with stones. Two taverns frequented by Irish Nationalists were attacked. About 200 shots were exchanged, and twenty men were wounded by the flying bullets. Nearly 300 persons were wounded by stones and brickbats, which flew thick as hail in all directions. The police had great difficulty in suppressing the emeute....Visible supply of grain in the States and Canada: Wheat, 8,214,000 bushels; corn, 5,438,000 bushels; oats, 2,655,000 bushels; rye, 584,000 bushels; barley, 3,343,000 bushels....Gen. Sir William O'Grady Haley, commander of the British troops in North America, is dead.

The United States steamer Enterprise, now at New Orleans, has been ordered to proceed to Brazil, and make a survey of the Amazon river as far as navigable.

WASHINGTON.

The House Banking and Currency Committee has agreed to a bill providing for an issue of silver bullion certificates. The bill is a compilation from several propositions submitted to the committee. It provides for the issue of certificates in denominations of $10, $20, $50, $100, $500 and $1,000, of 412½ grains. The certificates are to be payable, less expense for coinage and transportation, in silver coin or bars of fine silver, at the option of the Government....The House Committee on Civil Service has voted in favor of the dismissal of Doorkeeper Polk for disreputable practices in connection with his office.

The following synopsis shows the exports of animal products from the United States for the month of February: Bacon and hams, 90,[illegible]771 lbs; pork, 5,[illegible],115 lbs; pickled beef, 4,[illegible] lbs; fresh beef, 4,894,514 lbs; lard, 41,[illegible] lbs; tallow, 3,166,801 lbs; butter, [illegible] lbs; cheese, 8,[illegible],722 lbs; aggregate value, $13,655,278. Value of exports from New York during the month, $9,734,026.

A successful experiment has been made at the capital in substituting steam for horse-power in propelling street cars....The President has reappointed Miss Ada Sweet Pension Agent at Chicago.

Senator Sherman appeared before the Senate Finance Committee, the other day, at the request of the committee, and gave his views regarding the House bill to repeal the Specie Resumption act. He spoke for nearly two hours, and set before the committee facts and figures bearing upon the subject. He said, in substance, that it would be unwise and injudicious to repeal the act, as resumption could be brought about by the day fixed without any great difficulty. The Secretary was questioned in regard to the effect of the Silver bill on the resumption question. He said he had to admit that the effect of the bill generally had been good, and would be a decided advantage in connection with resumption....The House Judiciary Committee have authorized Chairman Knott to prepare and report to the House a bill repealing the Bankrupt law, to take effect, as to involuntary proceedings, immediately after its passage, and, as to voluntary proceedings, from and after July 1, 1879.

A Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs as follows: "The best judgment that can be formed from opinions expressed by those connected with the committees having to do with the tariff, repeal of resumption and silver bullion certificates is that no one of these measures can be passed at the present session."

POLITICAL.

The Democratic State Central Committee of Pennsylvania has decided to hold the next State Convention at Pittsburgh, May 22.

Returns of the recent election in New Hampshire, from all the towns of the State, foot up as follows: Prescott, 39,377; McKean, 37,863; Kendall, 251; Flint, 223; scattering, 99. Prescott's plurality, 1,514; majority, 941. The House will stand—Republicans, 205; Democrats, 165....The National party of Rhode Island held a State Convention at Providence, last week, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, William Foster; for Lieutenant Governor, Jason P. Hazard; Secretary of State, Henry Appleton; Treasurer, A. B. Moore.

The Iowa Republican State Convention has been called to meet at Des Moines June 19....The Republican State Convention of Rhode Island met at Providence, last week, and nominated all the present State officers for re-election....In the Rhode Island House of Representatives a bill granting unmarried women and widows the same privileges as men, in voting upon the tax propositions, has been defeated by 19 to 35....The Senate Postoffice Committee, by a vote of 6 to 3, declined to indorse the nomination of Alex. Reed to be Postmaster at Toledo, Ohio. This, says a Washington telegram, "is one of the most notable cases in the history of this Congress; and, while the nomination, in view of the recent developments, was not a discreet one, it is probable that the fact that Reed was a personal friend of the President and Stanley Matthews did not help him in committee."

FOREIGN NEWS.

Late advices from Cuba state that Vicente Garcia has proclaimed himself Dictator, and has assumed the government of the revolution, and has marched to the relief of Maceo, in the Eastern Department, in the company of Belisario Peralta....Russia offers to the Bulgarians for their ruler Prince Battenburg, a nephew of the Empress. It is not likely that this choice will suit England and Austria any better than some other of the Czar's dealings with the results of the war.

A cable dispatch announces that Russia, at the instance of Bismarck, has consented that the coming congress may decide whether the entire treaty is a proper subject of review, and to submit to whatever decision shall be reached....A Vienna dispatch says that negotiations are proceeding between Sir Henry Elliott and Count Andrassy for an alliance between England and Austria....A Vienna dispatch says a preliminary conference of Ambassadors is being planned at Berlin to settle the question of procedure at the congress....A Madrid telegram says there is much distress in the manufacturing districts of Catalonia and in the business centers on the Mediterranean coast, where numerous failures have taken place. One hundred and nineteen factories have been closed, and 9,000 workmen thrown out of employment.

The first important step toward a termination of the war between the Papacy and the Italian Government has been taken. Against the earnest protests of the irreconcilables, the new Pope has ordered the Italian Bishops to enter into relations with the Government and obtain its authority for the exercise of their functions....A Constantinople dispatch announces the arrival at Tchataldja, a few miles from Constantinople, of a corps of 25,000 Russians from Tirnova, north of the Balkans. The movement is probably chargeable to the threatening attitude of England and Austria.

Suleiman Pasha has arrived at Constantinople, in close custody. It is thought that Osman Pasha will soon be released by the Russians....The Hungarian Delegation has unanimously voted a credit of 60,000,000 florins....Servia will not recognize the terms of peace until they are confirmed by the congress....A dispatch from Vienna says the dead-lock between Russia and England is complete. Austria and Germany are altogether opposed to England's demand. Austria has been confidentially informed of the conditions of peace, and considers them on the whole moderate, and susceptible of further modification at the congress.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, March 15.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The day in the House was spent in debate upon the Boston contested election case of Dean vs. Field. Discussion was arrested by the Speaker, before it had proceeded far, to announce the death of Hon. J. Edwards Leonard, a member of the House from Louisiana, whereupon the House adjourned.

Saturday, March 16.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The House devoted the day to private bills, and the only action of importance was the defeat of the bill to pay certain Southern ante-bellum mail contractors $375,000....The House gave the President another little dig by adopting a resolution calling upon the Attorney General to know whether the President has any right to appoint cadets to West Point.

Monday, March 18.—Senate.—Mr. Edmunds, from the Judiciary Committee, reported adversely upon the House bill admitting women to practice in the Supreme Court or other United States courts, because it is discretionary now with those courts to decide who shall practice before them, and this bill would compel the courts to admit women when it would not admit men to that privilege....Mr. McCreery inquired of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee what progress was making in regard to the repeal of the Bankrupt law. Mr. Edmunds replied that the committee was making progress, and he hoped that there would be a report soon....Mr. Windom called up the House bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense. It was passed without discussion. The bill appropriates $275,000....Mr. Thurman called up the Senate bill to prohibit members of Congress from becoming sureties on certain bonds. Passed....The Senate resumed consideration of the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill, and Mr. Christiancy, of Michigan, made a vigorous legal argument in support of the Government's right to enforce the collection of the railroad's debt.

House.—Mr. Springer tried to get before the House, for action, the bill providing for the free coinage of silver, as provided in the original Bland bill. The opponents of the bill, by filibustering, prevented him from succeeding....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Vance, granting pensions to soldiers who enlisted out of prisons; also, for the payment of certain southern mail contractors (this bill provides that no claims shall be paid which have heretofore been paid by the Confederate Government); by Mr. Gibson, for the appointment of a commission to ascertain on what terms a treaty of commerce with Mexico can be arranged; by Mr. Monroe, relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries; by Mr. Willis, of Kentucky, establishing a mint at Louisville; by Mr. Sampson, proposing an amendment to the constitution providing that the President shall be elected by a direct vote of the people; by Mr. Conger, repealing the law appropriating $475,000 for the payment of certain Southern mail contractors; by Mr. Ewing, to grant to the State of Ohio the unsold public lands remaining in that State; by Mr. Cox, of New York, for the erection of a monument over the grave of Thomas Jefferson.

Tuesday, March 19.—Senate.—The day was an extremely animated one in the Senate. When the Deficiency bill came up there was a long, heated, bitter, personal discussion upon the timber question. It was a renewal of the contest of last week, in which Blaine, the Massachusetts Senators, and the Secretary of the Interior, by his acts, were central figures. Mr. Blaine renewed his attack upon Mr. Schurz. An exceedingly lively debate followed, the Interior Department and the administration being defended by Messrs. Christiancy, Dawes and Hoar. Mr. Christiancy charged the opposition to Schurz with having espoused the cause of the poor settler who carries his flag along the frontier only for the purpose of attacking Secretary Schurz. Mr. Sargent declared that Schurz, by the enforcement of obsolete laws, was seeking a cheap reputation as a reformer. An angry colloquy ensued between Messrs. Sargent and Dawes. Apologies were demanded by both, and given by neither. Senator Dawes charged the people of the Territories with being thieves and depredators, and Sargent accused the people of Massachusetts of stealing Plymouth rock....Mr. Morgan addressed the Senate in support of the Thurman Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill. He drew a forcible picture of the tremendous power of corporations in this country, which is greater than the power of some kingdoms, and declared that the country either must ultimately succumb to these corporations or become their masters. The time had come, he said, when the Pacific railroads should pay the debt of justice or be unmade by the power which had made them.

House.—Two reports were made from the Committee on Civil-Service Reform in the case of Doorkeeper Polk, charged with carelessness or malfeasance in the duties of his station. The majority report was to the effect that evidence showed Polk's unfitness to hold the office, and recommended his dismissal. The minority report claimed that the evidence did not sustain the charges, and recommended the retention of Polk....Mr. Smith, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensioners. It appropriates $29,289,000....Mr. Durham, from the same committee, reported back the West Point Academy bill, recommending concurrence in some of the Senate amendments and non-concurrence in others....Mr. O'Neill presented the remonstrance of printers, electrotypers, booksellers, engravers and others against the action of the Committee on Ways and Means in not imposing duty on imported stereotype and electrotype printing plates. Referred....The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Blackburn, for the better protection of plays and dramatic literature. It provides that the Copyright law shall cover all plays purchased from a foreign author for the purpose of playing or publishing in the United States; by Mr. Springer, to authorize the coinage of gold and silver on the same terms, and to promote the deposit thereof....A resolution proposing that there should be no further action on the tariff, and recommending that the Ways and Means Committee be discharged from the bill, was introduced in the House, but could not be acted upon, owing to a single objection which was interposed....A new movement was made in Pacific railroad matters by the adoption of a resolution calling on the Attorney General for information as to what proceedings are pending against the Kansas Pacific road at the instance of the Government....The remainder of the day was passed upon the Deficiency Appropriation bill, few changes being made in it.

Wednesday, March 20.—Senate.—Mr. Mitchell introduced a bill for the protection of homestead settlers on public lands....It was ordered that there be printed for the use of the Finance Committee the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the repeal of the Specie Resumption act, and the tables submitted by him on the subject....Mr. Allison introduced a bill to repeal the Pre-Emption laws and provide for the sale of timber on the public lands....The Senate bill to amend section 2,464 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the cultivation of timber on the public domain, was discussed briefly and passed—yeas, 30; nays, 12....Messrs. Windom, Blaine and Withers were appointed a conference committee on the part of the Senate on the Military Academy Appropriation bill....Mr. Howe offered a resolution asking the President to inform the Senate whether Judge Whittaker, who presided at the trial of Thomas C. Anderson, in New Orleans, was ever in the employ of the Government, whether he was a defaulter, and to what amount, and, if so, whether legal proceedings had ever been taken against him. Mr. Howe said that at home and elsewhere he had been accused of not yielding very cordial support to the President's policy, and, if it would suit the convenience of the Senate on Monday next, he would like to take up this resolution and submit some remarks, by way of excusing himself, so far as he was able....Consideration was resumed of the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill, and Mr. Mitchell spoke in favor of the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads....Mr. Teller, of Colorado, obtained the floor, and, in a long speech, arraigned Mr. Hoar for having called the people of the Territories thieves and plunderers. Mr. Hoar responded that he could not conceive the mental condition of a man who put such a construction upon his remarks.

House.—In the House the bill regulating advertising for mail contracts was passed. It requires advertisements to be brief, and to refer for details to the Postoffice Department. It also prohibits the subletting of mail contracts, and declares such contracts annulled....The House then went into committee of the whole on the Deficiency Appropriation bill, and, after a few unimportant changes, it was reported to the House and passed....Mr. Ellis offered the usual resolutions in regard to the death of the Hon. J. E. Leonard, of Louisiana, and gave notice he would call them up for action Saturday, April 6.

Thursday, March 21.—Senate.—Mr. Hereford offered a resolution calling upon the Finance Committee to report the House bill repealing the Resumption act within one week. Mr. Morrill objected, and it went over....Mr. Teller spoke one hour in the Senate on the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, and then the Senate resumed the discussion of the Timber bill. Mr. Jones, of Florida, made a strong attack on Secretary Schurz, claiming that he was not pursuing the policy of his predecessors, but one which would work disastrously for a large number of citizens....Mr. Morgan also arraigned the Secretary of the Interior, and said his conduct as to public timber-lands had been evasive and not candid. Mr. Matthews defended Secretary Schurz. He said the real gist of the accusations against the Secretary of the Interior was not that usually heard about the negligence of a public officer, but that, according to his sense of duty, he was enforcing the law. Because of that he was arraigned as oppressive to individuals, as being un-American. He (Matthews) thought it was one of our cherished maxims that the best way to secure the repeal of obnoxious laws was to rigidly enforce them.

House.—Mr. Waddell, Chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, reported a bill to establish a postal savings depository as a branch of the Postoffice Department....Mr. Chalmers introduced a bill providing for the organization of the Mississippi Improvement Commission....The Naval Appropriation bill was discussed, amended and passed. The amount appropriated is $14,048,684.

The "hell question" is settled. A committee of the Mississippi Legislature has been considering it, and decides that "both analogy and revelation teach the doctrine of punishment in hell, and forever."

SABBATH READING.

At Home.

"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

It is the evening hour,
And thankfully,
Father, Thy weary child
Has come to Thee.

I lean my aching head
Upon Thy breast,
And there, and only there,
I am at rest.

Thou knowest all my life—
Each petty sin;
Nothing is hid from Thee,
Without, within.

All that I have or am
Is wholly Thine;
So is my soul in peace,
For Thou art mine.

To-morrow's dawn may find
Me here or there—
It matters little since Thy love
Is everywhere.

—New York Observer.

Charity is Greatest.

The three principal graces identified with the Christian religion are, "faith, hope, charity;" the "greatest" of which "is charity"—love. The pre-eminence of love must be based upon certain facts; if not so, the apostle would not have so stated its ascendency in the scale of moral principles. It is the "greatest." And from what considerations is it such?

It is more godlike than faith and hope. God never hopes nor believes. He is a being of absolute knowledge, and in full possession of every element essential to His existence as God—His happiness and glory. He knows all things, and all things are His, which precludes the necessity of hope and faith. But, while God does not hope and believe, He loves.—Religious Telescope.

The Church in the Household.

As it was at first, so it is now—the church of the First Born sends the roots of its strong and sturdy life into the household, there to be watered with the tears of penitence, and invigorated by a faith that discerns the grace and majesty of its sovereign Head. A declension in religion, a decrease of moral power in the community, and a fatal lukewarmness in the service of Christ, have ever sprung from some gross neglect in families of those duties and obligations which conscience has recognized and habit nullified. A return of spiritual activity in the church, and of improved public virtue, have also been found to be connected with a revival or reformation in the households of the people. So that we come back and take up Paul's phrase, "the church in thy house," and find it to contain a meaning quite universal in its bearings and applications.—London Baptist.

The Comforter.

One mistake which really good and pious people commit is, that they think the Holy Spirit of God to be merely, or little beside, certain pleasant frames and feelings, and comfortable assurances in their own minds. They do not know that these pleasant frames and feelings really depend principally on their own health; and, then, when they get out of health, or when their brain is overworked, and the pleasant feelings go, they are terrified and disheartened, and complain of spiritual dryness, and cry out that God's Spirit has deserted them, and are afraid that God is angry with them, or even that they have committed the unpardonable sin; not knowing that God is not a man that he should lie, nor a son of man that he should repent; that God is as near them in the darkness as in the light; that whatever their own health or their own feelings may be, yet still in God they live and move and have their being; that to God's Spirit they owe all which raises them above the dumb animals; that nothing can separate them from the love of Him who promised that He would not leave us comfortless, but send to us his Holy Ghost to comfort us, and exalt us to the same place whether He has gone before.—Rev. Charles Kingsley.

The Necessary Penalty.

This is not a threat, but a natural, philosophical fact. What is sin? Not a something that has a separate, independent existence; it is merely a perversion of function. It is a use of something for a purpose, or in a manner not intended by the Maker.

This will destroy anything. A farmer breaks prairie with a "double shovel," or hitches his team to the plow-handles, or rakes hay with his grain-drill or horse-fork, or harrows with his pitchfork, or uses his tool-house for a stable, and he spoils his work and his tools both. A nut is off or a bolt lost from a machine; you continue to use it and it comes to pieces. Polish mahogany with a brick-bat and you make a bad job. Use the stomach as a receptacle for something besides food, and the man dies. Take your clothes for fuel and dress up in stove-wood, and it is not a success.

So of everything. Perversion of function produces disorder, and disorder continued inevitably leads to destruction. Sin is perversion; hence it necessarily produces disorder, and just as necessarily death. It will do this of itself without any interference whatever on God's part.

No machine can repair itself. The remedy must come from without. Hence the sinner must have foreign aid, or none at all. The rejection of this will make the death eternal. And if the sinner rejects it in the present life he will in the next, unless his surroundings are better, stronger, holier than here. Hence there is little probability that he would accept the aid, as there is none at all that he will have the offer of it in the future life. Hence, in a purely philosophical light, the wages of sin is eternal death.—Adam C. Johnson, in the Standard.

Repartee.

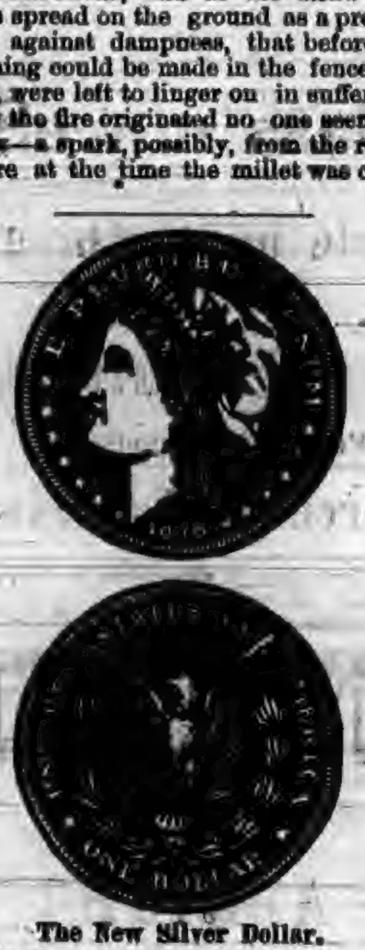
A good thing is told of one of our city belles, Miss L., noted for her wit. At a dinner party the lady in question, who is a daughter of a distinguished Judge, was seated next to a gentleman whom she had not met before, and who was on a visit to the city on business which had brought him in contact with the Judge mentioned, who had shortly before decided a case against him. At the dinner the gentleman, who had not caught the name of the lady when introduced, took occasion to vent his feeling and express his opinion of the Judge in terms anything but complimentary. An awful pause in the conversation indicated something wrong, and the gentleman took occasion to express his hope that the Judge was no relation of hers, to which, to the infinite amusement of all present, she replied, "Oh, no; only a connection of my mother's by marriage." A shout of laughter could not be prevented, and the gentleman, after a little reflection, came slowly to the conclusion that the Judge's family were too much for him.—Washington (D. C.) Herald.

AN AWFUL HOLOCAUST.

Three Thousand Chinamen Destroyed by Fire—Terrible Scenes.

The Hong Kong (China) Mail gives the following account of a frightful calamity, brief mention of which has heretofore been made in these columns:

At Tientsin, on the 7th of January, a terrible calamity occurred. A fire broke out at 10 o'clock in the morning, at one of the relief yards established outside of the city wall for the benefit of the famine refugees. A strong northeast wind was blowing at the time, and scarcely an hour passed before all the sheds were burned, and between 2,800 and 3,000 women and children were suffocated or burned to death. As correct an estimate as I can get gives the number of inmates at 3,000, of whom only a little over 100 escaped. The location of this soup kitchen was unfortunate. On the east side was the city ditch; on a part of the south and west sides was an ice pit, while houses lined the remaining sides. In addition it was surrounded by a strong fence of kauliang stalks plastered with mud, in which there was only one gate, and, it is said, on the bursting forth of the flames, the gate-keeper locked the gate and ran away. Many of the Chinese showed much courage in trying to render assistance, as testified by an eye witness, who, passing just at the time, hastened to do what he could in tearing down the fence and rendering other service. He speaks of the scene at that time as terrible beyond description. The scene presented after the fire had done its work was ghastly and horrible, and the picture of it rises before my mind as one that can never be effaced. The contortions of the features, the positions of the bodies, hands, limbs, mouth, and eyes, the same as when the flame and smoke overtook them, reminded one of the descriptions of Pompeii. Had the gate been left open probably many more might have made their escape, but so rapidly did the flames spread through the mat-sheds, and in the straw and mats spread on the ground as a protection against dampness, that before an opening could be made in the fence few even were left to linger on in suffering. How the fire originated no one seems to know—a spark, possibly, from the range where at the time the millet was cooking.



The New Silver Dollar.

The above two cuts represent the new silver dollar that is now in process of coinage in accordance with the provisions of the Silver bill recently passed by Congress. Two specimens from which to make a choice were submitted to the Finance Committee at Washington, and the above design was accepted after mature consideration. It is known as the "Morgan dollar," because it is the work of Mr. George E. Morgan, an English engraver, who has been in the service of the United States mint since October, 1876. The new dollar is 2 per cent. lighter than the silver trade-dollar, but approaches that coin so nearly in size that there is no perceptible difference in either size or weight. The actual size of the dollar is reproduced in the cuts.

An Infamous Butchery.

In the Russo-Swedish war of 1809, the gulf of Bothnia being completely frozen over, a Russian party crossed on foot for the purpose of making a foray. They reached Rathan after a sixty miles' march, half dead with cold, starving, frost-bitten, and scarcely able to crawl ashore. A Swedish Colonel with his regiment, 1,000 strong, was posted here to watch the whole of this ice-bound coast during the winter. He received and treated them with the utmost kindness, and, as there were scarcely any inhabitants (there are now only a few cottages), the soldiers themselves nursed their prostrate enemies for the space of two months, till all had recovered their strength. One day when the Colonel was putting his men through an unarmed drill on an improvised exercise ground, the Russians, treacherously seizing the arms, massacred the Colonel and every one of his men on the spot where they stood, where now stands a simple iron cross, bearing testimony to the most dastardly act which could possibly have been perpetrated. We are sorry to add that they effected their retreat across the gulf in safety.

In China criminals are permitted to hire substitutes to be punished in their stead. The same practice has been attempted in Reno, Nev. Ah Choney murdered a fellow-countryman and was arrested, but by paying a Sheriff $500, another Chinaman was substituted for him, the latter agreeing to take the chance of hanging for a specified sum. Ah Choney was detected before he could get out of the place, and the Sheriff was also put under arrest.

Waltham, Addison county, Vt., has neither doctor, lawyer, merchant, post-office nor pauper, and it is painful to be told by the Burlington Free Press that there are only 250 inhabitants to enjoy all this luxury.

THE FISHERIES DISPUTE.

Injustice of the Halifax Award.

Ex-Secretary Fish, in an interview with a reporter, says the Chicago Tribune, told how a Belgian came to be appointed umpire of the Fisheries Commission at Halifax. The unfairness of selecting a native of Belgium for this position was admitted by the representatives of the British Government. The Marquis of Ripon, the British Commissioner, said, in conversation with a member of the American Government: "We don't want to suggest Mr. Delfosse, for we suppose you will raise against him the objection that he represents a Government supposed to be under the British influence." In spite of this warning, the British Government afterwards did press the appointment of Delfosse, and Mr. Fish, in a fit of foolish magnanimity, consented to it. The price of his blunder was the $5,500,000 award. He now expresses amazement at the result, but it is difficult to understand how he could have looked for any other. He might as well have named Lord Dufferin or any other British subject as the umpire. Indeed, the appointment of a Belgian was worse than that of an Englishman would have been. A plain advantage in numbers might have compelled a just verdict from a sense of decency and fairness, whereas a pretense of impartiality was an excellent cover for extortion. Except in name, the Belgian umpire was an Englishman. Belgium exists as an independent nation under the guarantee of Great Britain. Gratitude, sympathy and self-interest bind the two countries together.

A few considerations will suffice to show that the award was grossly unjust. It is supposed to represent the value of the mackerel caught by United States fishermen in Canadian waters during twelve years. Evidence produced before the Commission, and admitted by both sides, established the fact that cod and halibut are caught without the three-mile limit, and are not subject to the terms of the treaty. The whole mackerel catch brought into our ports by United States vessels and sold in our markets has not averaged more than $75,000 per annum for the last six years. But the commission estimated the value of this catch for twelve years at $5,500,000. The United States is consequently called upon to pay $458,333 per annum for the privilege of catching $75,000 worth of fish. There is another point. Our Government has, by the terms of the Treaty of Washington, given to Canada the privilege of sending fish and fish-oils into the United States duty-free, the concession being distinctly made as compensation for the benefits enjoyed by American fishermen in Canadian waters. The loss to our revenue in consequence of this remission of duties was $181,778 in 1873; $179,386 in 1874; $155,076 in 1875; and $153,076 in 1876. The net loss to the United States, over and above the total value of the mackerel caught—not the profits of the catch, it will be observed—was about $100,000 per annum; and the value of the catch was constantly decreasing, while the loss of revenue showed no considerable abatement after 1875.

The award being thus unfair, and obtained only through the favoritism of the Belgian umpire, it becomes a serious question whether the United States Government can honorably avoid the payment of it. The treaty does not provide for a verdict by a majority, and it is held that the dissent of the American member of the commission invalidates its decision.

Sharpsburg, Ky., has a natural mathematician in Reuben Fields, who, while he knows not one figure from another, correctly solves intricate problems in his mind, without hesitation, computes the time of day almost in an instant, and tells how many revolutions the driving-wheel of a locomotive will make between given points. He cannot read or write.

The Indian famine has cost the British Government $46,250,000, and it is proposed by the authorities hereafter to regard these visitations as regularly recurring and not as exceptional events, and to make preparation for them by laying up $7,500,000 a year so as to meet the scourge when it comes without unduly disturbing the revenue.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The Impossibility of Resuming on the 1st of January, 1879—Letter from Dr. Miller, of New York.

It is one thing to talk about resuming specie payments, but quite another thing to obtain the specie with which to resume.

It is an easy matter for ignorant and designing legislators to pass laws requiring the redemption of our paper currency in specie on a certain day, but quite another thing for the Government and the banks to provide the necessary specie with which to redeem their paper notes and keep them at par in coin.

However much we may desire our paper currency to be at par with coin, or to have "honest money" in place of "broken promises;" or "redeemable" in place of "irredeemable currency," or to have coin and bank notes in place of greenbacks, the important questions to be answered are: What are the possibilities and probabilities of our obtaining the amount of coin required to give us the currency we most desire? How much paper money will there be to be redeemed at the time resumption is to take place? How much of this paper money will remain in circulation after resumption has taken place? How much coin will be required to redeem this paper money and to maintain its redemption? And from what source is this coin to be obtained? These are the questions to be satisfactorily answered before we rush madly and blindly over the precipice of bankruptcy, repudiation, and revolution, that is near at hand.

HOW MUCH PAPER CURRENCY WILL THERE BE TO REDEEM JAN. 1, 1879?

We have now $350,000,000 in greenbacks; the Resumption act authorizes the destruction of all this except $300,000,000, before 1879. We have also $330,000,000 of bank notes; the Resumption act authorizes the issue of $100 of bank notes for each $80 of greenbacks destroyed. If the greenbacks are reduced $50,000,000, the bank notes would, according to this law, be increased $60,000,000. But, to make our calculations as favorable as possible for resumption, we will suppose that the bank notes are also reduced to $300,000,000, making the total amount of paper currency to be redeemed in coin, Jan. 1, 1879, $600,000,000.

Now, how much coin will be required to redeem this amount of paper money, and how much to maintain it at par with specie? What standard have we by which to guide our judgment in answering this question? What does our own financial history teach us in reference to this matter, and what information can we gather from the example of other specie-paying countries?

It is a fact that no nation was ever able to keep in circulation a redeemable paper currency of any considerable amount at par with coin, while that nation was largely in debt, requiring annual interest to be paid in coin to a foreign country; therefore, we may justly infer that this country will never be able to resume and maintain a specie basis until our foreign debt is paid.

FACTS WITH REGARD TO OUR OWN FINANCIAL HISTORY.

In 1861, when the business of this country was on a specie basis, there was, in the entire country, about $250,000,000 in coin. The 1,600 banks held $87,674,507 of this coin, and they had in circulation about $202,000,000 of paper notes, which they claimed to be able to redeem with the coin they held. We had then, in the whole country, about $5 of coin to $4 of paper currency; the banks held about $1 of coin to $2½ of bank notes, and the people had about $2 of coin to $1 held by the banks. From the financial statistics of several years previous to 1861 we find that, whenever the banks attempted to increase the amount of paper currency much above the ratio of coin as here given, the effort was followed by serious financial disasters, resulting in panics, and extensive failures of banks and of business men, and subsequently, by a large reduction in the volume of paper currency.

From the Financial Report of 1876, page 159, we learn that from 1834 to 1837 the banks increased their paper circulation $54,346,320, and during that time there was no increase in the supply of coin held by the banks; but, on the contrary, there was a decrease of $6,023,385. This rapid increase of paper money without a corresponding increase in the supply of coin was followed by the panic of 1837 and all its accompanying disasters, at which time all the banks in the country suspended.

On the other hand, between 1837 and 1843 there was a contraction of the paper currency amounting to $91,618,282, and a shrinkage of the coin held by the banks amounting to $4,399,534. Between 1843 and 1848 the banks again increased their paper currency from $58,563,608 to $128,506,191, an actual increase of $69,942,583, while at the same time the supply of coin was increased only $1,616,716. This extraordinary increase of paper money, without a corresponding increase of coin, was followed by the panic of 1847-'48. In one year after, the volume of currency was reduced about $14,000,000.

In 1857 the banks had again increased their paper currency from $114,743,415 to $214,778,822—an inflation amounting to $100,035,407. During this period they had increased their coin only $11,980,073. This period of bank inflation culminated in the panic of 1857, at which time nearly all the banks suspended. From 1858 to 1859 the banks again reduced their circulation (in one year), $49,510,472. At the same time they increased their coin $16,064,994, and two years after had increased their coin $46,189,930.

From 1858 to 1861, the year the war began, the banks had again increased their paper circulation from $155,208,344 to $202,005,767, an inflation of $46,797,423; while in the same time the coin held by them was diminished from $104,537,818 in 1858 to $87,674,507 in 1861, a decrease of $16,863,311.

During this period of inflation and contraction of bank notes, ending in collapse, panic, suspensions and bankruptcy, not only of banks, but almost the entire business of the country, we observe that the volume of coin held by the banks was likewise subject to serious expansion and contraction. Thus, in 1835, the banks held $43,937,625 of coin, while in 1838, they held only $35,184,112, a contraction of $8,753,513. From 1838 to 1839 the coin again increased $9,948,561 in one year. From 1839 to 1842 there was a contraction of coin from $45,132,673 to $28,440,423, a shrinkage of $16,692,250 in three years. From 1842 to 1844 the coin was increased to $49,898,269, an increase in the two years of $21,457,846. From 1844 to 1847 there was a contraction of coin by the banks amounting to $14,765,753. From 1847 to 1848 they again increased their coin $11,237,051. In 1849 it decreased about $3,000,000. From 1849 to 1858 an increase of coin was made from $43,619,368 to $74,412,832, an increase of $30,793,464. From 1858 to 1859 it increased to $104,537,818, an actual increase in one year of $30,124,986. From 1859 to 1860 the coin reserve was again contracted to $83,594,537, a shrinkage of $20,943,281.

Such was the official history of our monetary affairs, under what Gen. Garfield, Abram S. Hewitt and their specie-resumption followers call "the only stable, reliable and unfluctuating standard of value" the people can have, namely: "Coin and a paper currency convertible into coin, at all times, at the pleasure of the holder." And while under this system, according to the statement of Comptroller Knox, the people lost every twenty years by the failure of banks an amount equal to the entire paper circulation of the country.

It will be observed that in 1837 the banks held $149,185,890 of paper notes, and only $37,915,340 of coin: or about $1 of coin to $4 of paper. In 1847-'8 they held $128,506,091 of paper currency, and $46,369,565 of coin; or about $1 of coin to $3 of paper. Again, in 1857, they had $214,778,822 of paper, and $58,349,838 of coin; or about $1 of coin to $4 of paper, and these were times of financial panics. While in years when business was on a safe basis—say 1835—they held $1 of coin to $2 1-3 of paper; in 1842, $1 of coin to $1 3-4 of paper; in 1848, $1 of coin to $2 5-6 of paper; and in 1859, $1 of coin to $1 4-5 of paper. It would seem, then, that under the old system of banking an increase of bank paper circulation much above $2 or $2 1-3 of paper to $1 of coin held by the banks resulted in a serious financial crash. Let it be distinctly understood in this connection, that while the banks held the amounts of coin above given, there was in circulation among the people not less than $2 of coin for every $1 or coin held by the banks. It would appear, then, from a history of our own banking business, that a paper currency could only be safely maintained at par in coin when the ratio of coin to paper in the country was about $5 of coin to $4 of paper, and when the banks held in reserve about $1 of coin to $2 or $2 1-3 of paper.

COIN TO PAPER IN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

No other specie-paying country in the world conducts its business on so small a proportion of coin to paper as did this country. Let us look for a moment at France. There the banking business is nearly all done through the Bank of France and its local branches. On the 1st of December, 1877, there was in circulation among the people of France about $700,000,000 of coin and $500,000,000 of paper notes of the Bank of France. In addition to this, the bank had accumulated a reserve of nearly $500,000,000 of coin preparatory to resuming specie payments on the 1st of January, 1878. Thus, in the entire country there was $1,700,000,000 of money, $1,200,000,000 of coin and $500,000,000 of paper money, or about $12 of coin to $5 of paper—nearly $2½ coin to $1 paper. We notice, further, that in France people hold $700,000,000 of coin and the banks about $500,000,000, the people having nearly $1½ of coin to $1 held by the banks. This shows that the Bank of France understood the subject of money so well that it made no attempt at resumption until it had in its vaults about a dollar of coin for every dollar of paper currency that it had in circulation.

Another significant point is the fact that, in consequence of being made full legal tender, the margin between the notes of the Bank of France and coin was never more than 2½ per cent., and most of the time it was less than 1 per cent., and yet no attempt was made at resumption until the influx of coin was fully equal to the outgo of paper money. To the astonishment of the financial world, this country boasts of a Secretary of the Treasury who proposes to redeem $600,000,000 of paper money with but little more than $175,000,000 of available coin in the whole country.

Now, let us look at England: Mr. Hewitt states in his speech in Congress that in England there is $640,000,000 of money, $500,000,000 of which is coin, and $140,000,000 of bank notes, thus showing that they have more than $3.50 of coin to $1 of paper in the entire country. Of the $500,000,000 of coin, the banks, according to the Banker's Magazine, hold $175,000,000, and the people $325,000,000; showing that England requires for circulation about $2 of coin among the people for every $1 held by the banks, and that the banks hold more than $1 in coin to each $1 of notes issued.

If we follow the example of England, we must have in the country at least $3.50 of coin to every $1 of paper before we can resume and maintain resumption; and the banks should have at least $1 of coin to every $1 of paper currency, and the people $2 of coin to each $1 held by the banks.

If we take France for our guide, we must have at least $2.50 of coin to $1 of paper; the banks should have $1 of coin for each $1 of paper issued, and the people at least $1.50 of coin to each $1 held by the banks.

If we follow the example of our own country when on a specie basis we must have $5 of coin to $4 of paper; the banks, not less than $1 of coin to every $2.50 of paper issued, and the people $2 in coin to each $1 held by the banks.

From the above it will be seen that, in those countries where a specie basis is maintained, a large portion of the coin is necessarily in the hands of the people, and that this demand for coin must be met, as well as that of the banks, in order to secure and maintain resumption.

Suppose we attempt to resume with the same ratio of coin to specie as exists in England. Let us see how much will be required. As we have $600,000,000 of paper it would require three and a half times that amount of coin, or $2,100,000,000. If we take France as our standard, we should require two and a half times that amount of coin, or $1,500,000,000. If these figures are beyond our means, let us follow our own example before the war—the smallest ratio of any specie-paying country in the world—$5 of coin to $4 of paper, and we should then require $750,000,000 of coin to redeem and keep at par our $600,000,000 of paper currency, and when we take into consideration that England and France have no foreign debt, and that our own country had none when on a specie basis, how can we expect to pay the interest on our foreign debt and yet resume and maintain specie payments on any less ratio of coin to paper than we had before the war.

The Director of the Mint gives the amount of coin now in the country as about $175,000,000. In order to resume and maintain resumption, then, it would require an addition of $575,000,000 to our present stock of coin. Can this be had? No honest, sane man would, for a moment, say that either the banks, or the people, could possibly accumulate that amount of coin in one year. No, nor a half, nor a quarter, nor even one-fifth of the amount.

MISTAKEN NOTIONS AS TO AMOUNT OF COIN REQUIRED.

The fact is, those who are pushing on this specie-resumption scheme are either lamentably ignorant or willfully dishonest. They seem to think that as soon as the people are made to believe that they can get coin in exchange for paper they will not want coin, and, therefore, there will be no demand for it. This is a fatal error. The very law authorizing the resumption of specie payments creates a demand, by making coin the only legal tender in payment of debts.

Debts may now be paid in greenbacks, but the moment the greenbacks are demonetized the debtors are compelled to have coin to cancel their obligations whenever creditors demand it; and they always do demand it, whenever there is anything to be gained by so doing; and there will always be a gain to the creditor, by receiving coin, so long as the supply of coin is less than the demand for it, for debt-paying purposes. Those who are basing their financial calculations on the supposition that the people will not want coin will find themselves disastrously mistaken.

The Resumption act of itself creates a demand for coin by which the Government must redeem every dollar of its legal-tender notes, and by which the banks or Government must redeem every dollar of the national-bank notes in circulation. The demand has already been created for coin to pay the interest on the public debt, which requires $97,000,000 a year. A similar demand exists for coin to pay the interest on railroad and other bonds and stocks held abroad. Another large demand is for custom dues.

The question of our ability to resume specie payments is dependent entirely upon the demand and supply of specie, and it will not do for us to shut our eyes to the facts and figures which show us the magnitude of that demand and the meagerness of the supply to meet it.

If our creditors insist on nothing but gold coin in payment of the interest and principal of their debts and in the redemption of the legal-tender notes, and we consent to such an arrangement, then we must decide as to where we are to get the gold to meet our indebtedness. Where are the millions of business and working men, who have obligations resting upon them amounting to over $12,000,000,000, to get the gold coin necessary to meet these obligations?

We must remember that nearly all these debts were contracted in greenbacks, and neither the debtor nor creditor had any other expectation than to pay them in greenbacks. If the creditor now exacts from the debtor that which it is out of his power to meet, what but bankruptcy and repudiation could be expected to follow? The remorseless creditor simply seizes upon what little property the debtor has, and leaves him and his family penniless and helpless, after years of toil and anxiety, to provide, as best they can, a home and the necessities of life.

BRINGING GREENBACKS TO PAR WITH COIN.

A fatal delusion seems to have seized the minds of our public men as to the significance of bringing greenbacks and gold to an equality. Senator Lamar, in his recent speech in the Senate on the Silver bill, refers to it in this way: "Everything points to a speedy equality between the value of gold and greenbacks. If nothing prevents, its equality would come very soon. Then gold would cease to be a commodity and pass into the circulation, swelling the volume of available currency by the whole amount of gold in the country—say $130,000,000."

The gold will pass into circulation, will it? Let gold be freely offered at par with greenbacks, with the Specie Resumption act in force, by which a demand will be created on the 1st of January, 1879, for gold to redeem $600,000,000 of paper currency, and we should then see how long this gold would remain in circulation. Every man, with any business tact, who has a greenback or bank-note dollar to spare, will invest it in gold, and lock it up, and await the grand resumption day, when he can safely calculate on a premium of at least 250 per cent. Is any one so stupid as to think the gold gamblers in Wall street don't understand what they are about? It will not be a month after gold begins to circulate on a par with paper before the gold will all disappear from circulation, and it will be much more securely locked up than it now is by the premium it brings.

WHERE IS OUR SUPPLY OF GOLD TO BE OBTAINED?

There are but two sources from which we can obtain a supply of gold. It must come either from our own mines or be brought from foreign countries. Our mines yield about $45,000,000 a year. It would take fourteen years to accumulate from this source a sufficient supply for resumption purposes—$575,000,000 in addition to what we already have.

The prospect of getting a single dollar from foreign countries is very small indeed. It is true the balance of trade is now greatly in our favor, but we have an annual interest debt, payable in coin, due to foreigners, estimated by capable judges at not less than $100,000,000 a year, and by many at nearer $150,000,000, which must be met before we can draw upon them for a single dollar.

Although our exports in the year 1876 were $79,643,481 more than our imports, yet we sent out of the country, in coin, $40,568,621 more than was brought in. It will be seen that this nearly covers the amount obtained from our mines, so that we did not accumulate any coin for debt-paying, or resumption purposes. Again in 1877 our exports exceeded our imports by $151,152,094, yet we sent out of the country $15,387,829 more than we received. [See page 29 of Finance Reports for 1876, and pages 27-8 of 1877.]

The balance of trade is, at best, a very precarious dependence. A light crop here, or a heavy crop in Europe, might make exporting unprofitable, and throw the balance against us. Foreigners have it in their power every year to throw the balance against us, by sending home our bonds, putting them in the market, and drawing upon us for their amount in coin.

Europe is not going to allow her gold to come here to any great extent, so long as she can prevent it by sending bonds. In fact, neither England, France, nor Germany has any more gold than they need for their own home purposes.

Even were there a balance of trade amounting to $200,000,000 a year in our favor, it would take half of this to meet our interest abroad. To put the most favorable construction possible, this balance, with what our mines would yield, would not give us over $150,000,000 a year, even with silver remonetized, and it would, at this rate, take four years to give us the amount we need, in order to resume with any degree of safety.

REDUCING THE QUANTITY OF PAPER MONEY.

Another method of arriving at a specie basis, proposed by such men as Abram S. Hewitt and others, is to reduce the volume of paper money to $300,000,000. Less coin, it is thought, would then be required to establish and maintain resumption. But, allowing this to be true, have we now any more currency than the country needs? We have, all told, about $20 per capita. England has $24.50; France has $45. Reduce our paper currency to $300,000,000 and we would have about $12 per capita. Although such a course would be a serious damage to the business of the country, still further shrinking the value of property, and producing a greater number of bankruptcies, yet, for the sake of argument, grant that it can be done. At the rate of $5 of coin for every $4 of paper, it will then require $375,000,000 of coin to resume. This is $200,000,000 more than we at present have. Can the Government and the banks obtain in ten months $200,000,000 more gold than we now have? If we had a foreign debt of a few hundred millions due us, it is possible that such a task might be accomplished; but it is simply an impossibility as we are now situated, with a debt against us, and the attempt to resume in January, 1879, will culminate in the grandest financial crash, attended by the most disastrous business and bank failures, ever known to the civilized world; while, in the end, Congress will be compelled to restore to the people the greenback it has destroyed, in order to re-establish the prosperity which their destruction has ruined.

PRESERVING THE LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Although the difference to the people between destroying and preserving the legal-tender quality of the greenbacks is not fully appreciated, yet bringing them to par and maintaining specie payments can be accomplished with double the ease if the legal tenders are preserved than if they are not; and the more of them we do preserve, the more readily will they be brought to par in coin. Now, why is this so? For the simple reason that greenbacks are lawful money, receivable for all ordinary debts between business men, and, if their legal-tender power is taken away, a demand is at once created for as many dollars of coin to be used as lawful money in their place. There are now $350,000,000 of legal-tender notes in use, and they serve the purpose of lawful money for all ordinary purposes. As soon as they are destroyed, some other legal money is required, and therefore it will take $350,000,000 more coin with the legal-tender notes taken away, than it will if they are preserved. It is just on this point that the Government has so fatally blundered; and this explains why the destruction of the legal-tender notes has been so disastrous to business.

On page 166, of the Finance Reports of 1876, the Comptroller of the Currency states that on the 31st of August, 1865, there were $684,000,000 of legal tender in use. Secretary Sherman now reports that there are only $350,000,000 in use. This shows that the Government has taken from the people $334,000,000 of lawful money, and not a dollar of coin or other lawful money has been put in circulation in its place. This has been the cause of so many bankruptcies, the panic, and the continued hard times.

The people have been deceived by the issuing of bank notes in place of greenbacks destroyed into thinking that the amount of money in the country remained the same. Bank notes are not lawful money; instead of being of value, as a substitute for greenbacks, they have been an infamous tax upon the people in the way of interest paid to the banks for their use, and interest on bonds issued in place of the greenbacks and held as security for bank notes. If none of the legal tenders had been destroyed, our interest debt would be so reduced that greenbacks would have been at par with coin long ago. And even now 4 per cent. bonds are being sold above par, in coin. All that is necessary to bring greenbacks to par in coin is for the Government to offer to receive greenbacks at par, in exchange for the 4 per cent. bonds—and then, to prevent contraction and damage to business, let the greenbacks be paid out for bonds bearing a higher rate of interest.

We have now $525,000,000 of lawful money, $175,000,000 of which is coin, and $350,000,000 of legal-tender notes; if we had the whole $684,000,000 of the latter, as in 1865, we should now have $859,000,000 of lawful money. But if the $350,000,000 of legal tenders now in use are destroyed we shall have, of lawful money, only the $175,000,000 of coin, together with such additional sums as we may be able to accumulate during the year—which, at most, cannot be more than $75,000,000. Thus, if we resume without the legal tenders, we shall have only $250,000,000 of lawful money; while, if we resume with them, we shall, with the same amount of coin, have $600,000,000.

To preserve all the legal tenders now in existence may save the country from total bankruptcy and repudiation. To destroy them all is to thwart resumption and create a revolution that will overturn the Government.

Forty-five millions of people who are debtors will not be stripped of all their possessions and rendered houseless and homeless by 500,000 bankers and money lenders.

When it comes to a test, the people are stronger than corrupt laws; justice is more powerful than avarice; truth can overturn falsehood. And when the great tornado, caused by the uprising of the entire American people, comes crashing into Wall street, it will be a sorry day to thieving Shylocks and their servile tools, who have conspired to rob the people of their money, their rights, their property, and their Government.

THE NATIONAL PARTY.

An Address to the People of the United States.

Owing to the pressing demands from all parts of the country for the immediate organization of the National party, the Executive Committee of the National party of the United States has adopted the following plan of action, out of which, it is believed, will grow a perfect and uniform organization of the party in the different States.

Upon the application of ten or more voters who have organized a council of the National party in any locality, and elected officers consisting of a Chief, Vice Chief, a Scribe and a Treasurer, and reported the State, postoffice, township and county, or city and ward, in which it is organized, together with the names of the said officers, the National Committee will issue to such organization an engraved charter emblematic of the principles and objects of the National party, and a constitution and directions for the organization and government of the council. Each application must be accompanied by the sum of $1. This sum will cover the expense of issuing the charter and will secure to each council the privilege of obtaining printed documents, badges, campaign song books and other campaign goods from the National Committee at cost, or as near cost as practicable.

The National Committee will also issue charters to young men's councils, to consist of youths under age, upon the same terms and with like privileges to those granted to the councils of voters. The object of the formation of young men's councils is to inspire the youths of the country with a realization of the great struggle upon which the nation has now entered, and to educate them in the vital questions of political economy and good government.

It is not the design of the National Committee to interfere with the State organizations of the National party, but to assist them in forming a perfect and uniform organization. To this end the National Committee will furnish weekly lists of councils chartered in each State to the Executive Committee of that State, if there be a State organization; and, by the instrumentality of this system of councils, secure the organization of States now unorganized. From these local councils the organization of counties, cities and States will be developed as the necessities of each locality may demand.

The National Committee will publish promptly a campaign song book, and it invites contributions from song writers. The songs should be accompanied by the music, or should be set to popular airs. The committee feels that this crisis should bring forth such songs as similar struggles in behalf of human rights have inspired.

The committee urges that local organization be perfected rapidly, and that tickets be nominated in localities where there are spring elections. A success in a city, or town, or township, or in a village, is often a key to more important victories. The recent gratifying successes of the National party in local contests in New York and Pennsylvania are encouraging to the workers in the cause everywhere. These gains in the East may be equaled and surpassed elsewhere by active and zealous work.

The committee respectfully requests that Greenback and Labor local organizations now in existence apply for charters as national councils, that the unification of interests secured with such harmony and enthusiasm by the Toledo Convention may be utilized.

The National Committee invites communications from the executive officers of all State organizations of the National party, that there may be co-operation and harmonious action.

All communications should be addressed to

D. B. STURGEON,
Chairman National Executive Committee,
Toledo, O.

A Badly Scared Editor.

An editor was sitting in his easy chair, buoyant in mind and heart, with the calm serenity and blissful tranquillity that none but editors know. A shuffling sound at the door brought him back to earth, and, facing nervously about, he beheld a man of deep, determined look, closing the door behind him. With a sickly feeling of foreboding, the editor motioned toward a chair, and gazed upon the intruder, helpless and breathless, resigned to meet the worst.

The hand of the man wandered toward his breast pocket. The editor's cheek blanched and his lips turned blue. Alas! alas! he had guessed aright the mission of the stranger.

The man pulled out a bundle of letters and papers. The head of the editor fell forward upon his breast and his hands dropped listless from the arms of his chair.

"My errand is not a pleasant one," said the visitor, speaking slowly.

"Thank Heaven!" exclaimed the editor, plucking up courage. "Out with it—suspense is worse than fate."

"I have an execution on your home," continued the man, with professional sadness. "The mortgage has been foreclosed."

"Hoora! ha! ha! ha!" roared the editor, springing up and nearly shaking the man's arm off. "Heaven be praised! but, Lord, what a scare you gave me! Blister my corns, if I didn't think you had a chunk of spring poetry. Drive on—sell the old shanty—it's a rat-eaten barracks, anyway, and rents are cheap. Ha! ha! what a load you've taken off my mind! Let's have your name—and down it goes for two years' free subscription. You're an angel in breeches, old fellow, but you don't look like it—darned if you do. Ha! ha! Cut your hair, man; cut your hair, and wear a stand-up collar. It'll save your children sorrow."—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

Mississippi Vetoes the Bell-Punch.

Mississippi, after thorough investigation by a committee of the Legislature, has decided against the bell-punch system of taxing liquor dealers. Since the diminution of the receipts in Richmond, Va., from $6,000 collected in October last, to $3,500 in January, Southern legislators are not so sanguine that they have struck a bonanza in whisky. Besides, all the influence of the liquor-sellers is thrown against the bell-punch, and, in the South, that influence is at least as powerful as in any section of the country. A bill for the introduction of the bell-punch has failed to become a law in Tennessee, and the prospects for the success of a similar measure in Louisiana are very slender.

THE Chinese play a game called tan, in which small buttons are thrown from a box, like dice, and the players guess whether the number is odd or even. Wong ah Lee was caught, in San Francisco, using a box that had a slot to hold a button, with a spring so arranged as to drop or retain it at will. His companions cut off his cue.

HAYES.

His Sham Professions of Reform—Extracts from Mr. Hewitt's Speech in Congress—Mr. Cox on the Presidential Title.

In the House of Representatives, the Diplomatic Appropriation bill being under consideration, Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, said he would not have spoken on the bill except for the recent event which had startled the whole country. That event had been the decision in the case of the Fishery Commission, by which the large sum of $5,500,000 had been awarded as damage to the Canadian Government for the privilege enjoyed by the United States fishermen. He pictured the array of leading lawyers who had represented the United States at Geneva, and compared them with the gentleman who had represented it at the late arbitration with Canada—respectable gentlemen, it was true, but gentlemen who had never been heard of before, while the representatives of Great Britain had been among the shining lights of the law. If reciprocity were put off for twenty years by the blunders of the men selected to represent the United States abroad it was time to ascertain whether the diplomatic system was worthy of respect. The present system was expensive, unnecessary, and, in most cases, a useless sham. The newspapers had taken the place of the old-fashioned diplomatic services. Twenty years ago the United States used to send abroad great and distinguished men, while, in these degenerate times, the foreign missions were refuges for played-out politicians. He was in favor of having but two European missions, one at London, as the center of the commercial interests of the world, and one at Berlin, as the center of political power. He would have these Ministers well paid, so that they would not feel humiliated at association with other Ministers. He would then have Secretaries at other different points, who should report to the Ministers. He stated that, of the twenty important treaties negotiated with European nations, all but one had been negotiated by special envoys, thus showing the inutility of the present diplomatic service. He regretted very much that there was no reciprocal treaty between the United States and France, since this country would have so much to gain by such a treaty. He was in favor of retaining missions to the South American states, because these countries were constantly in a state of revolution, and Ministers were necessary there to protect citizens of the United States. Wherever the diplomatic service could subserve the interests of commerce he would sustain it, but where it had only to deal with political questions he was in favor of reducing the expense of the service and consolidating its departments. The regulation of the whole system of diplomatic and Consular service was in the hands of the President under the constitution. He could make that system an honor and a source of immense value and prosperity to the country. Referring to civil-service reform, he sent to the Clerk's desk and had read the civil-service order of President Hayes, and then stated that the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury had been making political speeches in New Hampshire. He did not propose to make any comments on that act. No President had ever made such promises as Mr. Hayes had. No President was ever so bound by every consideration of justice to keep the pledges which he had made. It had been a matter of wonder to everybody on both sides that those pledges had not been kept. Here was a President who came into office not by the ordinary mode, but came rather by the Cæsarian operation, and he owed to both sides, not only to his own side to which he made these pledges, but to that other and greater party in the country which had with a forbearance and self-control unparalleled in modern times kept their faith with him. Had he kept his faith with the people? Men had puzzled their brains to explain why he had not done it. It was assuredly not because he wanted to reward his own party, for he had trampled his own party under foot. It was not because he wanted to come into the arms of the Democratic party, because he knew that while that party sternly did its duty to humanity it wanted no recruits from that direction. He had said that he would not give appointments for political reasons, that is to the party which nominated him and which had tried to elect him, and within very narrow limits he kept his pledge as to that; but there had been more than one campaign carried on in 1876. There had been a campaign of election and a campaign of electoral action, and when his appointments were turned to it would be found that he had rewarded those who had secured his counting into the high office of President of the United States. To begin with his Cabinet, there could be found two Secretaries who had been counsel on the Electoral Commission.

Mr. Frye—If the gentleman is making an attack on the civil-service reform policy of the President I hope he will see to it to give no friends of his policy sufficient time to reply.

Mr. Hewitt said he was not making an attack on the civil-service reform of the President, because he thought he had no civil-service policy. Among his other appointments were those of Wells, Anderson, Cassanave and Kenner, in Louisiana, and of Sterns, in Florida. The President had also broken his pledge by appointing three personal friends—Noyes, who had put Hayes in nomination, as Minister to France; Comly, who had discovered Hayes, as Minister to the Sandwich islands, and Lee, as Consul to Frankfort.

Mr. Hewitt then sent to the Clerk's desk and had read a letter from Mr. Comly to a private friend, in which he pictured the duties of a Minister as principally "going to take another drink," which was read amid much laughter.

Mr. Hewitt resumed his speech and proceeded to criticise the President's diplomatic appointments.

In reference to the appointments of Kasson to Austria, Lowell to Spain, Welsh to London, and Bayard Taylor to Germany, there were more or less objections to all of them. He admitted the experience, ability and eminent fitness of Kasson, but the objection to him was that he had been one of the "visiting statesmen," had gone to Florida and had rendered valuable services in the electoral struggle. Welsh was a highly respectable merchant, but his selection was not a good one for such an important post. Lowell was a poet, a man of letters, a scholar who had done honor to his age, name and country, but, in view of the delicate and intricate nature of this country's relation with Spain, he questioned the fitness of that appointment. Although he recognized Bayard Taylor's experience and abilities, he believed that, in view of the important questions springing up in Europe, the selection of Taylor was not the best that might have been made. It appeared to him as if the President's will had been paralyzed by the threats made on either side of the House, and by the newspaper discussions as to his title to office. He (Hewitt) wished to say distinctly that Hayes held his title beyond the reach of any proceeding, political or otherwise, except in his own conscience. If there had been a wrong done it had been done, not by the President, but by the Electoral Commission.

Mr. Cox, of New York, criticised Mr. Hewitt's speech. The drift of that speech, he said, could not be misinterpreted. It was intended to quiet the agitation on the subject of the President's title. His colleague, however, could not quiet one particular title. He could not read one title clear to the White House or any other mansion. His colleague was in great part responsible for the Electoral Commission, and he naturally desired to have the result certified as good. The result, however, was bad. No washing would rinse out the damned spot. With its stain the multitudinous seas would continue to be incarnadined till the present Executive retired for a better man. To-day a non-elected man held the high office of the Presidency through the crime of a convicted forger, and that convicted forger had an important post in the customs. He (Cox) had the other day somewhat informally in the honest fervor of the moment characterized the President as a fraud. The moral to which he would point his colleague was that, when one takes an office to which he is not elected, and takes it through corrupt means, it is better not to trust anything he does. He proceeded to discuss the civil-service reform policy, and said that civil-service reform under the present Executive was a lame humbug, and both sides of the House knew it to be futile and foolish. The fountain of honor itself was poisoned. He enumerated the various appointments under the present administration—specimens of civil-service reform—and asked why Wells and Anderson had been appointed and retained in office when one of them was already sentenced to the penitentiary and the other was about to be. The reason was they had to be rewarded for assisting to build up the rotten fabric of the very throne which dispensed power.

He characterized the civil-service system as a bundle of incongruities based upon false pretenses. They all knew how futile and foolish were the inconsequential and disobeyed orders to officials to abstain from all interference in politics. Hence, the utter friendlessness of the administration. Hence, the rejection of the President by both parties as a foundling over whose political birth the bar sinister would ever hang. It might be an exaggeration to state that more personal appointments to office have been made under President Hayes than under President Grant, but was it not so? The leading promoter of Hayes' nomination was in his Cabinet. His most conspicuous hustings orator was his associate in the same relation. The best mission to Europe had been given to a politician from his own State who had manipulated the votes of the nominating convention. Two of the electoral lawyers were Cabinet members. Two others were in foreign missions. A former Private Secretary had the best German Consulate. Some of those violations of civil-service reform defied all classification. The history of no government furnished proof so overwhelming as to corrupt and hypocritical practices. Political debauchery had been the rule and faithful trustworthiness the exception.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the Steuben Circuit Court in a cause wherein Samuel Haverstock is plaintiff and Wm Richmond and Mariah Richmond are defendants requiring me to make the sum of twelve thousand nine hundred and twenty-three dollars and forty-four cents [$12,923.44] with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on

SATURDAY, 30th day of MARCH 1878

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House, in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate to-wit:

The north west quarter of section thirty-three [33], and the north-east quarter of section thirty two [32] except twenty-five [25] acres off the west side of said quarter section, and the south-east fractional quarter of section twenty-nine [29, all in the township number thirty-four [34] north of range fifteen [15]. Also the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four [24], in township thirty-three [33], north of range fourteen [14], east.

I will first expose to sale the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four (24), township thirty-three (33), north of range fourteen [14] east, and in case it does not sell for enough to pay what is now due with interest, costs and accrued costs, then I will expose to sale the east half of the north-west quarter of section thirty-three (33), in township thirty four [34], north of range fifteen (15) east, and in case these two pieces fail to sell for enough to pay what is now due, with interest and all costs, then I will expose to sale the west half of the north-west quarter of said section thirty three [33], and in case these three pieces fail to sell for enough to pay the amount now due, with interest and all costs I will then expose to sale the balance of the above described lands together

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interests and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs in the same order.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

—The original Tennesseeans will appear in Auburn for the first time on Friday evening, March 29th, 1878. This is the first troupe of colored singers ever organized, and they have been in organization for over six years, under judicious training. They are without a doubt the most talented, cultivated and refined troupe of colored singers traveling. They not only render the old plantation melodies, but execute the finest selections of Quartetts, Duetts and Solos. The most powerful basso in America is a member of the troupe, and is particularly noted for his smooth chest notes.

Mr. Z. A. Coleman has a wonderful compass of voice, rainging from lower A. flat to high C., in a clear voice. The Tennesseeans appear for one night only, and those who love good music will never regret hearing this famous troupe. Admission 35 cents, Reserved 50. Diagram at Willis & Co's. Book Store.

—The night that McQuiston's store was burglarized, a young gentleman from Waterloo registered at the Central House as J. W. B., Angola. The next morning when Mr. Markie, the landlord, heard of the burglary, and knowing that his guest had got in very late, or rather quite early in the morning, concluded that he was the burglar, and went to his room, but found him gone. Of course this looked more suspicious. The traveler had stated he wanted to go north on the freight in the morning, and a telegram was sent to Angola for his arrest, not knowing that he had used Angola as a blind to fool the boys at Waterloo who might be trying to find out what he was at. About a week after, in came this same customer, giving the same directions he did before about the early train, and then was shown to his room. Markle was bound he should not escape this time, so early in the morning he went for Mr. McQuiston and another and seated them in the office ready to pounce upon their unfortunate victim. The guest soon appeared, and Markle gave the wink, but all they could do was to shake hands with an old friend. J. W. B. was not in the burglar line, but had been paying his addresses to one of our bells, and happened to be out rather late. Markle will hardly make as good a detective as he does a landlord.

—Our friends, A. R. Hoffman and Chas. F. Shepherd, the former once the principal of our schools, and the latter connected with Mr. Abright in jewelry business, returned, from Washington Territory and Oregon respectively last Saturday, and were heartily received by their many friends. From them we learn that they have enjoyed their residence on the golden slope, and have prospered reasonably well. They discribe the climate as simply delightful and the country, especially the vallies, as wonderfully productive. No wintry blasts nor stiffening frosts with their blighting presence, find an abiding place there, and the thermometer seldom, if ever, goes below 84. The nights in summer are cool and enjoyable, and one sleeps comfortably under a blanket. Sometimes the rainy season lasts several months and grows a little monotonous. The country east of the mountain range offers inducements in the way of agriculture and mining, and when the Northern Pacific Railroad is finished to Puget Sound, an investment there in the above region will pay. To go there now settle down, and grow up with the country, is not all a myth, but a very good idea. Portland is a grand little city on the Williamette river, and is the center for the valley of that name, said to be the grandest in the world—about 40 m. wide and 120 long. The bodies of water around Puget Sound are charming, the phosphorous at the bottom giving forth a halo of light at night, eclipsing the beauty of an autum day. It will require great inducements to keep our friends from returning.

—The robbins are mating, and building their nests in cedar and maple, and their songs are as grateful as the balmy air, and carpet of green. Other birds are busy too, and we know of several human species as industrious as our feathered neighbors. There's one in the north part of town, fixing up a nice cosy nest for his sweetheart, and he trying to do it awful sly, too. We know of another in south Auburn, who moves around quietly, and puts this and that together, and is anticipating a jolly time. Well, why not. Let all extract as much happiness out of this world as they can. At best we have sufficient trouble.

We could not learn the name of the "rooster" but we know that he's not the "Ham Fat Man"

Nailed.—Monday evening the residence of Mr. James McClellan, living in Somers' addition, was broken into and money and other articles taken. A suspicious looking character, was visiting our saloons and from his actions it was thought proper to "nail" him. He was conveyed to the St. Clair House to await trial.

—Our citizens are especially indebted to Mr. John Sommers for his efforts in bringing about the arrest of one or two parties who are charged with prepetrating some of the numerous robberies that have occurred in this vicinity lately. These thefts are of too frequent occurrence to allow them to be ignored, and we are glad Mr. S. has taken the initiatory, as his well known caution and prudence are sure to bring others to the rack as well as the one now in jail.

—There is a very aggravated case on one of our boulevards. A beardless gallant has been very persistent in entertaining one of our most charming young ladies, even to the sma' wee hours on several occasions, but when a show or lecture comes along, he hies himself to another and brings her out his late partner runs de machine alone. Say, divide up a little, young man.

—By some means we omitted to mente mention the burglary at Father Young's residence at this place, week before last, while he was absent at Garrett. A boy saw tramps in the house and gave the alarm, when a traveling man on his way to the dept, went for them firing several shots which was returned by the burglars as they made off and escaped. This is the second time the house has been entered by tramps. They got nothing for their pains.

Fire—Some person for pure cussedness recently set fire to C. C. Shaffers's house, a few miles east of town. The house was not occupied and was not worth more than a million dollars, but there was a large lot of new flooring in the loft which was as "good as the wheat" Crist. intended to build on his farm this summer but has given it up now.

—We learn from Mr. Wheelock that the bridge company with which he is connected, will open a bridge yard at this place perhaps near the stave factory, for the construction of bridges, employing about twenty five hands. This company now have a large amount of work on hand, and as Auburn offers most excellent advantages in railroad facilities, they have concluded to manufacture them here. We hope its location here will be mutually beneficial to all conserned.

—The cold icy hand of death has again fell upon one of the fairest of the fair. Miss Lizzie Dugan, always recognized as being one of our most beautiful young ladies, died last Sabbath morn after a short illness of a peculiar disease attacking the liver, kidneys and brain. Lizzie had engaged to teach school at the Junction and during her illness fretted continually at the delay which it caused. The school will go on, but the expected teacher has gone up higher, leaving her late home lonely and desolate. All sympathize with the afflicted family.

—W. J. Walsworth, the Republican candidate for Trustee, is one of the oldest citizens of the township, and fills the bill exactly for a careful, economical and judicious officer. He serv'ed last year as township assessor, to the entire acceptance of the tax-payers of the township; and unless the Democrats nominate a much better candidate than they are likely to, there should be no question concerning his election.—Press.

We know nothing derogatory to the character of Mr. Walsworth, but we must claim for our candidate for trustee all th Press has for Mr. W. as to competency and efficiency. In fact we are agreeably disappointed in the nomination of a candidate much better than we were likely to put in the field. Mr. S. Kutzner is in every way worthy of the support of all good citizens.

We take occasion to say that he who invests in the cheap buggies now being sold at auction over the country, will stand a good chance of being bit. They may sell a good one here and there, but it is only done, to make a victim. We would advise all our friends who intend purchasing buggies to pass by all snide concerns of that kind. We have good manufactories of this kind in Auburn, and conducted by men of honor, who will sell you a good article for what it is worth and warrant it to be as represented. They are the men you should patronize. Men who live in your own community and do a fair honorable business, and who would scorn to take advantage of you. Buy at home and help promote the interests of your own section. When any one offers you a new top buggy for $60 on six months time, you may bet your bottom dollar that it is a fraud. They are entirely too cheap in one sense of the word and too dear in the other.

—The season of coughs and colds is now upon us. Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is the greatest specific of the day. Call at the drug store and try a bottle of it. Only 25 cents a bottle. Sold in all drug store.

The Versatile Burdette.

We cannot remember when we have passed a more enjoyable evening, than that of last Monday, listening to the versatile Burdette, the humorous editor of the Burlington Hawkeye. The audience might have been larger, but the interest could not have been more deep, or the appreciation and applause more hearty and timely responsive. It is something to know when to laugh heartily at a humorous lecture, and we feel that the audience caught it with a quick perception. Of course, there are some who did not see much fun about it while others at their side were convulsed with the good things that fell so easily and fluently from the speakers' lips. The style of the discourse was something like his items, a wonderful faculty of qualifying statements, and deducing humor from the prosiest of facts. At times a burst of the finest sentiment and pathos caught every ear, to be rounded down into an expression, which we have not the language to convey. With a little more voice Mr. B. would be one of the finest and most popular lecturers in the country.

We are obliged to Mr. Burdette for a copy of his book, "The Rise and Fall of the Moustache," which he so generously left upon our table. It will serve to remind us of as genial, accomplished and handsome a gentleman, as it has been our lot to meet. Thanks.

Garrett, Ind. March, 27 '78.

—Editor Courier—It may not be generally known that this man, O. C. Clark is the most arrant demagogue in the county. When the question of dividing the townships in order to create the one now known as Keyser, came up, this same Clark, fearing that it would increase the majority in this county, and he being on the ticket, done all he could to impede that consummation. He was given a petition to circulate, to which several names had been signed, and he purposely lost it that his ends might be secured. Now he prates about the interest of Garrett, and is working up his demagogery by making a blow about the road to Corunna, and is cavorting around with considerable gusto and is determined the people shall see how much interested he is in the road project. Clark it very thin, and can fill the calling of a demagogue better than anything else. Let the Democratic voters stand by their ticket. Mr. Teeters has more good sense and sound judgment than a dozen such Clarks, and he will labor for the interests of Garrett as zealously and much more effectually. If Mr. Clark is so anxious about the road, why did he not go to work a year ago, and not wait until he wanted a little office before he began to agitate the matter. Perhaps he wants to make it a pack horse on which to ride into office. Democrats will do well to silence such duplicity.

Mr. Teeters will not go to Kendallville, and because he gets things a few cents cheaper, come home and advertise the place to his neighbor, and advise them to go there with their patronage. He will labor for the whole interests of his township, Garrett and all.

—The Democrats of Keyser-tp met in Chicago House Hall last Saturday, at 2 oclock p. m. B. D. Thomas being called to the chair, and E. D. Bryant as Secretary, the following ticket was nominated: For Trustee, W. Teeters; Justice of the Peace, John Grube; Assessor, Alex. McClure; Constables, C. Young, and Homer Link. It is not necessary to take up any time in praise of these gentlemen, as they are old settlers, and well known to the citizens of Keyser township. Suffice to say we are going to elect them on Monday next.

—There was considerable of excitement here last week, in regard to moving a house. To the astonishment of many last Monday morning, a house was standing in the middle of King-st, a little west of Cowan-st., which had been moved out some time during Sunday night. It appears that the house is in dispute, was built by one Seipe, on a lot which he had bought of W. Cowan, and as Seipe did not come up to the agreement with Cowan, Cowan rented and took possession of the lot as his property. Cowan lives at Columbus, O., and was telegraphed to by some of his friends here, that the house was moved off his lot, and he arrived here Monday night on No. 8 train, at 11:30. Next day all the parties went to Auburn in search of counsel, and came back with the assurance from the learned and wise Jurists of that burg that they were all right, and had a legal claim on the building. Cowan replevyed the house, had it moved back on the lot, and now the case will be decided by law. This is an individual affair, the Land and Improvement Co. is in no way connected with it.

—It is rumored that Messrs O. J. Powell and J. W. Frederick are about opening an "Intelligence Office."

—Last Saturday was pay day, and in the evening quite a crowd assembled at J. R. Prouty's Saloon, to witness the graceful steps of a noted "clog-dancer," who performed there that eve. Among the rest was a cripple, who has been seen on our streets for the last few days, perched on a pair of wooden pedestals. He appeared to enjoy the sport hugely, and it is said that after he retired, he kept his room mate awake all night by exclaiming every few minutes, "Fire! Fire!"—cause, night-mare or snakes in the boots.

—There has been a very good literary society at Cedar Creek. It will close with an exhibition on Tuesday night, April 2nd.

—There was a school meeting at school house No. 2 last Saturday evening. Miss Callie Whetsel was chosen teacher.

—We are informed Squire Harvy, W. L. Work and Wm Merica attended the caucus at Garrett last Saturday, and they speak well of the nomiuations.

—Joseph Rectenwaldt is talking of trading his fine team of horses for Texas land. He wants two sections of land for the team, and that near a good market. Joe thinks he can trade and take his land near Austin or Galveston.

—Our Docter has had a very bad attack of Liver chills. He went to Garrett on Friday, and thought he would get a chill, so he took a few doses of liver syrup, such as he thought would be good for his stomach and liver, then he got a bottle filled and started home, but he unfortunately let his medicine fall, and when he went to get off his horse, he forgot to take his right foot out of the stirrup, so he came down on his head, but Kitty stood still until he could get right end up. He then went home, and the next day thought he needed more medicine, so he sent for a pint with Dave, that made him feel better until evening, then he thought he would go to Garrett himself and get some more medicine. So he went and there had a chill that was worse than before, it was so severe that it shook him off of his horse, and he lost his cap and horse, but fortunately both have been found, and he says this is the last, for he will guard against those chills.

To the Farmers of DeKalb County.

We desire to call the special attention of farmers to the fact that a mutual or home insurance company has been started in this county. Although several attempts have been made to start an association in this county, in which farmers agree to pay each others losses, none has been carried out till the present. The farmers of this association are men of high respectibility. Among them are Wm. Cornell, Jacob Miller, Edmund Freeman, Perry Fitch, and others.

They now offer you the rules and regulations they have adopted, and hope to meet your approval and patronage. Here are some of the advantages of such a company:

1. There is no speculation in such an association.
2. You give no notes or bonds.
3. Your insurance costs nothing unless there is a loss, in which case you pay your proportion.
4. They will not insure in cities or towns.
5. You have a voice in the election of all officers
6. The constitution can be adopted to your wants.
7. Such a company cannot break, there is nothing to break.
8. You do not send your money out of the county.
9. You need not renew your policy every three or five years.
10. Should you be a looser, it would be to no one's interest to cheat you out of your insurance.
11. The costs of insuring in this way are very light. A good estimate of the average costs can be found in this way: Suppose the township in which you live had been organized in this way for the last 25 years, and each farmer in the township averaged 100 acres, there would be 220 farmers in each township. Now, count up all the loss you can think of, outside of cities and towns, and not including mills, shops, &c., for the last 25 years, divide this amount by 220, and you have the whole cost of each member for 25 years, and divide this by 25 and you have the average yearly cost. You will be surprised to fine it will scarcely average one dollar a year. Call at the office of the Courier and get a copy of the rules and regulations.

Nobody should go to church, or public meeting, hacking away and disturbing the preacher or orator with their cough. Use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup at once; it only costs 25 cents a bottle. At F. E. Davenport's.

SEGOVIA AND MADRID.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

It sings to me in sunshine,
  It whispers all night long;
My heartache like an echo
  Repeats the wistful song:
Only a quaint old love-lilt,
  Wherein my life lies hid:
"My body is in Segovia,
  But my soul is in Madrid."

I dream and wake and wonder,
  For dream and day are one,
Alight with vanished faces,
  And days forever done.
They smile and shine around me,
  As long ago they did,
For my body is in Segovia,
  But my soul is in Madrid.

Through inland hills and forests
  I hear the ocean breeze,
The creak of straining cordage,
  The rush of mighty seas,
The lift of angry billows
  Through which a swift keel slid,
For my body is in Segovia,
  But my soul is in Madrid.

Oh, fair-haired little darling,
  Who bore my heart away,
A wide and woful ocean
  Between us roars to-day;
Yet I am close beside you,
  Though time and space forbid;
My body is in Segovia,
  But my soul is in Madrid.

If I were once in heaven,
  There would be no more sea;
My heart would cease to wander,
  My sorrows cease to be;
My sad eyes sleep forever,
  In dust and daisies hid,
And my body leave Segovia—
  Would my soul forget Madrid?

—Harper's Magazine for April.

HIS LANDLADY'S DAUGHTER.

"Yes, Mr. McGovern, she is coming home to-morrow."

"No? Really—ah! I mean—exactly—yes!"

"Ah, Mr. McGovern, if you only knew how I've toiled and slaved and pinched that that girl could have an education! I never had no learning myself."

"Precisely—just so."

"And I made up my mind that Annie should be a lady, and she is, sir, she is——"

"Certainly—no doubt——. Really, the fact is—would you mind?—I am very busy."

Now the fact was that Mr. McGovern was determined not to take the slightest interest in the world in his landlady's daughter. And at this moment he was also engaged upon a piece of work that not only absorbed all his energies, but apparently presented difficulties he was not likely to overcome.

The case lay just here. Mr. McGovern, salesman and commercial traveler for a large dry-goods house, had recently made the acquaintance in an adjacent town, not as large, but fancying itself quite as important, as New York, of a young lady who had suddenly inspired him with the exaggerated sentiment we commonly call love. At least he thought so. And now the problem lay, how to awaken a corresponding emotion in the heart of the fair being to whom he felt anxious and desirous to offer the devotion of a lifetime. If he had been rich he might have overwhelmed her with bouquets such as can only be produced by metropolitan florists. But he was not rich. On the other hand, if, as he expressed it to himself, he "had been one of those newspaper chaps, who are always saying things and writing things, you know, and walk into a girl's heart when they haven't even a respectable pair of boots, or a shilling to get their hair cut," even then he might have done something. But as it was, what could he do?

Finally an idea occurred to him. Brilliant in epigram he was not, and certainly could never hope to be; but somebody had surely once said that "genius is only indomitable perseverance," and there was the hare and tortoise, and the busy bee, and there was no knowing but that if he gave a month to it he might yet manage to get up something she would like to read—he could certainly write as good a business letter as any fellow in the office. But then it ought to be in rhyme. And another difficulty presented itself. Her name was Arabella, and what on earth would rhyme with Arabella? Yet Petrarch had certainly been in the same scrape; there isn't a word in the language that ends like Laura. But Petrarch wrote Italian. Ha! Italian—that was the thing. But then he didn't know Italian, neither did Arabella, and as for attempting to deny that fellows wrote poetry to their girls in English—oh, dear me! no, that was too absurd.

So he set valiantly at work, and on the morning when Mrs. Gibson invaded his sanctum to announce her daughter's expected return, he had got just this far:

Midst roses fair, oh! lovely Arabella—

Stop! there was cellar. But how to work it in? And here Mr. McGovern was met by a difficulty that has oppressed many a greater poet.

His landlady had broken the chain of inspiration; besides, it was 9 o'clock; he couldn't do better than go to the office, for there was a fresh consignment of goods that he was expected to dispose of. In the evening he would go out and call upon Arabella; which he did, and at midnight he returned to his grimy apartment on Mrs. Gibson's third floor, more in love than ever.

But on the following evening, when he came home from the office, he remembered Mrs. Gibson's announcement, and at the tea table he looked for the young lady in question. Not that he cared what she looked like, but then—"Hum! not a pretty girl by any means!" but, somehow, he looked again. There she sat, a soft little body in gray merino dress, with a pair of very pretty hands placidly folded in her lap. What was the impression she gave him? Ha! he didn't know. Now he had it; she seemed so very, very—funny word, wasn't it—clean, that was it. Perhaps it was the awful grime of Mrs. Gibson's front basement did it. Contrast is everything, you know. But ah! she wasn't like the divine, the beautiful—

"Mr. McGovern, will you have another cup of tea?"

My! what a sweet voice!

Now what was it made the old boarding-house day by day so much less intolerable than it used to be? Perhaps it was the dust. Somehow the universal dust had ceased to assert itself as formerly, and became conspicuous by its absence. Everything in Mr. McGovern's room by some magic got into its right place. Inanimate things may be totally depraved, but, somehow, his showed an evidence of reform that argued the existence of saving grace somewhere. Where on earth were the holes in his stockings! He missed them. Certainly a hole in one's stockings is more honored in the breach than in the observance; but what a peculiar experience for a clerk in a boarding-house!

One day Mr. McGovern happened to remember what his landlady had said to him about her daughter's "edication." (Poor woman! he didn't wonder some big words bothered her; every now and then he came across one that puzzled him.) But he must get a safe subject. How would politics do? Here he was tolerably strong himself.

It is a humiliating confession to make regarding one's hero, but no sooner had Clarence McGovern begun to talk politics with Annie than he speedily made up his mind that the administration of our republican Government was the one thing on earth that he knew nothing about. How humiliating it was! The same thing over again. "If you ain't a rich man or a newspaper chap, what can you do with a girl? They get their heads packed full of things at school that a fellow who's got his living to earn can't know anything about, and if you haven't got any money—this world is a beastly hole!" concluded Clarence McGovern; and in that statement he embodied the sentiments of many a wiser man.

But in this case it was too bad. Now with Arabella, rich, beautiful, and well-born, it was different; but to be extinguished by Mrs. Gibson's daughter! he, Clarence McGovern—abominable! Was he not a rising man, and were there not indications of good birth in his very features and in his very name? To be sure, he hated to attempt tracing his lineage; it would bolt up against a tailor's shop in the Bowery in such an aggravating matter. But clearly names sprung from something. Why should his ancestors be named McGovern if they never had anything to govern?—impossible! But such a plebeian name as Gibson—bah!

And there was something very delightful in Annie's society when he kept out of deep waters; and when one day she asked him, very sweetly, "Who is Arabella?" Mr. McGovern felt that his cup of happiness was full. With Arabella for a sweetheart, and Annie for a confidante, what man could want more? The flood-gates of his soul were opened. He certainly lacked the eloquence of that much-to-be-envied newspaper chap; but Annie was sympathetic, and she got a notion of his longings, his doubts, his aspirations, quite as correct as if they had been more elegantly expressed. Then came the story of the sonnet that wouldn't allow itself to be written, and the stupid, uncontrollable, contumacious behavior of that awful polysyllable Arabella.

"Don't put it at the end of a line," suggested Annie. "Get over it at once and have it out of the way."

"Capital!" said Mr. M'Govern. "Could you, Miss Annie, give me an idea, a suggestion, a line or two, perhaps?"

"What style will you have it in?"

"Well, something a little like Tennyson, with a dash of Shelley, just a trifle of Swinburne possibly." He had evidently been reading up.

"How would this do?" suggested the accommodating Annie, with a twinkle in her eye that somehow made Mr. McGovern blush to the roots of his hair:

"Arabella, gaze upon me
  With thy soft and gentle eyes,
See the wrong that thou hast done me;
  All my troubled spirit lies
    Fainting with its deep emotion,
    Pulseless as a tropic ocean,
    And I seem as one who lieth
    Low upon his couch and dieth."

"Beautiful! Go on."

Now the result of all this was that within the next three weeks Miss Arabella received no less than nineteen love poems, all signed "Clarence McGovern" in that gentleman's best style, with a flourish underneath at least four inches long.

But somehow this partnership in poetry did not seem to agree with Annie, and before long she announced her intention to visit a friend in the country. She "needed a change," she said.

Curiously now the holes in Mr. McGovern's stockings began to reappear; the dust resumed its normal sway, and the only line of poetry the young man could remember was

Thou wilt come no more, gentle Annie, which he whistled so lugubriously that one morning, out of pure sympathy, Mrs. Gibson put her head inside the door and whispered, consolingly:

"Lor' bless you, yes, she will, Mr. McGovern; she's only gone for a month."

Then Clarence began to wonder where his thoughts had been straying; and, as poetical effusions were no longer a possibility, he resolved to see Arabella at once and put his fate to the touch, and win or lose it all.

It was a night of wind and rain and sleet as Mr. McGovern left the station and approached the Lockwood mansion. Miss Arabella would see him in a few moments, and in the meantime would he wait in the library? Fancying himself in solitude, he selected the easiest chair, and was just composing his address to the fair object of his affections, when a small voice appealed to him pathetically:

"Pleathe, thir, thith ith too thick, it won't twitht."

"What is it, my child?" inquired Clarence, affectionately, seating the small petitioner on his knee.

"I'th makin' lighterth. Thithter Bella gave me all thith white paper. I wanted new but she theid it wath good enough for me; there wath nothing on it but some thilly vertheth that big fool—she thaid hith name, but I forget—had written to her. Don't pinch me tho; I'll theream."

O agonies of unrequited affection! There curling gracefully around a lamplighter, destined perhaps to light some one of his rival's cigars, were the tender lines:

"Arabella, gaze upon me
  With thy soft and gentle eyes."

The rest was gone, unless they might be discovered on the vicious morsel of paper that "wouldn't twitht."

In less than two minutes Mr. McGovern was in the street. Oh, the dismal, dreary, sleeting iniquity of that night! Where was the station? It had disappeared. Down in torrents came the rain, freezing as it fell; slippery, and more slippery, and more slippery grew the pavement; only a cat or some animal with claws could have maintained a systematic perpendicular. Suddenly down went Mr. McGovern. Perhaps it was a blessing, for the sudden application of cold ice to the back of his head restored his consciousness of where he was, and he turned toward the railway station, having in his excitement wandered half a mile in the opposite direction.

Had that partial bath suddenly cooled his passion? Clarence could not have told, but somehow he did not feel as miserable as he had expected, only very wet, and the ride home seemed interminably long.

Two or three days passed by, and even yet Mr. McGovern was in a remarkably serene frame of mind for a disappointed lover. A week passed away, when suddenly he began to feel a serious distress in his left ankle. This struck him at once as peculiar, as, according to all precedent, the anguish should have proceeded direct from his heart.

But pretty soon the invisible tweezers of a most malignant imp began to wrench him in the knee. Before long the grip was upon his arm; thence it stuck to his hip; and, utterly in the power of the enemy, Mr. McGovern awoke one morning and found himself—not like the Philistines, dead—but unable to move a limb, and helpless before the eyes of Kitty, the waitress, who, late in the morning, poked her head into the room and inquired if he was ever going to get up.

"Get up?" no! Not for weeks upon weeks did Mr. McGovern rise from his bed. They blistered him, they poulticed him, they drugged him; but all to no effect. The fever would have its own way in spite of the whole medical pharmacopœia. First of all they placed him in charge of a monstrous male nurse, who Clarence, in his impotent fury, mentally denominated a "great hulking brute," but without whose assistance the unfortunate victim of his attentions could not even turn in bed. How he grew to hate the horrible creature who stood over him day and night! Even Mrs. Gibson's creaking boots and high-pitched voice became a blessing when, in the intervals of her domestic labors, she looked in upon the sufferer. But Annie—if he could only have Annie! Finally, in his semi-delirium he began to call aloud for her; and Mrs. Gibson, whether out of the motherliness of her own heart, or because she had her own ideas about Annie and this thriving young dry-goods salesman—too much cannot be expected of landladies with marriageable daughters—promised him that Annie should be sent for.

At last she came; and whether the strength of the enemy was spent, or whether he did not dare apply the freezing, burning implements of torture in Annie's gentle presence, the devil of rheumatism was exorcised, and peace began to reign.

Mr. McGovern began to fancy that he had elapsed in paradise, such was the glory of convalescence. And Annie was everywhere. Once more the dust disappeared, and Clarence himself witnessed the magical gestures through which it suffered annihilation; he also saw the very process by which all holes depart from a stocking, save the one by which the foot enters it. Annie's fair fingers, that only wrote poetry under compulsion, seemed to luxuriate in the composition of broths and soups and jellies; and never, thought the invalid, did they appear to such advantage as when playing round that provoking stop-cock with which they docked his rations of champagne.

And then, while the fresh air of the springtime stole in through the flowers that Annie had placed in the window, and Mr. McGovern lolled upon the sofa in all the enjoyment of valetudinarian luxury, a great strife arose in his mind. He was thinking—of Annie? No; of Mrs. Gibson. Could he, could he?—the blood of the McGovern's!

But when Annie came once more, and her little hands were busy around his refractory pillows, he found he could; and he did.

"Annie, Annie, I love you."

"And Arabella?"

It was a cruel blow, and the spirit of the invalid was roused. Excitement began to gleam in the great hollow eyes, and he had just time to ejaculate, "Confound her!" when Annie's small hand was over his mouth, and Annie's soft voice reiterated the doctor's injunction to "keep quiet." Then in a meek voice, "Say yes; won't you, Annie?"

"I haven't been asked anything."

"Then put your arm under my head, and let me go to sleep. If you don't, I'll go into a rage and make myself sick."

Annie did as she was bid.

Some two hours afterward, when Mr. McGovern condescended to awake, his first distinct articulation was, "And Annie, a-a-about your mother?"

Annie withdrew her arm, and began to look severe. "Not a word about mother. There isn't such a cook in the universe."

"No; that is true." And sundry visions of the day when he had an appetite began to rise before Mr. McGovern's eyes. "Annie, you are right. She shall live with us."

And Annie, who remembered what she had suffered for Arabella, replaced her arm, and, like a true woman, answered, "Of course."—Harper's Weekly.

How to Consume Soup.

"Dear Mr. Hawk-Eye, should one take one's soup from the side or the end of the spoon? Edward." Oh, well, if you've got so stuck up and proud that you have to eat with a spoon, we don't suppose it makes any difference, but we should think you would have enough reverence for the good old days and the grand simplicity of the better times, and take your soup as your father did; blow it until it is cold, then lift the plate with both hands and empty it by steady and long-continued suction, making a flipping sound with your lips at the conclusion of the services to indicate to the waiter that you are ready for the next course. It is these new-fangled ideas that are driving the old simplicity and the old purity out of style and existence, and crowding society to the edge of the awful precipice that leans and totters in crumbling weakness over the dark and fathomless abyss of corruption and destruction.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

TWO IRISHMEN were proceeding in company to a jail-yard to witness an execution, when one said to the other: "I say, Pat, where wud yes be if the hangman had his dues?" "Begorra," said Pat, "I jist be walkin' down this shtreet alone."

A Humorist on the Dueling Field.

There is one figure that stands out refreshingly cool and unique during these troublous times. This was John M. Dooly, the man who announced that he would not fight under any circumstances. He was probably the most brilliant man produced in that era, prolific of giants. He was the peer of Crawford on any field, and his superior in the legal forum. His abilities were transcendent, and his failure to make a national reputation arose doubtless from no other cause than his refusal to fight on any and all occasions. A non-combatant could not hold his head up in those turbulent times. Dooly had the most delicious humor, and a sharp tongue withal. He was continually getting into trouble because of his satirical sayings. He was perfectly fearless of speech. Judge Graham once threatened to chastise him. Dooly replied: "You can do so if you like. You will get no credit for it, however. Anybody can do it, and a great many have done it." He was once knocked down by a gentleman that he had introduced as the inferior Judge of the inferior court of the inferior county of Lincoln. He called lustily on the spectators for help, and, when rescued from his antagonist, rubbed his head and remarked dryly: "Well that is the forty-second fight I have been engaged in, and, if I ever got the best of a single one, I do not now remember it." Before Dooly's peace proclivities were fully known he was challenged to mortal combat by a Mr. Tate, who came to the field with Mr. W. H. Crawford as his second. Dooly accepted the challenge. Tate had lost a leg and wore a wooden one. When he and his friend reached the field they found Dooly alone, sitting on a stump.

"Where is your friend?" asked Crawford, in some surprise.

"He is in the woods, sir."

"And will be present in a moment, sir, I suppose?" said Crawford.

"Yes, as soon as he can find a bee-gum."

"May I inquire what he wants with a bee-gum?"

"Why, I want to put my leg in it. Do you suppose I can afford to risk my leg of flesh against Tate's leg of wood? If I hit his leg, he will get another to-morrow, and peg away as usual. If he hits mine, it may kill me or compel me to stump it like him for the balance of my life. No, sir; I must have a gum. Then I will be just as much wood as he is, and we will be on equal terms."

"I understand you, Col. Dooly; you do not intend to fight."

"Why, really, Col. Crawford, I thought everybody knew that."

"Very well, sir; but remember, Colonel, your name in no enviable light will fill the column of a newspaper to-morrow."

"I assure you, my dear sir, I had rather fill every column in every newspaper in Georgia than one coffin."—H. W. Grady on Georgia Duels, in the Philadelphia Weekly Times.

The Size of the Globe.

Its size has been determined, I have no doubt, to within a very few miles, in what appears to us now a very simple manner. In the first place, every section of the earth is bounded approximately by a circle, and mathematicians divide all circles by 360 degrees. Hence, if we can measure accurately the 1-360th part of this great circle, and if, when we have got that measure out in miles, we multiply it by 360 we get the circumference of the earth, that is to say, the whole distance around it. Then by dividing this result by something a little over 3 (3.1416, the ratio of the circumference of the circle to its diameter) we find out how far it is from one side of the earth to the other. This gives us the diameter of the earth. As a result of a long series of observations, it has been found that a degree measures as near as possible on the average 69¼ miles. It can be stated in inches, but it is near enough for me to give as a first statement of result that it is about 69¼ miles; and if you take the trouble to multiply 69¼ miles, the average length of 1 degree, by 360 degrees, the number of degrees that there are all around the earth, you will find that the circumference is something like 25,000 miles, and therefore that the diameter of the earth is something like 8,000 miles. Mark well the words "on the average." In truth, the earth is flattened at the poles, so that the length of the degree varies from the pole to the equator; and hence the diameter in the equatorial plane is in excess of the diameter from pole to pole. These two diameters, expressed in feet, are as follows: Equatorial, 41,848,380; solar, 41,708,710.—J. Norman Lockyer, in Good Words.

A Few Juvenile Questions.

"What makes that noise?" asked a little boy on the train the other day. "The cars," answered his mother. "What for?" "Because they are moving." "What are they moving for?" "The engine makes them." "What engine?" "The engine in front." "What's it in front for?" "To pull the train." "What train?" "This one." "This car?" repeated the youngster, pointing to the one in which they sat. "Yes." "What does it pull for?" "The engineer makes it." "What engineer?" "The man on the engine." "What engine?" "The engine in front." "What is that in front for?" "I told you that before." "Told who what?" "Told you." "What for?" "O, be still; you are a nuisance." "What's a nuisance?" "A boy who asks too many questions." "Whose boy?" "My boy." "What questions?" The conductor came through just then and took up the tickets, and the train pulled up to the station before we could get all of the conversation. The last we heard, as the lady jerked the youngster off the platform, was "What conductor?"

MY EARTHLY LOVE.

BY FREDERIC R. MARVIN.

No dim and dreamy ghost I sing,
  Nor phantom floating in the air;
To one who treads the solid earth
  I send alike my song and prayer.
To perfect matter strong and sweet,
  The face and form of her I love;
The matchless speech and subtle breath,
  And eyelid trembling like a dove—
A dove within an early nest,
  Who hears the coming of her mate,
Or feels the kiss upon her breast,
  And chides him that he comes so late.

The matchless joy of sense I sing!
  The earthly joy of here and now;
Before no fading ghost I kneel—
  Before no distant future bow.
Go, little song, and seek the lips
  Of her who waits thee with a kiss;
And tell her, only in her arms
  Thy poet master dreams of bliss.
No angel seen by prophet eye,
  Nor shaped by art with peerless grace,
With feet that tread the azure sky,
  And roam the boundless fields of space,
Is half so true or sweetly fair
  As one who walks with me apart;
I lose me in her shining hair—
  She is the goddess of my heart.

O death, so like a stormy cloud
  Within a gentle summer sky,
Thou lonely phantom, sad to see,
  I will not fear thee, though I die!
Go, little song, to her I love,
  And tell her death is in the air;
It is his shadow on the world
  That makes the present moment fair.
We have one hour of life and love,
  And ages filled with silent sleep—
There is no time for faith to pray
  Nor time for sullen grief to weep.
Go, tell her if we love not now
  The life we live is only death,
And dust that have no joy in time,
  And only feed on bitter breath.

MY LUCK.

She had come to visit Nat's sister,
  And there I met her one night;
A cousin, I think, of the family,
  And a girl rather handsome and bright.
I remember we looked at an album;
  And I told her how much I could guess
Of one's character just from a picture;
  "Now witness," said I, "my success.
Here's a photograph of a young maiden,
  Both pretty and modest and true."
She fairly colored with pleasure;
  "Why that's," she exclaimed, "sister Sue!"
"But here," I continued, elated,
  "Is the worst-looking fellow thus far;
A stupid, old, senseless curmudgeon."
  She simply said, "That's my papa."

Encouragement for the Feeble.

Debility, whether it be inherent, or caused by overtaxed strength, or protracted illness, has a most depressing influence upon the mind, breeding an abject melancholy nearly akin to despair, and enforcing the abandonment of cherished projects and high hopes. Happily, the enfeebled system, even in extreme cases, is susceptible of invigoration. It is proved by incontrovertible evidence that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an unfailing strengthener of the weak, and that, in addition to vitalizing the physical organization, it establishes regularity among those organs upon whose efficient discharge of the duties imposed upon them by nature continued vigor and health depend. Thousands of instances might be cited to show the regenerating influence of this health-giving agent in cases of debility, liver disease, dyspepsia, nervous ailments, constipation, intermittent fever, urinary and uterine troubles, gout and rheumatism, and other maladies.

A Campaign Slander.

When Dr. R. V. Pierce was a candidate for State Senator his political opponents published a pretended analysis of his popular medicines, hoping thereby to prejudice the people against him. His election by an overwhelming majority severely rebuked his traducers, who sought to impeach his business integrity. No notice would have been taken of these campaign lies were it not that some of his enemies (and every successful business man has his full quota of envious rivals) are republishing these bogus analyses. Numerous and most absurd formulas have been published, purporting to come from high authority; and it is a significant fact that no two have been at all alike—conclusively proving the dishonesty of their authors.

False Economy.

Is it true economy to use cheap, adulterated baking powder, which is highly injurious to health, merely because it is cheap? Common sense and experience say no! DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER, which has been well known for twenty years as an absolutely pure, wholesome, and in every respect reliable article, is within the reach of all those who practice true economy in this respect.

THE PHONOGRAPH.

Description of the New Talking Machine—The Most Wonderful Invention of the Age.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune at New York has been investigating the wonderful invention of Mr. Thomas A. Edison, called the phonograph. We copy a description of this latest electrical machine:

A plain standard supports a rod perhaps two and a half feet long, with a balance wheel at one end and a crank at the other. Midway between wheel and rod is a brass cylinder, with a running grove of finely cut lines. An arm swinging in front of the cylinder holds the phonograph. This consists simply of a thin plate of metal, like that used by photographers, set in a rubber mouthpiece. A delicate steel needle, with ends not pointed, but blunt like those of a screwdriver, touches the plate with one extremity, and is brought to bear lightly upon the grooved cylinder with the other. The balance of this needle is exquisitely fine, so that it responds to the slightest vibration. Now, the cylinder is covered with a sheet of tin-foil, and the phonograph, adjusted carefully in relation to the foil recording-sheet, is ready to be talked to. The volume of sound reproduced is in direct ratio to that of the original speaker, and the laws of sound as to bass and soprano clearness are fully manifested. It is desirable that the exhibitor possess good lungs and a clear tone, though the phonograph is sure to bring out whatever is confided to it, not hesitating to crow, whistle, sing, or shriek. Turning the crank with such uniformity as practice has taught him, the operator puts his mouth to the rubber, and pours whatever of wit or fancy his brain and memory yield him into the receiver.

Following the vibrations of the plate, the needle dances up and down, dotting the tin-foil with points so delicate that some of them are almost beyond microscopic discovery. Others, where the sound was peculiarly strong, are pricked quite plainly through the foil. Then the needle is removed, the cylinder is reversed till the beginning of the conversation rests beneath the point, a common tin resounding-tube is fastened to the disk, and it is the turn of the phonograph to talk. The crank is moved as before, and the contents of the foil sheet are faithfully delivered back to their originator, with a tone somewhat metallic and ventriloquistic, but with no loss of inflection or intensity. The effect upon listeners may be imagined. One effect is to draw a throng of them from morning till night. A gentleman standing near me remarked that the invention of such a machine 100 years ago would have cost the inventor his head, and, indeed, perhaps it would, since human ingenuity was then considered by many to be altogether too ingenious and profane.

The theory of the reproduction is, of course, as plain and simple as that of the recording; but the wonder of it remains nevertheless. When the needle-point is run over the grooves, by catching in the delicate indentations which were previously made by it, it causes a vibration of the metal plate corresponding exactly to that produced by the waves of sound, though more feeble.

The words come back as full and clear as they were given to it, save the medium reduction in power. Pieces of rubber are employed to prevent too rapid vibration. By turning the crank slowly enough, the catching of the needle may be detected. As the sounds of words are merely variations of vibration, the phonograph needle is as capable as the human throat to produce the requisite variations.

The instruments now exhibited are themselves experiments, and by no means what Mr. Edison proposes to show as the complete product of his idea. The idea was presented to him by his experiments with the telephone, which has a mouthpiece and needle similar to those of the phonograph. His finger happening to rest on the telephone needle, he felt it pricking him with considerable force. It at once occurred to him that, if the vibrations were forcible enough to make indentations on a metal surface, sounds and speech could be recorded and preserved. His efforts were attended with an almost unexpected success, and the phonograph appears as one of the marvels of this inventive age.

Mr. Edison is now engaged in building a perfected instrument at his factory at Menlo Park, N. J. Running the cylinder by steam, and thus securing a regular rate of speed, the sounds are reproduced with great accuracy. He is also working at the process of electrotyping the record sheets, thus transferring them to a permanent form. The tin-foil is capable of retaining the dots indefinitely, but after being run over half a dozen times it shows a wear, and does not give up its contents with the same force or clearness. Electrotype plates would allow long and frequent usage.

The phonograph does not bottle music, but its inventor claims that it records it with perfect accuracy, just as it does speech. Hence, if a prima donna sing into the receiver with full volume, and the steel plate be taken from the foil proof, the music will have a permanent power of reproduction, or a permanent possibility to be reproduced by the phonograph. Of course, to prevent flats, sharps and unfortunate naturals, the cylinder must be revolved at precisely the same rate of speed in producing as it was in the original taking of the impression. The slightest deviation in this regard would involve utter ruin of effect, and would result in such discord as not infrequently gets the better of some of our theatrical orchestras. To make sure of proper rotation, it is proposed to run the cylinder by machinery as delicate and accurate as that of the finest clocks. The capacity of the phonograph's voice being called in question, Mr. Edison said he had already, by means of proper resounding apparatus, made an audience of 1,500 persons distinctly and satisfactorily hear the phonographic utterances.

He added that one of the Kiralfy brothers, seeing the money in a decided novelty, had made a proposition to send an agent to Europe with a perfected instrument, for the purpose of obtaining operatic music-plates. It was the idea to have the agent engage all the chief artists in Europe to sing into the phonograph their favorite solos. When the collection was completed, American audiences could enjoy hearing, in concert, through this triumph of human ingenuity, the finest singers in the world, many of whom never have or will get to our shores. Kiralfy was enthusiastic respecting the enterprise, and there was little question of its undertaking.

OWEN ADKINS.

A Remarkable Character.

The story of a most remarkable character, who has lived the life of a Mormon for sixty-six years in a dreary valley of Pittsylvania county, Va., between Turkey Cock mountain and Piney peak, and who to-day, at the age of 96, retains nearly all the wonderful powers of his youth, has just come to light. "Old Man Owen Adkins," as he is now familiarly called, although he came of vulgar and illiterate parents, and himself grew up without the least education, yet developed early in life some very decided traits of character, which raised him far above the level of his surroundings. Though small in stature, he was the "strongest boy in the mountains," and even before he was 10 years old supported his father's large family by engaging in and winning wrestling and running matches on which his father bet freely. At the age of 12, the young champion ran five miles against time in twenty-six minutes, and won a wager of $50. About this time, too, while hunting, in which pursuit he took great delight, he had a terrible encounter with a black bear, in which by his self-possession and courage alone he saved his life. Having discharged his rifle ineffectually, he had only his jack-knife left with which to defend himself, and with this he cut his bearship's jugular vein, even after the latter had taken him into his deadly embrace. This exploit gave the young hero great prestige in all the country around.

In 1805, in his 23d year, he married, and settled within 100 yards of his birthplace, in the same house which he now occupies, and for five years his domestic life was a scene of perfect conjugal happiness. But when about 30, the great athlete took it into his head that he wanted more than one wife, and in spite of the protests of his devoted companion, and long before Joseph Smith proclaimed the polygamous doctrine of Mormonism in this country, this untutored child of nature, acting on impulse, took to himself three concubines, for each of whom he built comfortable houses within a mile of his own residence. His wife hated these concubines as only an aggrieved woman can hate, and until her death, which occurred twenty years later, there was no peace in the family of Adkins. She gave birth to nineteen children, all of whom are still living, and her successor, as the polygamist's lawful wife, bore five others. On the latter's death he did not again marry, but continued to support four concubines, who bore him forty-six children, making a total of seventy, all but four of whom still survive, and reside in the immediate vicinity of their birthplace, which was come to be called Adkintown. Nearly all of the children are married and have raised large families, and it is estimated that the old man's offspring number 550.

Of course the political influence of so large a family in the community, even if their votes alone were considered, is immense, and, as Adkins went with no party constantly, but always threw his influence for his personal friends, he was much cultivated by the politicians. In ante-bellum days the influence of Adkins always decided the elections in Pittsylvania county, but since the war the old man has lost his interest in things political, as well as, to some extent, in horse-racing, card-playing, and fox-hunting, which, in the prime of his life, occupied much of his time. Probably the most remarkable feat of his life was accomplished in 1834, when he was 62 years old. He ran a race of eleven miles, on the country turnpike, against a young man, and easily won, making the distance in forty-one minutes, according to a report published at the time, though the old man avers that it was really fifty-eight.

Adkin's personal appearance is very striking. He has a wide chest, well thrown out, and stands straight as an arrow. Rolling white hair flows down over his broad shoulders, reminding one strongly of "Rip Van Winkle." His forehead broad and intellectual, his blue eyes deep-set, his thin, finely-curved lips firmly shut, give him a noble and impressive appearance. He has never been sick a day, his memory continues strong, and his powers of endurance are but little abated. He attributes his long life and good health to out-door exercise and wholesome food. He has never been addicted to stimulants. He is passing his declining days in peaceful contentment with his sole surviving concubine, who is devotedly attached to him.

The World's Borrowing.

A Belgian statistician has compiled a list showing that in 1877 there was borrowed in the various countries in the world $1,580,975,000 against $725,000,000 in 1876, and $330,000,000 in 1875. Of this enormous amount $1,154,650,000 was borrowed by Governments, national, State and municipal, and the balance by railway and industrial companies and institutions of credit. The excess of the world's borrowing last year over that of previous years was mainly due to the conversion loans of the United States. The French loans have amounted to $375,000,000, over two-thirds of which have been issued by railways and industrial companies. The large loans of Russia were paid chiefly in the paper money which the Government itself had issued.

A 6-YEAR-OLD, who was found putting himself outside of various good things at a rapid rate just after complaining of inward griping, explained to his wondering parent that he "didn't mean to leave any room for that stomach-ache."

THERE need be no idlers in the vast territory of the United States. Four hundred millions will not crowd the United States as much as 30,000,000 do France or England.

FOR THE LADIES.

Something About the Spring Fashions.

(From Harper's Bazar.)

Basques.—Basques are of simplest shapes, and are not elaborately trimmed. Some of them are genuine postilion basques, cut square behind and laid in flat pleats of the material, or else a cluster of satin or silk pleats is set in; these pleats do not come quite up to the waist line, but begin two or three inches below it, allowing the seams of the waist to come gracefully over the most tapering part.

Popular Suits.—For popular suits made for general wear, a new fabric called barege de Lux is much used. It is all wool, of light quality, more closely woven than the sleazy buntings of last summer, and so soft and flexible that it will not rumple or crackle. It is bought in dark seal brown, gray, beige, plum, black, moss green, and other solid colors, with a striped border in which white is introduced, and this trims the dress most effectively, requiring only buttons to complete it.

White Lawn, etc.—Ladies who make up their own white suits for summer will find excellent models in the Victoria lawn suits that are now trimmed with scarlet and navy blue embroidery. They have pleated basques with yokes, or else cut-away coats and vests, edged with a narrow scalloped frill, wrought with red or blue, or both together. The long over-skirts are of simple shape, with knife-pleated muslin, on which the colored embroidery falls, and a demi-train skirt merely trimmed with a deep kilt-pleating.

Combination Costumes.—Combination costumes remain in fashion. Out of fifty French dresses exhibited, those of black silk were the only dresses that were entirely of one material, and these were elaborately ornamented with jet, fringe, lace, and bows of satin ribbon. The combinations are of two materials of one shade, and also beautiful contrasts are shown by trimming bourettes and gauzes with silk or satin pipings of two or three oddly-blended colors. The newest combination dresses are less patchy looking than those lately in vogue, with alternate gores of different materials the whole length of the overdress. They now return to the simpler fashion first introduced of having the entire overdress of a lighter color, and the skirt of darker silk.

Spring Costumes.—The earliest importations of French costumes for the spring show few changes from the styles that are now in vogue. The clinging princesse dress remains the foundation for a variety of designs, all of which, when completed, have the princesse effect. Thus there are separate basques with overskirts, though the overskirt is now attached to the lower skirt; there are princesse polonaises showing the merest glimpse of the skirt beneath; and there are the still newer overdresses with basque and apron front and polonaise back; yet any one of these designs, when properly carried out, will closely resemble the princesse dresses that are made all in one piece. The only really distinctive style is that of the English cut-away coat with vest and a long overskirt; or else the short kilt skirt with scarf. There are also many very elaborate costumes with short skirts, usually finished as kilts, with slender polonaises or basques and aprons.

One Cent on the Dollar.

As an illustration of the spirit of the times was the following little family scene, when a bright 4-year-old little lady was imitating her elders by playing "making calls."

"Now, mamma, you be Mitheth Dones, an' I'll be Mitheth Smith, an tum and mate you a tall."

Mamma—"Very well, Mrs. Smith, I'm glad to see you; how do you do, and how are the children?"

Totty—"I'm twite well, I tank you, but the children has all dot the hoopin' toff."

Mamma—"I'm sorry to hear it. How many children have you, Mrs. Smith?"

Totty—"Oh, I has ten, an' dey is a gate tyal to me wif my housekeepin'."

Mamma—"They must be, indeed. But how does your husband, Mr. Smith, do?"

Totty—"He's very well, tank you; but he's had bad bithness and he hath failed."

Mamma—"I'm so sorry to hear that your husband has failed; but you haven't lost everything, Mrs. Smith, for I see you make calls in your own carriage."

Totty—"Oh, yes. I teep my tarriage. We has paid one cent on a dollar and doze right on."

The above is a fact.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

"RADIX," in one of his recent New York letters, makes a good point apropos of life insurance investigations and troubles generally, by calling attention to the fallacy of judging of the reliability of companies according to their bulk. Many such institutions seek to dazzle the public eye by printing their large gross assets in the heaviest type, and by laying great stress upon the nominal millions under their control to win confidence and prevent any close analysis of the whole statement. He points out the plain, but often forgotten fact that, even conceding the equally good quality of the assets of two companies, it is not necessarily the one with the most millions which is safest for the policy holder, but the one whose net surplus bears the largest ratio to its whole property. Judged by this sound and searching principle, "Radix" finds the Ætna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, to be one of the strongest, if not the very strongest, institution of the kind in the country. With a little over twenty-four millions of assets, it has about four and a quarter millions of clear surplus. The special commission appointed by the Legislature of Connecticut a year ago, to investigate all the insurance companies of that State, say of the Ætna that it is "not only solvent, but financially sound, and under the management of officers and directors of large experience, sound judgment, and unblemished character, and entitled to the entire confidence of policy holders and the public." Taking the above facts and the official indorsement together, it is evident that this writer's estimate of the Ætna is one that can be everywhere safely indorsed.

KANSAS FARMS AND FREE HOMES.

The Great Limestone Belt of Kansas.

The Attractive Region of the West.

By Major H. Inman.

The "Great Central Plains" are a geographical feature of the State of Kansas. Covered with a remarkably nutritious vegetation, for centuries they were an immense pasturage for countless herds of buffalo, antelope and other ruminating animals, whose habitat was the far-stretching green prairies that to-day form one of the most beautiful agricultural portions of the Mississippi Valley. Less than ten years ago this region was believed, by the mass of the people in the East, to be an unprofitable desert, but it is now the acknowledged garden of the Continent. This truly magnificent country can claim the most luxuriant soil of all the "Great West," and a climate that approaches perfection, at least. Dr. B. E. Fryer, one of the most eminent surgeons in the Army, and who was stationed for years at Fort Harker, four miles from the Town of Ellsworth, declared this to be the "most perfect climate in the world." The whole country is traversed by a series of constant streams, sweet and wholesome springs, and spring-fed pools. Delicious water is also always obtained in wells, by digging, at easily-accessible depths. It is already conceded that the United States is rapidly becoming the granary of the world, particularly in the production of wheat. Kansas, an Empire in itself, is taking the lead in the culture of this cereal, and in a short time will be acknowledged queen of all the States in the production of this great staple. The State, especially her peculiarly-wonderful fertile central area, comprised in what is now known as the "limestone belt," under the test of only a few years, has proved to the world the immense average its soil is capable of. Each year increases the limit of the wheat belt, as the frontier is pushed toward the mountains, within which are found the greatest possibilities, agriculturally.

It is a remarkable fact that nearly all the lands of the Kansas Pacific Railway are included in the limestone region under consideration, and that south of this limit, in that direction, it ceases altogether, and the country presents another geological formation, the soil of which is very sandy, and which, though at present, from fullness of its very primitiveness, is capable of producing good crops in seasons of abundant rainfall, lacks the inherent qualities of self-fertilization, and must rapidly deteriorate. In this particular the Smoky Hill Valley is immensely superior to the arenaceous lands of the region south, which is drained by the Arkansas and tributary streams. It is well known by every farmer that lime, in some of its combinations, constitutes the essential ingredient in all the more valuable grains and grasses. Its presence in the soil is consequently to be considered as a condition of fertility. It also acts as a constitutional ameliorant, of much power, and, when mixed with or underlying tough or viscid clay, it renders them friable, and consequently more susceptible to the action of atmospheric forces. Soil in which there is a due admixture of calcareous matter is not so liable to be injured or rendered plastic by an excess of moisture while under crop. The quality of the wheat raised in this great "limestone belt" is conceded, in all markets, to be the finest grade known. It produces the familiar brands of so-called Southern flour for which St. Louis is justly celebrated. This is easily accounted for, from the fact that the soil in which the wheat is grown possesses a due admixture of calcareous matter, which has a tendency to make the hull of the grain much thinner, and the farina itself in much greater quantity, and in richer quality, than in grain grown on the lands which exhibit a deficiency of this earth. All our millers will testify to the peculiar flour-making properties of our wheat, in this essential, surpassing that raised in other sections, and it is attributed entirely to the fact—which the analysis of the soil confirms—that this so-called "limestone belt" possesses all the requisites of the best wheat land in the world. Sand, it is well known, is injurious when it enters too largely into the composition of cultivated soils; in other words, it is useless beyond a certain proportion. That the "limestone belt," or "wonderful wheat region of Central Kansas," as it is sometimes called, has the amount of silex or silica—the basis of sand—fixed in the proper proportion, is evident, from the fact that it requires peculiar conditions to "lodge" the grain in the field, even after the most terrific showers. Considering the question of the relative fertility, particularly in its connection with wheat culture, present richness of soil and endurance must enter as essential elements of success, and the capacity of the self-fertilization of the land, an ingredient not to be overlooked. The latter quality a limestone region alone can possess, as only a limited knowledge of agricultural chemistry clearly demonstrates. Viewing the subject of wheat culture, then, in all its aspects, so far as Kansas is concerned, an inspection of the Smoky Hill Valley, and the arenaceous region south, coupled with a fair idea of what the culture of wheat requires, the conclusion can lead only in one direction—to the infinitely superior advantage of the "limestone belt."

Prospectively, from purely physical causes, this great inland region must reach the position of one of the richest agricultural portions of the United States. Only a very few years ago—not a decade—husbandry here was purely tentative. From absolutely no dew, eight years ago, this region is as favored in that particular as any that can be named. From lying outside of the "rain belt," so termed, this region has had to be "taken in." The quantity of water in the streams has augmented; springs have burst forth where none existed before—in short, just the converse of that meteorological phenomenon has been evolved here, under the march of civilization, which takes place in a heavily-timbered country under the same social conditions.

The following statistics of the rainfall clearly prove the accuracy of the foregoing statement: The Fall of Rain and Melted Snow, in inches, at Forts Hays, Larned and Dodge, for the last five years, as shown by the Daily Meteorological Records kept by the United States Government at the Posts named:

YEAR.	CENTRAL KANSAS.	SOUTHERN KANSAS.
	Fort Hays.	Fort Larned.	Fort Dodge.
1873	21.32	19.[illegible]	19.00
1874	27.06	27.72	23.05
1875	22.06	17.80	16.36
1876	36.90	18.52	21.55
1877	[illegible]	[illegible]	31.48
Total	162.96	115.14	111.44
Average per annum	[illegible]	23.03	22.29

These are some of the facts in relation to the agricultural possibilities of this region, and these, coupled with the story of the past harvest, are sufficiently confirmatory of the inducements this portion of the Great Plains offers.

Under the liberal policy of the Government and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, immigrants are invited to this really superb region, with the assurance that its beauty and inducements cannot be exaggerated by any pen-picture.

THE CELEBRATED SWISS WARBLERS' BIRD CALL.

THE ONLY ORIGINAL BIRD CALL & PRAIRIE WHISTLE.

(Manufactured under the Patent Granted to Mr. SAMUEL McCLAIN, Feb. 5, 1867.)

THE ONLY GENUINE AND SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENT.

This is one of the most amusing and useful articles brought before the public for many years. It is the invention of Samuel McClain, the great ventriloquist, and for the past few months has been the leading wonder of all the novelties introduced in the European world, creating the greatest astonishment and amusement wherever seen. The Bird and Animal Imitator is a little instrument which is entirely concealed in the mouth when in use, it being impossible for the closest observer to discover that the person using it has anything unusual in his mouth at all. It is composed of a double semi-circular metallic ring, beautifully silvered, which incloses and supports the vibratory tissue or sound-producer. Attached to the ring is also the diaphragm or retainer, the whole instrument being only about half an inch in length and less than an eighth in diameter. All the parts are made of costly machinery, designed expressly for the purpose, and every part is finished in the most perfect and substantial manner, and will last a lifetime. With it any person can imitate, in the most perfect manner, the singing of every bird in the forest, the cackling of a hen, the squeal of a pig, the grunt of a hog, the neighing of a horse, the whistling of a quail, the quacking of a duck, the hiss of a goose, the barking of a dog or fox, the gobble of a turkey, the crowing of a rooster, the hum of a bee, the buzzing of a fly, the singing of a mosquito, &c. It has recently been used with immense success by all the prominent ventriloquists, minstrels and imitators, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction. In fact, an exact imitation of every known bird and animal can be given, even by a child, in the most astonishing manner, and without teaching or practice. For the use of the hunter they are invaluable, as any animal or bird can be so nearly imitated as to call them at once within range. All the various songs of the mocking bird, canary and other choice singers can be given so naturally that the most expert listener cannot detect the difference. When not in use the Imitator can be carried in the pocket without injury, or can be retained in the mouth for hours, if desired, without the least inconvenience, as you can talk as well with it in the mouth as when it is entirely empty. Just imagine the amazement of a company at the sudden singing of a bird, the squealing of a pig, or the mewing of a cat, when it is supposed that none of these are in the vicinity! All the astonishing feats of the most expert ventriloquist can be performed, by means of the Whistle, by a child ten years of age. We recently saw the utmost astonishment created in a large company assembled in a private parlor by what appeared to be the terrific barking of a dog in an adjoining room. The room was searched, but no dog could be found. Then suddenly a cat commenced an unearthly squall in a closet which had not been opened for months. Then a child cried out in great agony from the interior of a large book-case, and a beautiful bird commenced singing in the corner of the room! Astonishment turned to fear, until a boy, who had been sitting quietly reading all of this time, found that his pranks were becoming serious, and owned up to having one of Samuel McClain's Whistles.

This wonderful instrument can be sent by mail, with full directions, which will enable any person to use it.

Retail, 25 cents each; three for 50 cents. Wholesale, $1.00 per dozen; $8.00 per gross.

Be sure and get the GENUINE Whistle, which is sent prepaid to any address on receipt of above prices, by the sole agents of Samuel McClain. Address

DAY'S AGUE TONIC

CURES EVERY FORM OF CHILLS, OR MONEY RETURNED.

DAY'S TONIC Cures Chills and Fever.
DAY'S TONIC Cures Dumb Chills.
DAY'S TONIC Supersedes Quinine.
DAY'S TONIC Cures Old Chronic Chills.
DAY'S TONIC Is pleasant for Children.
DAY'S TONIC Cleanses the Stomach.
DAY'S TONIC Acts on Liver and Bowels.
DAY'S TONIC Don't Buzz the Head.
DAY'S TONIC Don't contain Quinine.

DAY'S TONIC

Is a new innovation, and possesses advantages heretofore unknown and unclaimed by others.

It does not contain Quinine or any poison; it does not produce buzzing or roaring in the head, which follows the use of Quinine; it is retained by delicate stomachs; it acts upon the liver and bowels without the use of any other medicine; it never fails to cure, and our agents are authorized to return the money in each and every case of failure; one bottle will cure two cases. Try it and see. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as Billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumonia, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sameple bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein John J. Kinney is plaintiff, and Perry Blodget and Nancy J Blodget are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight dollars, ($1,878.32) and thirty-two cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, APRIL 6th, A. D. 1878,

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The south half of the south east quarter of section twenty-three, (23), township thirty-four (34), north of range thirteen (13) east, containing eighty acres of land in De Kalb county Indiana.

I will first expose to sale the south east quarter of the south east quarter of section twenty-three (23), in township thirty-four (34), north of range thirteen (13) east, and if said tract fails to sell for enough to pay the costs and amount now due on said decree, I will then expose to sale the whole of said premises.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. C. St. CLAIR, Sheriff.

By Thos. D. Gross, Deputy.

Auburn March 13th, 1878. Pr's. fee $8.75.

AFTER LONG YEARS.

Discovery of a Murderer Long Believed to be Dead.

About eighteen years ago this section of the country was shocked by a most brutal and unprovoked murder committed near Lisbon, Noble county. The victim was a quiet, honest, unoffending German, named Oscar Fulk, who was riding in a sleigh from this city to his home near Lisbon. He was met on the road by three intoxicated men in a sleigh. They drove into Fulk's vehicle. He said something to them and tried to jump out of his sleigh. One of the wretches then seized him by the throat and struck him with his fist. Another one, Thos. Helms, seized a heavy sled stake and dealt Fulk a terrible blow in the head, killing him almost instantly.

The three men were indicted by the grand jury of Noble county. One of them, Wm. S. Watson, was convicted as an accessory and sent to the penitentiary for a long term. The others escaped, and not long afterwards a statement was published that Helms, the principal murderer, had died in a western state.

Sheriff Munson, who has been cognizant of the facts connected with this murder for a long time, was in a small Illinois town on the Mississippi river a few day ago, when he learned positively that Helms, who murdered Fulk, and who has long been regarded as dead, is living there under an assumed name. With a view to bringing Helms to justice, he acquainted Sheriff Engles and Pros. Atty. Baxter, of Noble county, with the facts, and they laid them before the commissioners of that county. The later have declined to go to any expense to bring Helms back for trial, alledging as excuse that the deed was committed so long ago, and so many of the witnesses are dead, that it would be impossible to convict.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

The Matrimonial Lottery.

A young stranger called on Dr. M'C—— one evening, while he was a pastor in New York City, to engage his services in the performance of a nuptial ceremony.

"I wish to make a bargain with you, doctor,' said the young man. "I think the girl I am to marry will make a first-rate wife. If you will wait a year for your fee, and she turns out as I think she will, I will then give you fifty dollars.'

They agreed, the young couple were married, and the incident passed from the doctor's mind. At the end of a year, at the same time in the evening, the young man called again. The doctor did not recognized him at first.

"Do you not remember the bargain we made when you married me a year ago?"

"Oh, yes," replied the doctor.

"Well," said the young man, "she is twice as good as I thought she was. There's one hundred dollars for you."

Exactly the opposite of this is the following:

A clergyman in one of the Hudson River towns united a German couple in marriage. When the knot was tied, the bridegroom said, "Dominie, I've got no money, but I'll send you a little pig."

It was done and the circumstance was forgotten by the clergyman. Two years afterward he met the German in another town, for the first time since the marriage ceremony was performed.

"Dominie," said the German, "you remember you married me, and I gave you a little pig."

"Yes."

"Vell, of you'll unmarry me, I vill gif two leetle pigs."—Ex.

The Man and the Vine.

On one of the early years after the creation of the world, man began to plant a vine, and Satan saw it and drew near. "What plantest thou, son of the earth?' said the prince of demons.

"A vine,' replied the man.

"What are the properties of this tree?'

"Oh, its fruits are pleasant to look at, delicious to taste. From it, is produced a precious liquid which fills the heart with joy.'

"Well, since wine makes glad the heart of man, I will help to plant this tree.

So saying, the demon brought a lamb and slew it, then a lion, then an ape, and last of all a pig, killing each in succession, and moistening the roots of the vine with their blood.

Thence it has happened, ever since, that, when a man drinks a small portion of wine, he becomes gentle and caressing as a lamb; after a little more, stronger and bold as a lion; when he drinks still more, he resembles an ape in his folly and absurd and mischievous actions, but when he has swallowed the liquid to excess, he is like a pig wallowing in the mire.

LETTER FROM THE SOUTH.

TENNESSEE AND MISSISSIPPI.—THEIR DIVERSITY OF SURFACE.—WONDERFUL FERTILITY.—SALUBRITY OF CLIMATE.—COTTON, GRAIN, TIMBER, ETC.—THE SOCIAL STATUS.

MILAN, TENN. March 15, '78.

EDITOR COURIER.—Perhaps a few brief sketches from one of your old patrons while traveling through the land of cotton, will not be amiss, and I hope no encroachment on your good nature. The past four weeks I have been traveling through the states of Tennessee and Mississippi, through the middle and western portion of the former, visiting the principal towns, and traveling on the various railroads, and in the latter down the Mississippi Central Railroad, which extends from New Orleans to the Ohio river, opposite Cairo, then crossed over to the Mobile and Ohio railroad, which runs parallel with, and but a few miles from the eastern line of the State, and to my notion the most productive region in the State, except the rich alluvial bottoms of the Mississippi, whose soil is of an undetermined depth, and inexhaustible. Perhaps you would like to gain some information, in regard to the surface of the country, its timber, soil and productions. I am not much of an agriculturalist, or horticulturalist, therefore can not delve very deep into the analysis of the different soils and their substances. In regard to the topography of the country, I can give you some idea. You can find any surface of country that can be found on the globe, from the rugged peaks and bold summits, of the Unakas, 6500 feet above the sea, down to the low flat plains in the Mississippi bottoms. In the eastern part of Tennessee will be found a long unbroken chain of mountains, running north east and south west. Adjoining this on the west, we find the valley of East Tennessee, remarkable for its fertility of soil and glory of its climate. Next comes Middle and Western Tennessee, and Northern Mississippi, presenting a more level surface. Yet there are hills and valleys in every county, and in some instances a little bluffy, but there is scarcely a swamp within its boundaries, its drainage being perfect. Nature has favored this section with bountiful gifts in variety of soil, timber and water, and above all, and most essential the salubrity of the atmosphere, its free healthy breezes sweep from hill to hill, destroying at once the miasma which arises from low malarious districts. In the western part of Tennessee and northern Mississippi, the soil in the bottoms is a dark rich alluvial soil, with a mixture of sand, filled with an abounding fertility, producing enormous crops of corn and cotton year after year. On the ridges the soil is not so deep, but rich. It is a dark mellow loam, with a red clay subsoil, producing a good average yield of cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn, oats, Irish and sweet potatoes, and peanuts the latter being the staple crop in some counties, producing 200,000 bushels in a county. The average yield, I am informed, is from 40 to 45 bushels per acre, worth from 75 cents to $1.50 per bushel. The yield of the cotton crop on the best land per acre is from 800 to 1200 pounds seed cotton, but on the thinner soil from 400 to 800 pounds. I will bring you a stalk of cotton with a few pods on it, a sample of Mississippi production. Tennessee and North Mississippi produce a great variety of timber, oak, walnut, poplar, ash, beech, buckeye, chestnut, hickory, sugar maple, locust and various other kinds, in fact there is scarcely any timber, grains or fruits produced in the north, that will not grow luxurantly in this section. There is one great drawback to this country, especially in Mississippi, and that is, that it is settled up with a class (with a few exceptions) of indolent, careless farmers, who manifest very few traits of industry or frugality. There are thousand of acres uncultured in almost every county in the State; land, the fertility of which can not be excelled in the United States, and yet it is going to waste from want of cultivation, through sheer negligence and mismanagement on the part of the owners. They trust the management of their farms too much to the superintendency of the negro population, which is a very poor element to look to for enterprise, industry or any benificial result. They are so set in their old fogy notions of raising cotton, and nothing else, that they are obliged to send abroad for their flour, meat, corn and potatoes, and every little necessary that they could produce in abundance, if they would but take the pains to cultivate it. They are now paying from $1.50 to 2.00 per bushel for seed potatoes, when they could raise from one to two hundred bushels per acre, on their own land. They pay from $8.00 to 12.00 per barrel for flour, their own land capable of producing from 12 to 20 bushel of wheat per acre. They pay 60c. per bushel for corn, and their rich bottom land of a corn producing section, will compare favorably with any in our own state. They pay enormous prices for meat, the majority of the farmers not even raising a pig. All of the above articles are imported from the north. Indeed I have often thought if some of our industrious farmers of the North were down here; they would do exceedingly well, and soon amass riches. Land in Mississippi ranging from $60.00 to $100 per acre previous to the war, can now be purchased from $10 to $25, and some can be reclaimed as low as $5 per acre. Men in the north wishing to sell out and emigrate to where land is cheaper, would do well to visit this section before purchasing else where. Hundreds are coming from Indiana. One colony of over seven hundred, settled about Holly Springs, and so far as I can learn are well satisfied with the country. No doubt the question arises in your mind, how will the Northern people be received in the South? They will secure just the kind of treatment their conduct merits. If their mission here is to sow discord, by stirring up strife and animosity between the races, placing the lives and property of the whites in jeopardy, they certainly will not be respected by the white people. It is not in accordance with human nature that they should. If their object is to elevate themselves to some petty office through the instrumentality of the negroes, securing their vote by misrepresentations, preaching up to them at their midnight secret meetings like a set of prowling sneak thieves, the tyranny of the whites, and that every southern white man is their enemy, and should be treated as such, thus exciting riot and bloodshed, in that case they will not be respected, but meet the condemnation of every honest man. But let them come down with a good honest purpose, with honest hearts and willing hands, ready to add to the prosperity of the country and good of society, making themselves good worthy citizens and they will meet with all the hospitality, civility and kindness that an intelligent people can bestow. They will extend to them a hearty welcome, giving them encouragement and sympathy. In my experience of fifteen years traveling, I have never met with more courtesy, kinder treatment, freedom of hospitality and honorable dealing, than I have received from the southern people. Conduct yourself in a manner becoming a gentleman, and I assure you, you will be cordially received with every consideration and attention shown, that the good grace of a gentleman demands. Res'y Yours.

J. C JACKSON.

What Education Does.

Jake was heard calling across the fence to his neighbor's son, a colored youth who goes to school at the Atlanta Colored University:

"Look hyar, boy, you goes ter school, don't yer?'

"Yes, sir,' replied the boy.

"Gittin' eddykashun, ain't yer?'

"Yes, sir.'

"Well, it don't take two whole days ter make an hour, do it?'

"W'y no!' exclaimed the boy.

"You was gwine ter bring dat hatchit back in an hour, warn't you?'

"Yes, sir.'

"An' it's bin two days since you borrowed it. Now, what good's eddykashun gwine ter do you thick-skulled niggers when yer go to school a whole year an' den can't tell how long it takes to fetch back a hatchit?'

The boy got mad and slung the hatchet over the fence and half way through an ash barrel.

SONGS OF THE SEASON.

April's Sunbeam.

"Here a warm sunbeam, Daisy, Daisy;
April sent it to wake you, dear!
How can you be so lazy, lazy?
Haven't you heard that spring is here!"

Daisy murmured, sleepy and surly;
"Spring's too young yet—the air is cool;
I don't believe in a sun so early—
He's just playing at April fool!"
—Joy Allison, in St. Nicholas for April.

Hepatica.

Brave blue-eyed herald of the tardy spring,
Who, whilst thy laggard followers still sleep,
Courageously thy [illegible] [illegible] [illegible],
Glad tidings of her first approach to bring—
I wonder thy sweet patience never fails,
Though wintry snows lie deep on field and hill,
And [illegible] the [illegible] the bitter blast blows chill.
That no weak doubt thy trusting heart assails;
I marvel at thy subtle chemistry,
Which can from the cold earth such faith distill,
And, from gray skies, such azure as doth fill
Thy gentle upturned eyes. Oh, lesson me,
Sweet sage! Courage and hope I'd learn of thee,
And faith that fails not in adversity.
—Appletons' Journal for April.

Of Flowers.

There were no roses till the first child died,
No violets, nor balmy-breathed heart's-ease,
No heliotrope, nor buds so dear to bees,
The honey-hearted suckle, no gold-eyed
And lowly dandelion, nor, stretching wide,
Clover and cowslip-cups, like rival seas,
Meeting and parting, as the young spring breeze
Runs giddy races playing seek and hide.
For all flowers died when Eve left Paradise,
And all the world was flowerless awhile,
Until a little child was laid in earth;
Then from its grave grew violets for its eyes,
And from its lips rose-petals for its smile,
And so all flowers from that child's death took birth.
—Maurice F. Egan in Scribner for April.

Bitter-Sweet.

With roses, lilies and the eglantine
Love filled our hands, and from the grapes that hung
Above his garden, quick with scent and song,
He pressed a sweet and sleep-begetting wine,
And melody intense, remote, divine,
For our delight from his own harp he wrung;
And when songs failed, so many sweets among,
And very sweetness threatened to decline,
He plucked for us the sharp and bitter brier,
Wherewith our aching brows he garlanded,
And made a sudden discord with his lyre;
Then with new color cheeks and lips grew red,
And pain was straight converted to desire;
"For thus my bitter turns to sweet," Love said.
—Philip Bourke Marston, in April Lippincott.

Pigeons.

Pink-footed, sleekly white, or delicate fawn,
Or darkling-plumed, with glossy throat, where clings
One soft perpetual ripple of rainbow rings,
How often to your beauty our sight is drawn,
When back from roamings wide you suddenly dawn,
A lovely turbulence of quick-fluttered wings,
Alighting on some brown-slanted roof like spring's
Pale showers of blossoms on an orchard lawn!

Our common barn-yard life, plain, stolid, rude,
You haunt with tender purity sweet to note;
And gladden its dullness with your buoyant throng
In many a smooth and mellow interlude
Through homelier sound serenely letting float
Your strange luxurious monotones of song!
—Edgar Fawcett, in Atlantic Monthly for April.

An April Song.

Sweet April, when you try, with your sunshine and your sky,
Your wind breathing low and your birds that sing together,
Your misty blue that fills the hollows of the hills,
You can make a day of most enchanting weather!

But on this lovely morning you have for your adorning
The presence of my only love, my darling, my dear—
So you have no need to try, with your sunshine and your sky,
To make this day the day of all the year!

Yet, April, do your best, with a soft wind from the west,
With sunlight on the springing grass, and tender blue above—
Let your singing birds ring loudly, and your flowers look up proudly—
So may you serve the lady of my love!

O month of changeful mien—your days may be serene—
Or your sobbing east wind may be bringing rainy weather—
Each is a welcome day, for it takes me nearer May,
When my only love and I shall be together!
—Edwin N. Lewis, in Scribner for April.

Merry Rain.

Sprinkle, sprinkle, comes the rain,
Tapping on the window-pane;
Trickling, coursing,
Crowding, forcing
Tiny rills
To the dripping window-sills.

Laughing rain-drops, light and swift,
Through the air they fall and sift;
Dancing, tripping,
Bounding, skipping
Through the street,
With their thousand merry feet.

Every blade of grass around
Is a ladder to the ground;
Clinging, striding,
Slipping, sliding,
On they come
With their busy zip and hum.

In the woods, by twig and spray,
To the roots they find their way;
Pushing, creeping,
Doubling, leaping,
Down they go
To the waiting life below.

Oh, the brisk and merry rain,
Bringing gladness in its train!
Falling, glancing,
Tinkling, dancing
All around—
Listen to its cheery sound!
—Viola Forrester, in St. Nicholas for April.

The Lover's Choice.

"Here are roses, red and white—"
"Thanks, dear—no.
Nature paints them all too bright."
"Is it so?

"Well, then, take this lily's face."
"Chill it seems.
From its calm and stately grace
Coldness gleams."

"Look—blue violets, you said
They were sweet!"
"Best their sweetness seemeth shed
At our feet."

"Heliotrope, the dearest flower
On the earth!"
"Nay, it fades before an hour, Little worth!"

"Heart's-ease—that you'll surely keep!"
"If you might
Lay it on my spirit, deep
Out of sight!"

"So I cannot please your sense;
You implore
One fair gift to carry hence,
One—no more;

"Yet each choicest bud I bring,
You refuse!"
"Sweet, from out their blossoming
Let me choose.

"Kneeling—like love's humblest slave,
Do not start!
Can you guess which flower I crave
Now, sweetheart?"
—Mary Ainge De Vere, in Scribner for April.

THE SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPH.

It was the evening of a disagreeable day. Rain and snow mingled together; but the very dreariness of the weather prompted me to call upon the Dudleys, who were suffering a most melancholy bereavement. The servant admitted me without announcement as I was the confidential friend of the family. Miss Dudley was sitting in a chair with her head bowed over her arm, and when she raised her face to greet me I saw she had been weeping. Dudley was walking up and down, back and forth, with slow, dragging steps, his head sunk on his breast. I sat down beside Caroline, taking her hand in mine, for we were engaged to be married when the year of mourning had expired.

"This weather is enough to depress even the happy," I said, "but I wish that I had found you more cheerful. Do you not think that you ought to overcome so far as possible, this trouble, for Dudley's sake? It is killing him."

"I know it, and that is what gives me so much pain. Of course my grief is nothing compared to his. But it breaks my heart to see him so changed. I fear that if he does not die outright a worse calamity will happen. Sometimes I fear for his mind.

The disaster which had brought such irremediable ruin upon the house of Dudley was the loss of his wife. Her youth, her beauty, her devotion to him, and the tragic manner of her death, made it apparent to all why his sorrow should be deeper than that of many others similarly bereaved. To me, who knew something of the character of both and of the intense love which seemed to blend their beings into one, it was almost a marvel that he survived her at all. When I had seen them together in the freedom of their own home the thought had more than once occurred to me that the existence of each was dependent upon that of the other. Yet she had perished suddenly—been swept from him by a swift and terrible catastrophe, which had hardly allowed them a parting embrace.

In the autumn of 1862 Dudley had been called to Havana upon business. His wife persuaded him to permit her to accompany him. How well I remember that splendid autumn day upon which they sailed! Caroline and myself stayed with them on the vessel until the last moment. How beautiful Mrs. Dudley looked as she waved her handkerchief to us from the deck, the bright color lighting up her always eloquent face into the loveliest animation! We had watched the noble vessel until it was a speck out in the Narrows; then we had turned away with a sigh, half sad and yet not sad. We had no presentiment of evil, and when her brother and wife returned Caroline and I were to be married.

That vessel was fated never to touch the Cuban shores. When but twelve hours from Havana, at midnight, in the midst of darkness and storm, she was run into by another ship, and sank in fifty minutes. Thrown from his berth by the severity of the collision, Dudley seized his trembling wife under his arm, forcing his way through the disordered crowd from the cabins, already filling with water, to the upper deck. Here he maintained his place while the men and officers made efforts to launch the boats. The first of these filled and went down. The second was more successfully managed. A few women, to whom was given the first chance, were lowered into it by the light of lanterns, whose uncertain gleam made the tempest more appalling. Mrs. Dudley clung to her husband, begging to be allowed to stay with him until he, too, should be permitted to make the desperate effort at salvation. But for once her prayers had no influence with him. His desire for her safety overruled the pleadings of love. With almost rudeness he tore away her clinging arms, the rope was fastened about her waist and she was lowered down. The lantern threw a strange beam upon her pallid face, turned to him as she swung off from the ship's side, and that was the last look he had of the countenance dearest to him. The few men who manned the oars put out to get away from the vortex which the vessel would make in sinking; a great wave rolled in upon it, and the cry went forth that the boat had gone down. Then Dudley, caring no more for his own life, jumped into the boiling sea. But the crew of the uninjured vessel picked him up before life was extinct, and he recovered consciousness to find himself in the cabin of the other ship. Until long after daylight the vessel lingered around the spot, until all hopes of rescuing any floating persons who might be clinging to pieces of the wreck were over. Then it continued on its way to New York.

Over four months had elapsed, during which a ray of light had hardly penetrated Dudley's despair. His sister shared his darkened life, deferring our marriage, and withdrawing from society to devote herself to him. I was almost the only one outside of their near circle of relatives whom they cared to see.

At times Dudley would be possessed of a strange fancy that his wife might not be dead—that she might have escaped—be now in some remote portion of the world whither some passing bark had conveyed her. Facts and theories were against him. The boat which they had seen overwhelmed with the waves had never been heard from. Another boat, which had put out last, had succeeded in landing upon an island coast after three days of floating on the waste of waters, but, in all human probability, the first boat had gone down within five minutes after she left the ship's side. Sometimes Dudley would work himself into an alarming state of excitement, avowing his belief that his wife was alive. His only argument was that if she were dead she certainly would vouchsafe him some token to put his mind at rest.

This evening I felt light-hearted and joyous, despite the sad faces of my friends. My spirits had risen triumphant over the weather, over the gloom induced by sympathy with others, even over the impatience I sometimes felt at the long-delayed consummation of my wishes. I am sure that my face shone with pleasure, for I had that day received a letter containing news of an access of fortune, which had exhilarated me beyond the power of my ordinary troubles to subdue.

Suddenly Dudley stopped in front of us, his eyes looking larger and darker than ever from the sunken lines about them, and fixed upon me with an intensity almost unbearable.

"Is it not strange," said he, "that all this time—all this time—she has sent me no message?"

I was surprised as well as startled by this question. Despite his theory that if she were dead she would comfort him by some special message, I had not realized that he was really seeking consolation in looking for some palpable token from the spiritual world. It was too much opposed to his previous habits of thought.

"What have you expected?" was all I could for the moment say.

"Anything to prove that she is still mine, in death as well as life."

It was just then an idea flashed upon me which I hoped would save him from the madness which at times I apprehended might destroy his brain, noble and massive as his structure was. I rehearsed the details of my plan to Caroline, at the same time imparting to her the piece of good fortune which had occurred to me. For this purpose I drew her away into the library, where, in brief time, I unfolded my ideas and expectations. When we returned to the parlor she took her brother's arm, walking up and down the rooms with him.

"Have you seen any of those spirit photographs, brother?"

"What are they?" He ceased walking, looking inquiringly at her.

"There are photographs nowadays which fix the shadows of souls as well as bodies—as they say! The spirit of the deceased friend wished for appears beside the picture of the sitter, faint and shadowy, as becomes a spirit, but still quite palpable."

"You smile, Caroline; are you jesting?"

"No, I am only relating the last marvel of Spiritualism."

"What do you think of it?" directing his question to me.

"It's rather a new thing, even with the Spiritualists themselves. I have not made up my mind about it. In fact I have never inquired much into the phenomena. But when you spoke so earnestly of having expected a message from Eleanora it occurred to me that it could hardly come in a more acceptable or more convincing shape than this."

"To-morrow we will make the experiment; if there is any such thing possible I know that Eleanora will come to me. I shall be permitted to see her. If she does not come I shall know she is still alive."

It was decided that we should go at 2 o'clock the next day to the photographer I had selected. When we entered the gallery we became conscious of a peculiar influence permeating our very souls. As a person in the dark, in total silence and seeing nothing, yet perceives the presence of another who approaches him, so each of us perceived an intangible something which thrilled us beyond speech. But few words were spoken. The business-like manner of the operator was in curious contrast to the intense emotions of those who hung upon his movements. In answer to Dudley's question he said that the day was excellent for his purpose. He arranged his plates, screens and camera with a matter-of-fact air, as if he were not about to attempt to catch and fix the fleeting shadow of the immortal soul divested of its garments of earth. It struck me as being a strange mixture of the material and spiritual—this preparation of chemicals, this assistance of the ethereal light, itself the nearest to spirit of tangible substances, this arrangement of screens and burnishing of glass; by such palpable apparatus to seize the image of the immortal soul and retain it for the gaze of mortal eyes. I presume no such reflections had place in the mind of Dudley. Soul, thought and sense were concentrated upon one object.

Obedient as a child, he submitted himself to the directions of the operator. When all was ready he seated himself in the chair placed for the purpose. Standing at one side of the room, before the door of a smaller apartment used as a dressing-room for ladies, was a large screen. Caroline had gone into this apartment for a few moments when we first arrived, but she now stood by my side, silently waiting for the finale. I knew by her irregular breathing and slight paleness that she was much agitated.

The screen was drawn forward a few feet toward the sitter, and another placed to throw out the back-ground. By the arrangement thus effected the subject was half inclosed in an improvised apartment which shut out a great part of the room from his observation.

The operator then gave him a few directions:

"Fix your eyes and your mind both upon the camera. I will not withdraw the cap until I discern from your expression that your attention is sufficiently concentrated. Only of one thing be sure, whatever you may feel or become conscious of, as you value the result to be obtained, do not betray any emotion. Remain motionless and silent until I give you liberty to move and speak. Above all, do not turn to see that which you feel approaching you. Many persons become so agitated in the moment of trial as to render futile their own wishes. I believe you have more firmness."

Dudley made a deep response, to the effect that he should fulfill his part. He fixed his eyes upon the camera with a steady gaze. Once or twice his eyelids trembled, and his hands clutched each other with the effort at restraint which he made.

Presently the cap was taken off, and—after a moment, which might have been years to him—was replaced. Mindful of his promise, he did not speak or turn his head until he was requested to leave his chair. During the time of waiting for the photograph to be brought out on the glass he moved restlessly about.

"It is the best I have ever taken," said the operator, as he placed the glass carefully in Dudley's outstretched hand.

We crowded close to look over his shoulder. The marvel had been wrought! There was he with his keen, eager look, and there, a little to one side and just behind him, a part of her figure hidden by him, was Eleanora. She seemed almost to float, so light was her poise as she bent over his shoulder. Her golden hair, for which she had been so admired in life, wandered about her throat and shoulders as if the breezes of heaven were at that instant stirring them. She appeared to be robed in some ethereal garb, clasped by a girdle at the waist and flowing in full folds about her limbs. It was Eleanora, the fair young wife, as we all remembered her. She wore a joyful expression, as if it was an intense pleasure to be near her husband; but it seemed to me that the sweet face had a slightly thinner, maturer look, as if she, too, had suffered from having been torn so suddenly from her earthly home.

The photographer was uneasy lest Dudley in his ecstasy should press the plate to his lips and mar the impression. He took it gently from him, remarking:

"This is altogether the best spirit photograph I have ever taken. It is miraculous! Mrs. Dudley's likeness is as vivid and perfect as your own."

"And she was here," cried Dudley, "as really and truly as I am or as you are! Oh, what happiness is this, to feel that our loved ones are separated from us by so slight a barrier. I tell you I heard the rustle of her garment as distinctly as if in life she were coming once more to bless me with her touch and smile. I detected the very odor of violets, the perfume she always used. Yes, as true as God vouchsafed me this token, I felt her breath on my cheek."

At this moment his glance became fixed upon the opposite side of the room. He gazed a moment in silence, then resumed in a rapt tone, like one who speaks in a vision, "I do see her! she is there now! I behold her plainly. Eleanora! She doubts—she hesitates! Do not go—stay with me!"

We looked, and beheld with our own eyes the truth of what he asserted. As distinctly as ever we beheld a friend in the broad light of day, there stood Mrs. Dudley, wavering between flying and approaching. Her hair streamed down as in the picture, her light garments waved about her. He held out his arms and took a step toward her, pausing lest the vision should vanish at too near an approach.

"Eleanora!"

The passion in his voice seemed mighty enough to withhold a spirit from its heavenly destinies. He took another step, and she, too, wavering yet, came forward to meet him. He feared to lay his mortal hand upon her, but love was more powerful than awe. The trance was still upon him, but it was broken when he stretched out his hand and touched her hair.

"Ah! what blessed answer to my prayer is this, my wife!" He had turned toward us, then back to her. "I see her; she comes to me; she smiles; she blushes; I feel her hair; she is weeping; she is warm; she is living!"

For an instant I felt a breathless suspense; but joy never kills the strong, and Dudley was strong.

This was the good fortune which had so exalted me the previous day; I had received a letter from Boston, from Mrs. Dudley, giving me an account of her escape in an open boat; the days of her exposure, a long and wearisome voyage in a sailing vessel which picked up the boat's crew and carried them about until it landed them in Boston; and she had written to me, as Dudley's most intimate friend, to ascertain if he were alive, and, if so, to break to him the news of her safety. Poor thing! during all these months of hardship she had been compelled to endure the uncertainty as to her husband's fate. I had immediately telegraphed to her that Dudley was alive and at home; that she must come on by the next train; that I would receive her at the depot, and in the meantime prepare Dudley for the news.

When I had gone to his house the previous evening I had been troubled how to communicate my joyful tidings. I was afraid the greatness of the change from despair to such bliss as this would shake the reason which seemed already on the verge of madness. The chance mention of the photograph suggested the idea to me of gradually preparing his mind, in the manner which I carried out, for the final consummation of his happiness. I introduced my plan to Caroline, who approved of it. At the most it would only be keeping him from his wife an hour or two longer.

Caroline herself brought the dress already perfumed with violets, which had once been a favorite dress of Eleanora, but had long lain among the precious relics of the supposed dead. The privacy of the dressing-room gave the two women an opportunity to arrange the scenic effects. Probably it was as hard for Eleanora to restrain herself as for Dudley, when, as he said truly, he heard the rustle of her garments and felt the living warmth of her breath upon his cheek.

All necessity for further restraint was now over happily; the young wife lay sobbing upon the bosom whose every throb had been so constant to her. Caroline was in tears, and I am not ashamed to confess that my own eyes were not as clear as usual.

New Zealand will not be represented at the Paris Exhibition. The Prime Minister, Sir George Grey, says that the colony, which is now preparing to borrow another $20,000,000, cannot afford it. These Australasian colonies have, for the most part, very heavy debts, and, when bad times come, the interest is felt as a serious burden, the population being still very small. That of the whole of Australasia is less than 2,500,000.

THE FASHIONS.

Old Styles Revived—Renaissance and Byzantine Modes in Renewed Favor.

The present fashions, says the New York Times, are in some respects but a repetition of those of the Renaissance and of Byzantine styles. Even velvet robes enriched with golden beads and galloon, like those worn by Marie Stuart, with the front turned down in the middle and forming points, are to be seen. Whether these fashions are destined to meet with success, however, is yet to be decided. In the time of Louis XIII. ladies wore two skirts, one of which was short, while the other had a long train. The waists were cut out square in the neck, and the sleeves were broad at the top and tight-fitting at the fore-arm. These sleeves are now coming into fashion. All the present trimmings, such as laces for veils, cuffs, and neck-pieces, ribbons, galloons, beads, and feathers were then used in the greatest profusion. Parisian toilets for day use are now as elaborately trimmed as those for evening wear. Ball dresses are seen in Paris made of beaded gauze, which has a dazzling effect at night.

Lace is much used to trim ball dresses, Both black and white laces are employed.

Flowers are as much used as ever for evening toilets. Necklaces and bracelets are fastened on the upper part of the bare arm by a spray joining them to the shoulder. The flower combs already described are also much worn. Bunches of flowers are placed on the satin gaiters and slippers.

Flowers and lace also constitute the principal trimmings for bonnets. Flowers, leaves, and fruit of satin are most in use. The combination of chenille and gold is in many places very pretty. Bead trimmings are still used, but in great moderation.

Front pieces of black satin trimmed with beaded bands are extensively used with black satin and faille, or velvet and faille toilets. Amber trimmings light up very prettily and enliven the black dresses.

Persons who are tired of white, cream, and straw colors for evening dresses may wear blue, but special care should be taken in the selection of the material and shade. The shade should be very light, as blue is always darker at night than in the daytime, and the material must be rich; if it is not, the effect by gas-light is very poor.

Light gauzes, tulles, and tarletans are used exclusively by very young ladies. As soon as a lady no longer dances, these dresses are laid aside and heavier and richer toilets replace them. Toilets are not quite as much trimmed as they have been, and the trains are longer than ever.

A novelty for young ladies who cannot wear low-necked dresses consists of silk "corsets" without sleeves. These are sometimes trimmed, front and back, with black ribbon velvet. The upper part of the waist is of plaited crepe lisse; it is very high in the neck and trimmed with a "Pierrot" collar of the same material.

A bertha for evening wear is of white crepe lisse, draped in close plaits around a low-necked waist. The bertha is quite low, both front and back, and under the arms it is long and falls square.

A rich blue evening toilet may be of Van Dyck blue brocatelle, with light blue figures. The whole front is of brocatelle and faille with a faille plastron surrounded by plaitings and extending around the neck. The lower part is trimmed with flounces of the same material, these opening at regular intervals and showing inserted faille plaitings. The sides are trimmed with two broad faille scarfs bordered with fringe and terminating at the first plaiting of the plastron. Two other scarfs, composed of draperies of brocatelle and faille, are taken in with the others. One of these is taken flat over the hip, thus covering the place where the first faille scarf is put against the skirt. They are then taken in a bias across the front of the skirt and fastened under the back plaits. They are trimmed with fringe. The middle of the princess back is trimmed with a long piece of faille in the shape of a V. The rather long train terminates in a point, which is raised and fastened to the middle of the draperies in the back by means of a cord with loops and tassels, which, if then taken up, form similar loops and tassels under the V point on the lower part of the waist. The brocatelle sleeves are finished at the wrist with a narrow faille plaiting. A false faille underskirt forms a plaited train. The sides of this skirt are trimmed with flouncing, which joins the flouncing on the lower part of the skirt.

A traveling dress may be of gray woolen goods with black dotted stripes. The short train skirt has a Watteau plait in the back. The tunique apron buttons on one side in front, and is draped on both sides, and taken under the Watteau plait in the back. The pocket is placed below the hips, and trimmed with buttons. The half tight-fitting paletot opens, showing the upper and lower part of the waist. It has a long, falling collar, and closes by means of two tongues, crossed and buttoning over the garment. A large pointed cuff buttons over the sleeves by means of buttons matching those upon the waist. The hat to be worn with this suit is of gray felt, lined with silk. The brim is raised on the side. The trimmings consist of ribbons and feathers in the same color.

A Night-Gown in Court.

A Spanish lady was brought into court in London the other day for refusing to pay for a blue silk night-gown she had ordered. She declared the garment a misfit, and offered to prove the fact by trying it on before a jury of matrons. There was no jury of matrons, and the Judge finally decided that she must pay the bill, with costs. This inflamed her Andalusian blood, and her proud answer to the despot and tyrant was to hurl the garment in question at the solicitor's head, and afterward to tear it up to ribbons before the Judge's face. The remnants are now in possession of one of the officers of the court.

THE FOOLISH FROG.

BY SAMUEL WRAY.

In a tank at the foot of the hill
Lived Mr. and Mrs. Frog,
At the head of a sparkling rill,
By the side of a quaggy bog;
And they had children ten—
All Froggies as yellow as gold,
Who loved to play on the fen,
But they often were over-bold.

Now it fell out one day,
As it never had done before,
When Father Frog was away,
A stickleback called to the door;
"Oh, Mrs. Frog," said he,
"Your sister is very ill,
And much she wishes to see
You down at the water mill."

Then Mother Frog showed her grief
In such tears as you never saw;
And, having no [illegible] [illegible],
She wiped her eyes with a paw.
Said she, "Now Froggies, dear,
You must not go to the fen;
There is no danger here,
And I'll soon come back again!"

So down the sparkling rill
She paddled her own canoe;
But what she saw at the mill
Is nothing to me or to you.
Said her Froggies, "Now for some fun—
Away, and away to the bog!"
All but her eldest son,
A sensible little frog.

He begged them not to walk
Abroad in the light of the sun;
But they laughed at his earnest talk,
And they were nine to one;
With angry croak and skip,
He stood in the portico;
And he would have cracked his whip,
But he had no whip, you know.

Said he, "I will climb the bank,
Their dangerous pranks to see;
And I'll leap into the tank
If anything frightens me."
So he sat on a ledge aloft,
And saw his brothers at play,
Till a gnat, with its curfew soft,
Proclaimed the close of the day.

Then a duck which had lazily swum
For hours in a reedy pool,
Seeing the shadows come,
And feeling the air grow cool,
With a "Quack, quack, quack!" came out.
She meant, "It is time to sup!"
So, finding the Froggies about,
She gobbled them quickly up.

Then the true little Frog on the bank
Was so overcome with affright
That he tumbled into the tank,
And he slept not a wink that night.
Now all wise Frogs go out
In the light of the stars and the moon,
When there are no ducks about
To hear them croak and croon.

So Mr. and Mrs. Frog,
By the peeping stars made bold,
Came back by the quaggy bog
To their Froggies all yellow as gold.
They never saw them again—
Alas, that it should be so!
They were told not to go to the fen;
But they did not obey, you know.

VERNAL WARNINGS.

A zephyr from the southward
Through the open window blows,
With its prophecies of jessamine,
Of mignonette and rose,
But a voice from it is calling—
"Don't leave off your winter clothes."
Though the softness of the tropics
In the wings of March is set,
And the blue-birds and the pansies
Their appointed time forget;
Comes a warning with the blandness—
"Wear your winter flannels yet."

This is given as the first honeymoon discussion between a lawyer and a New York belle: "No, Amy, you're quite wrong. I never was refused in all my life." "Oh, Tom, how can you say so? Why, there was Louie Simpson." "I tell you again, you're wrong, completely wrong. It's true I was 'declined with thanks' once, but I never was refused."

"Say, Pat, suppose Satan was to come along now, and see both of us here, which do you suppose he would take, you or me?" "Oh! faith, yer Honor, he'd take me." "How so?" "Well, sir," said Paddy, "he'd take me now, because he wouldn't be sure of me when he came again; but he'd be sure of you at any time and could afford to wait."

SABBATH READING.

He Knoweth.

Out of the window in the night
I see by the city's watchful light,
Wandering shapes of woe and want—
Shapes that the bitter midnight haunt.

Safe I lie by the fireside warm,
Lapped in comfort and kept from harm;
They are pining for food and fire,
Torn with poverty's mad desire.

I with the sweets of earth am fed;
They go crying for broken bread.
I am guarded by love and friends;
In grief and madness their pathway ends.

Their ceaseless sorrow frights my sleep;
I think of the hours they wake and weep.
They chill my blood, and my heart dismay,
And I cannot soften their thorny way.

I think and long till my weary brain
Turns to its final rest again,
And I lay my head on His garment's hem,
Who fashioned deftly both clod and gem.

His showers fall not from upper air,
One drop here, and one drop there,
But down in a silver rush of rain
On field and forest, on hill and plain.

If long in heaven His love delays,
Hiding from man its wondrous ways,
Well I know it will come at last,
When the little round of life is past.

The light that shines, and the wind that blows,
Where it listeth, and no man knows
Have their message; and want and woe
On His errands run to and fro.

In my thankful heart His goodness lives,
So I may take the grief He gives.
Oh! who in this world could wake or rest
Without the knowledge that God knows best?

What a Heathen Thought.

The origin of the soul of man is not to be found upon earth, for there is nothing in the soul of a mixed or concrete nature, or that has any appearance of being formed or made out of the earth, nothing even hurried, or airy, or fiery. For what is there in natures of that kind which has the power of memory, understanding or thought? which can recollect the past, foresee the future, and comprehend the present? for these capabilities are confined to divine beings, nor can we discover any source from which men could derive them, but from God.—Cicero.

Prayer.

Christ has conferred on prayer all power for good—to renovate the weak, to heal the sick, to free from the power of evil spirits, to loosen the bonds of the innocent. It repels temptations, extinguishes persecutions, consoles the feeble-minded, delights the magnanimous, guides travelers, stills the waves, nourishes the poor, controls the rich, raises the fallen, props the falling, and preserves the standing. Prayer is the bulwark of faith; our arms and weapons against the adversary who waylays us on every side. Therefore, never let us go about unarmed.—Tertullian.

The Spirit of Self-Sacrifice.

The spirit of self-sacrifice is one of the great beauties of holiness. Husband yielding to wife; wife to husband; brother to brother; sister to sister; friend to friend; in great things, but in small especially. First and foremost, see that the spirit is with you at home; then carry it abroad into the world. It is a spirit that will sweeten happiness and brighten troubles; and, when the soul is ready to wing its flight to its eternal home, it will have the unspeakable consolation of knowing that it has not lived to itself; that it has left the world happier and better in some degree than it found it; that it has been faithful to its earthly mission. So will it listen with unutterable bliss to the sentence: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"—Argosy.

Joy Bringers.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down the street, flinging out pleasures on every side through the air to every one, far and near, that can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness, as orchards in October days fill the air with perfume of the ripe fruit. Some women cling to their own houses, like the honeysuckle over the door, yet, like them, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness. There are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruit around them. There are lives that shine like star-beams, or charm the heart like songs sung upon a holy day. How great a bounty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul, so that they shall be music to some, and fragrance to others, and life to all! It would be no unworthy thing to live for, to make the power which we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand, with a brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long for, enjoy and appreciate.—Christian Advocate.

Sweetness of Secret Prayer.

So, then, God bids you come often from the noise and strife and tumult of life, bids you to come even from the grandeur and circumstances of its public religious worship, and shut the door that you may pray to your Father in secret. It is there your truest life is lived. It is there strength comes for the toil and weariness of life. It needs not long for this; not long to gather round you that sweet sense of fatherhood which shall make the whole day sacred, and your work a service to good. You know how, before you start away in the morning to your toil, you have only time, perhaps, for a loving word or two to your wife, and a hasty kiss for the little ones. But how much love you may put into those few words, and what sweet memory those little kisses leave all the day long. And so a moment or two of solemn speech with God, before the great tide of busy life flows in upon the soul, one short clasp of the Father's hand, one quick glance into His holy, loving eyes, will make the whole day sacred. We need no long prayers to bring us the sweet sense of God's fatherhood, the hidden secret communion of Him who is ever with us. I walk with my friend through a bustling, crowded street, and, though I speak no word to him, the close pressure of his hand upon my arm, from time to time, tells me all I want to know. The little child, too, holding my hand through a long summer walk; he looks up into my face now and then. Look down into his, and in that look how much is said; what compact of trust and love, what bright assurance that all is fair and calm and pleasant between us. So a good man walks with God.—George Dawson.

Horrors of the Irish Evictions.

From scenes of fiery excitement into others of deepest gloom and despair, was but a short step for poor Ireland. Three terrible years had annihilated the resources of the rural population. The inability to pay the rent brought on the ruin of the landlords; whole districts were running to waste, and starvation once more threatened with its awful features. English journals, essayists, and orators united in urging the Irish landlord to colonize with thrifty farmers from beyond the channel. "English and Scotch tenants," they said, "are men with means, with modern ideas; they they will farm scientifically, develop your resources, and make you rich." There was a political interest in all this, too; for, if once the island were thus peopled, there would be an end of seditions and secret conspiracies. None cared or thought what would become of the poor people who now held the lands; and, if the landlords were tempted to pity, it was a luxury they could not afford. Thus England sewed sowed the wind, and is now reaping the whirlwind; for the great "famine clearances" which followed drove 1,000,000 Irish to America, filled with that deadly hatred which was the origin and spirit of Fenianism.

Few stories in history are more painful than the tale of these evictions. The Irish tenant's home is passionately loved. Here his fathers lived before him; and every rock and bush has its sweet association. All his little store of worldly goods, moreover, is gathered within these humble walls; for he does not hire his house all stocked, as the English and Scotch farmers do. Under such circumstances, the evictions became acts of the utmost cruelty and brutality. The Sheriffs who accompanied the landlords' agents protested that no execution was ever so trying to their feelings as the leveling of these wretched houses. The fiercest wrath of nature, even, could not stay the dreadful ruin. In hail and thunder, rain and snow, the gangs pushed on the work of destruction; the aged and bedridden, the nursing babe, were driven forth into the angry night to wander without shelter or food, until God, in some unforeseen way, perhaps by death, should have mercy on their misery. The story of these evictions makes the blood curdle and boil by turns, and forces one to look with horror upon the capabilities of human nature. For ten years the work went on; night and day, summer and winter, the "Crowbar Brigade" scoured the country. Hand-work was too slow, and a machine was invented which would fasten upon the doomed house and bring it down in instantaneous ruin. The wretched victims lingered about the sacred places until driven away by starvation or the more cruel blows of their masters. Such landed proprietors as did not embark in this horrid scheme yet forbade their tenants to receive any of the fugitives, as none wished the burden of paupers. Such peasants as had the means emigrated to America, and some landlords, indeed, paid the passages of those whom they turned adrift. But vast multitudes died in the swamps, the mountains, and by the roadside, or found a little longer way to the grave through the workhouse. —Appletons' Journal for April.

Wild Men.

In the island of Rio there are wild men who live in trees, and have no language but cries, and in Sumatra the residents of Palembang said there were men who lived in the forests, with whom not only the Europeans but the Malays could have no intercourse. He himself had never seen one. Yet, strange to say, they have a petty traffic with the outer world, yet not through the medium of speech. They live in the woods and subsist by the chase. They hunt tigers—not with the gun, but with arrows, which they blow out of a tube with such force, and which are so keen of point and touched with such deadly poison, that a wound is almost immediately fatal.

These tiger-skins or elephant-tusks they bring for barter—not for sale, for they never sell anything, for money is about the most useless thing they can have. They cannot eat it or drink it or wear it. But, as they have wants, they exchange; yet they themselves are never seen. They bring what they have to the edge of the forest and leave it there, and the Malays come and place what they have to dispose of and retire. If the offer is satisfactory, when they return again they find what they brought gone, and take what is left and depart. If not, they add a few trifles more to tempt the eyes of these wild men of the woods, and so at last the exchange is effected, yet all the while the sellers keep themselves invisible.

Fun in the Witness Box.

Nothing pleases your fun-loving Irishman better than to bother a lawyer, and the Irish courts have known many a dialogue like this: "You are a Roman Catholic?" "Am I?" "Are you not?" "You say I am." "Come, sir; what's your religion?" "The true religion?" "What religion's that?" "My religion?" "And what is your religion?" "My mother's religion." "What was your mother's religion?" "She tuk whisky in her tay." "You bless yourself, don't you?" "When I'm done with you, I will." "What place of worship do you go to?" "The most convaynient." "Of what persuasion are you?" "My persuasion is that you won't find out." "What is your belief?" "That you are puzzled." "Do you confess?" "Not to you." "Who would you write to if you were likely to die?" "The doctor." "I insist upon your answering me, sir. Are you a Roman Catholic?" "I am." "And why didn't you say so at once?" "You never axed me. You said I was a great many things, but you never axed me. You were drivin' crass words and crooked questions at me, and I thought it was manners to cut my behavior on your own patthern."—All the Year Round.

PERMANENT INK.—It is said that an ink that cannot be erased, even with acids, is obtained by the following recipe: To good gall ink add a strong solution of fine soluble Prussian blue in distilled water. This addition makes the ink, which was previously proof against alkalies, equally proof against acids, and forms a writing fluid which cannot be erased without destruction of the paper. The ink writes greenish blue, but afterwards turns black.

Population of the Nations.

The population of the principal nations, according to Schem's statistics for 1878, are as follows:

Austria	35,904,435	Great Britain	32,817,138
Brazil	11,780,000	Italy	26,716,309
China	425,300,000	Japan	34,738,321
Egypt	5,000,000	Russia	81,925,436
France	36,102,921	Turkey	43,600,000
Germany	41,058,139	United States	38,558,962

The population of the large divisions of the world, is:

America	84,525,000
Europe	301,600,000
Asia	794,000,000
Africa	192,520,000
Australia	4,398,000
Total	1,377,000,000

THE American export trade is assuming larger proportions with each succeeding month, and is destined to set our financial matters all right in spite of the Congressional wranglers. Among the piano exports to Europe and the South American States the popular firm of Geo. Steck & Co., of New York, figures largely, because their instruments have gained the reputation of standing the most severe climate better than those of their competitors.

Peculiar People.

Old bachelors who never smoke.

People who will suffer from chronic indigestion, constipation, and torpid liver, or "biliousness," when Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and Pleasant Purgative Pellets are known to be reliable and speedy remedies for these diseases.

Old maids who do not love cats.

People who have catarrh, annoying and disgusting every one around them, when Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known to be a potent remedy for this disease.

Women who do not love babies.

Women who will suffer from all those painful diseases to which the sex is heir, when Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is admitted by every lady who uses it to be an efficient remedy for these maladies.

People who believe their progenitors were apes.

People who will read about "Helen's Babies," and "That Husband of Mine," and "That Wife of Mine," and "That Mother-in-law of Mine," and "That Son-in-law of Mine," and yet fail to read about themselves in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser."

Christians quarreling with each other on their way to heaven.

People who will seek health at fashionable watering places, smothering at Saratoga or Long Branch, or sacrificing themselves to "Graham diet" at Water Cures and Health Institutes, when the magnificent Invalids' Hotel, at Buffalo, offers all the elegant comforts of the finest hotels, combined with the best sanitary advantages—Russian, Turkish, and plunge baths, gymnasium, etc.—and is situated in and near some of the finest natural scenery in the Empire State.

The most peculiar of all are the people who read these paragraphs and fail to profit by them.

Deal Gently with the Stomach.

Do not rack it with violent purgatives, or permanently impair its tone with indigestible drugs of any kind; but, if your digestion is impaired, your liver out of order, your frame debilitated, or nervous system unstrung, use that wholesome and agreeable alterative and tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will certainly afford you the desired relief. None of the officinal remedies can compare with it in restorative efficacy, and as a medicinal stimulant it is by far the most desirable as well as popular article of its class. Its basis, the essential principle of sound rye, is the best possible agent for hastening the action of the botanic ingredients which it holds in solution, and those ingredients are the most efficacious which chemistry extracts from the vegetable kingdom, and medical science applies to the cure of disease.

Glad Tidings to Rheumatic Sufferers.

The great internal remedy of Dr. Herndon, the Gypsey's Gift, but lately introduced in Chicago, is all that is claimed for it, a true specific for rheumatism, acting through the blood, and prompt and certain in its curative power. One bottle sufficient. Try it—and prove it.

There's No Use Talking

About the adulterated, cheap baking powders in comparison with DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. The latter is strictly pure, wholesome, and is put up full weight. Satisfactory results in using are guaranteed every time.

"KNOWLEDGE is power," and we publish this to inform you that if you wish a sure and certain remedy for Heart Disease, Nervousness, Sleepless Nights and General Debility, caused by an over exertion of the system, attended with sluggish action of the Heart, we convey to you the Knowledge that you can exert the Power to relieve yourself by using Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, a grand preparation to accomplish the above results. Send to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet of testimonials, and read the good it has done others. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

NO MAN in his senses should buy worthless horse and cattle powders, simply because it is put up in large packages. Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders are put up in small packages, but are absolutely pure and are immensely valuable.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT is, without doubt, the safest, surest and best remedy that has ever been invented for internal and external use. It is applicable to a great variety of complaints, and is equally beneficial for man or beast. Find out about it and thank us for the advice.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or protracting fevers usually follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.
As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Release of the Bond Judgment.

We desire to state just how we came to print the proposition on the tickets for the release of the bond judgment. Geo. Blair asked us if we would print that on the Democratic tickets, and we said we could not unless we had some authority for doing so. He then brought us the following, upon which we printed the tickets as therein requested:

Tom. Mays, Sir—It is the wish of the Board of County Commissioners, that a vote be taken at the April election, upon the release of the bond judgment, and for that purpose that that request be printed on the ballots.

Geo. H. Duncan.

March 29th, 1878.

Comissioner Blair instructed us by letter to print 200 tickets for him in accordance with the above.

We were informed that an agreement had been had between the Commissioners and those interested in the matter. Mr. Brandon, of Jackson-tp., first told us that there was no record of any filed in the auditor's books relative to such an arrangement, and thereupon we immediately cut off of all the tickets not taken out, the proposition relative to the release of the judgment, and requested the two townships that had taken them out to do the same

The following agreement was entered into by all the papers in the county:

We hereby agree, each of us to print upon all tickets printed at our offices for the first of April elections, 1878, words necessary to take an expression of the wishes of the people, upon the propriety of discharging the bondsmen of ex-Treasurer Blair, of DeKalb Co.

We make this statement in justice to ourself, that the insinuations of certain parties may be met. We had nothing further to do with the matter, and acted in good faith towards the voters and Commissioners.

* * *

—A new idea breaks in on our troubled sleep. Let the war between Russia and any other country go on, if go on it must. It will not only create a demand for our surplus productions, but they may want more soldiers. Let the Government mobilize the great army of tramps and hire them to go to England or her enemies It would tickle the boys to get a good square meal once, and a shelter tent to cover them. We could afford to loose the sight of their warm countenances and their weary single-file march over the country, that their gool may be secured. We could even deny ourselves of the luxury of finding our smoke houses robbed of their contents, now and then, that they might find the blessings of other employment. And then we would be turning an honest penny and gather strength from chaos and inefficiency.

* * *

—A recomendation comes from the House committee that the Presidential term be six years instead of four. Why should a change occur now. For a century we have adhered to a rule wisely established in our infancy, until it is now a part of our institutions. The increas of our wealth, population and development, does not in the least interfere with the time honored custom. Why not make it ten or twenty years if change it at all. We are in favor of the four years term. If an inch is given a rod will be demanded. Six years now, a lifetime after awhile.

* * *

—When a republican congress changed the terms of our bonds from greenbacks to coin, and then further changed them to gold alone by demonetizing silver, the democrats proposed to pay the maimed soldiers and the widows and orphans of those who fell in defense of the Union in gold as well as the bondholders, but the republicans voted it down. They thought greenbacks were good enough for the pensioners of government but not good enough for the bondholders.

* * *

—The Moffat bell bunch is a little machine that registers consecutive numbers, and rings a bell at each number. It is proposed in several cities to put this in the hands of saloon keepers instead of a license and tax them one cent for every drink sold. It is claimed that Chicago would realize $50,000 a week at that rate. It is thought the saloon keeper would punch for every drink when paid, through the fear that his saloon would be closed if found to be remiss in his duties.

* * *

—The Columbia City Post declares gravel roads a fraud. It certainly must be from inferior road beds of this kind, that it arrives at this conclusion. In other counties, where they have been largely, and properly established, there is a very general appreciation of their value. There would not be so much legislation for the encouragement of these roads if they were frauds. We wish DeKalb county could boast of a number of miles of such highways.

* * *

—Mr. Scattergood does not hope to get any votes in the south precinct, as they have no organization there; and either Mr. Walsworth or Mr. Kutzner will be successful. This being the case Republicans will be slow to play into the hand of the Democrats, by throwing away their votes on the greenback candidate.—Press.

And yet Mr Kutzner was elected all the same. Our thanks are due our noble allies, for their little lift last Monday.

—The caucus in Butler township to appoint delegates to the County Convention, will be held the first Saturday in June.

APRIL FOOL!

THE "INS" AND "OUTS."

—LOTS OF "SCRATHING."

The first township spring election took place last Monday, and passed off very orderly and quietly, with little or no excitement except at Waterloo. The Greenbackers there managed to poll a good large vote, notwithstanding the Press. It did us great good, however, to learn of their signal success, and trust they will hold their own against the macchinations of a subsidized republican press. In the different townships the most prominent feature of the election was the varying fortunes of the two parties. In Keyser we expected to chronicle a democratic victory, and doubtless might have done so if Clark, republican, hadn't walked away with fifty-one majority for trustee. The gallant democracy, however, succeeded in electing one constable; enough glory for one day—when you can't get any more.

Then Butler township changed her political complexion as to her trustee. Mr. Brighton, republican, being elected over Mr. Knott.

Grand old Democratic Jackson fought nobly, and staid by her guns until the last Modoc was scalped. If there is any one spot on this green footstool where peace and comfort and true happiness reigns, it must be in Little Jackson. If ever we get able we will endeavor to abide there

Concord held on in the even tenor of her ways by eight majority, Mr. Draggoo, the democratic condidate for trustee, being "scooped" by a few of his friends, who could have elected him.

Saucy, incorrigible Little Newville, with a half dozen votes, went republican of course. Where there are but few they always get a majority, but where the great intelligent masses of the people have sway, there the democracy hold their own. Take Wilmington for instance, immersed in her 120 republican majority, and notice what a grand triumph can be obtained by "we"—democrats and greenbackers Dan. Tomlinson was largely elected, the first democratic trustee in that township since the flood.

Troy has not been heard from, and the probabilities are that she has crawled in her hole and pulled her hole in after her.

Stafford re elects Greenwalt, republican, making no change.

Franklin, as usual, is reliably democratic, when she elects all her ticket. Mr. B. F. Greenwood got about 20 majority for trustee.

Smithfield was on the war path somewhat, Capt. Jack having taken refuge in the Lava Beds. An effort was made to get the scalp of our friend Clark, democrat, but he saw them and went three better, having been elected by that majority.

Fairfield, another bright, particular spot, has not been heard from definitely at this writing, Wednesday.

Baxter, at Waterloo, told us last night that if he heard that Fairfield had gone republican, he would have out the artillery and jollify, and if we heard it we might then know that the great north-west had gone against us. We listened all night for the peal of the guns, but the only sound we heard was the crowing of a cock, and we are still in the belief that Fairfield is still in the hands of the unterrified.

Having revolved around we now settle down in the middle to find Union township is not so heavily republican as she used to was. At this precinct a small vote was polled, 466, while Waterloo dune much better, 430, voters taking part. Auburn increased her majority while Waterloo magnanimously divided her vote between the three tickets. We give the vote of the township as follows:

—Democrats of Wilmington have nominated Tomlinson, a northern man, for Trustee, thinking Republicans will walk into their little parlor" on the locality issue.—Press.

And so they did, and all is serene. Its something to carry two of the strongest Republican townships in the county.

* * *

—Here is something short but very suggestive. There are 218,563 Democrats in the State of Indiana, who are now represented by four members of Congress, while 208,011 Republicans have nine members.

—There is one disgrace at the national capital that ought to be removed, and that is a member of the house from Virgina, named Douglas, who is drunk about all the time.

Coming with Songs to Greet You.

The grand augmentation of the renowned Alleghanians, vocalists, Swiss bell-ringers, Benjamin's Crystal Chimes and Silver Helicon Band. Now returning from the Orient, after three years' successful tour on the Pacific coast, forming in all the most select, the most musical, the most wonderful, the most refined, the most laughable, the most versatile operetta troupe in the world. The travels of the Alleghanians have extended to all parts of the civilized globe, their entertainments being patronized by kings, queens, nobles, and the most distinguished men of the age, who have lavished upon them the most flattering demonstrations of approval. Owing to other engagements they can remain only Monday evening, April 8th. Admission 25c. Reserved seats 35c. For sale at Willis & Co's Book Store.

Garrett.

The Republicans elected their entire ticket, with the exception of the constables. O. C. Clark for Trustee, on the Republican ticket received 235 votes, and Washington Teeters 182. Lyman Lockwood for Assessor, 214 votes, and Jas. A. McClure 199; Isaac Ditmar for Justice of the Peace, 209, and John Grube 207. The Constables on the Republican ticket, Lewis Griffith, 189, David Culver, 202, Democratic, Chas. Young, 227, Holems Link, 208. There must be a more friendly feeling worked up between the Democrats in Garrett, and those in the country, or they will never accomplish anything in Keyser township. This is the weak point on which the Republicans got the advantage of us at this election. They did not win on any stratagem or shrewdness, but only took advantage of us on this point, as there was a good opportunity offered them. There was 416 votes against the release of the Bondsmen in the Bond Case. X.

—The Ladies Presbyterian social, will be entertained by Mrs. Dr. Ford, at her residence, on next Wednesday eve. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Mrs. J. E. Rose, Sec'y

—It must be good, for everybody recommends it., and doctors perscribe it. We mean Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the great cough remedy. Sold in every drug store.

—Mr. Mulchey of the Saginaw depot, has handed us a copy of the "Star," published at Lancaster, N. Y. It is a bright, newsy sheet, full of witty hits and local paragraphs.

—Always keep on hand as delay increases suffering. If you have a cough or cold use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It will cure you. Price 25 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Don't ruin your health, and make yourself disagreeable to other people by your continual coughing A 25 cent bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup will cure you. Sold in every drug store

—Our country is to be largely represented at the Paris Exposition. Five government vessels have already sailed, and several others are expected to leave with articles for exhibition.

—It is said that the muddy roads have prevented the moving of our last wheat crop to such an extent, that about three-fourths of it still remains in the hands of the producer.

—The best reform in domestic life is without doubt the introduction of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Where it is known no more laudanum is given to the baby. It sells for 25 cent. At F. E. Davenport's.

Let Taxpayers Read.

The time for paying taxes will close on the third Monday in April, and all not paid by that time will be declared delinquent, and the penalty assessed. Let all make an effort to get even on taxes and save trouble and expense.

—There is an advance in the price of wheat, as the war cloud over Europe becomes darker and darker. The price paid yesterday was $1.20. If the roads were good there would be a lively business in the grain trade.

—We have in our mind's eye several parties, lately in this county, who have removed hence without paying up what they honestly owe for their paper. It is our intention to show them up if they don't come to time.

—Our friend Dry. Houghton has the boss yoke of oxen. Notwithstanding the bad roads they pulled a stick of timber 1x4 through town the other day. There ain't much meat on 'em, but by golly they're good.

—HURT.—A Mr. John Sheffer's little girl was hurt pretty badly last Saturday, by falling from a buggy in front of Miller & Getrost's store. Her clothing caught on the springs of the vehicle throwing her head-formost upon the crossing.

—We would not object to Mays printing our middle name in full, if he would learn how to spell it correctly.—Waterloo Press.

Well, we'll try. Kellie. How does that suit you, Charley. We aint so sure about the first part, but we'll bet our bottom dollar on the last.

—Ann Eliza Young, one of the wives of the late Brigham Young, will lecture at the Presbyterian church in this place on April 12th. She addressed a large audience a few weeks ago at Angola, and all who heard her were delighted with the lecture Secure your seats early. Admission 50 cents.

—Jennie May Jones, the pretty little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Jones, of Waterloo, aged about six years, died on the 29th, and was brought to this place for burial. Rev. G. W. Dinius, preached the funeral sermon, at the Baptist church. It was neat, eloquent, appropriate, and just long eneough, a feature that others would do well to imitate.

Just Received.

A large invoice of all the spring styles of goods in the Millinery line, have just been received at Lannings. There are some very fine designs in bonnets, and the trimmings this season are simply lovely. Also a fine line of fancy goods. All the new styles opened out for the inspection of the public. Those desiring a new spring bonnet, should not fail to call and see our stock, and obtain prices.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lane removed from this city, last Tuesday, to Auburn, where they expect to reside. The Professor's business seems to be more favorable in that place. Mr. Lane is one of the finest music teachers in this part of the country, and we should be glad if he could have found it more profitable for his residence amongst us. However, he will still visit us occasionally for the purpose of instructing.—North Manchester News.

LaOtto Items.

—More rain, more mud.

—Salters & Stafford were on a business tour to Chicago, last week.

—The prospects for a wedding in this place, is getting daily better.

—The transfer depot has been moved to the north east corner of the crossing, the R. R. Companies intend to plank the space between the passenger depot and the Eel River road, using the G. R. & I depot for a Union depot.

—The many rains of late, are a source of great pleasure to the proprietor of the Lake Side House.

—A strange couple passed through our village one day last week—enroute for the far west, they said—the man perhaps was 40 years old, and the girl, or child rather, not more than 14. Man and wife they said they were.

—Notwithstanding the inclemency of the evening, a few of Geo. Post's friends gave him a call at Era Station last Wednesday eve., and royally were the guests entertained by the courteous host and his fair assistant, Miss Ada Terry. Post has for some time been agent at Era Station, which position he has filled with honor to himself, and general satisfaction to the company, but ill health coming on he was compelled to throw up his position, to the heart felt regret of his host of friends. Mr Murra, of Reading, Mich., supercedes Post as Agt., a young man of undoubted qualifications and honesty, but withal, in holy fear of women. Brace up Murra, they aint half as dangerous as they would have us think they are. DANIEL.

"What I Know of Mormonism"

AT THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH!

AUBURN, IND.,

FRIDAY, APRIL 12th, 1878.

REFINED, CHASTE, INSTRUCTIVE.

Endorsed by Statesmen, Clergymen Lawyers, the Press, and People Generally.

Tickets for sale at Willis' Book Store and Post Office, Auburn; Willis', Waterloo; Post Office, Butler; Post Office, Garrett. No extra charge for reserved seats. Be sure to secure seats early. Admission fifty cents.

Richland Chips.

EDITOR COURIER—Please accept a few chips from the Richland Center chip-basket.

—Not much maple sugar made in this section.

—Farmers busy ditching, repairing and chopping wood.

—Egg buyers have commenced going their rounds notwithstanding the bad roads.

—Mr. Daniel Lintz caught a fish weighing four pounds, in the lake near his own home.

—Divine services in the Lutheran church once in two weeks, at half past 10 o'clock. Rev. Rice pastor.

—On Monday last, the body of Amos Krat was discovered floating in a pond, near Richland Center, and far from his own residence. Starvation and hard times is said to be the cause of the rash act. JOHN.

St Joe Items.

—Wheat is worth $1.15 @ 1.20, oats 25c, corn 35, to 38.

—Will John F. explain why he keeps the Doctors dog. It can't be to avoid the assessor, is it?

—Some of the Democrats of this corner think that Concord packed the caucus. Can Concord explain.

—Some of our teamsters would like to change weather prophets, so as to get better roads and less rain.

—Considerable grain is handled at our Elevator every day, notwithstanding the roads are in a pitable situation.

—Mr. Hyde, agent of B. & O. R. R. at this place has been transfered to Cromwell, and a Mr. Miller of Beardstown has taken the office.

—At the election held at this place today, the following officers were elected: Wm. Henderson, R. Trustee; John H. Gill, D. Assessor; J. B. White, R. Jonathan Shull, D. Justices; Byron Woodcox D., H. Baker R., and Smith R., Constables. Hardly a straight ticket of either party having been voted, the east part of the township against the west. We leave it to the west to say which side came out best.

Butler Items.

—Rev. Lamport is attending the annual conference of his church, this week.

—Our township went in strong against the release of the Bondsmen in the Bond Case.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius, a former pastor of the U. B. Church, spent a night with Rev. Butler this week.

—And still our people will rush into law to settle little matters, that do not require such extreme measures.

—Both the Lutheran and the Methodist churches were graced by large audiences last Sabbath eve. The pulpits were filled by Rev's. Burns and Butler.

—Subsequent to our sending in the list of presents to the bride Mrs. Loe. Solomon last week, she was the recipient of several other costly tributes of love and respect.

—One of the unpleasant features of the closing of our school is, that we shall then be deprived of the familiar association of our worthy Professor, Bowersocks, who intends returning to his former home, near Edgerton, Ohio.

—One more week of school after this. Then will come the 'blank" for our youths, though with some the vacation is sighed for However it is not probable that they dream that garden must be made, and the front yard cleaned, etc., etc.

—The official corps of our township stands thus for the coming year: Trustee, Dan'l Tomlinson; Assessor, Elihu Ocher; Justices of the Peace, J. J. Sise, J. Wilson and J. R. Young; Constables, A. J. Seidenright, Dan'l McNabb, I. A. Likens and J. Chambers.

—Notwithstanding the almost impassable condition of the roads, we polled a heavy vote last Monday. The interest in several instances approached intensity, and had the real old fashioned ring in it, though everything passed off peacably, and without any disgusting riotous demonstrations.

—"Fen Slips," Knuckle Down," are the professional terms used in one of the most intensely exciteing games of the day. It is usually played by boys taller or shorter, depending on the number of marbles he may possess. The game field is upon any dry spot that can be found, which at the present time retards seriously the universality of the past time. O! how we have mourned in the long gone youthful days, over the loss of a certain "lucky brownie" and cherished agate.

Junction Items.

—We have a traveling tin shop at the Junction. What next?

—School commenced Monday with Miss Cora Grube as teacher.

Miss Ada Richmond, of Logansport, is visiting friends at this place.

—J. J. Martin spent Saturday and Sunday with friends in South Whitley.

—Mr. White, traveling Auditor for B & O., visited the Junction Tuesday morning.

—The lady who lost the coral pin can have the same by calling at the depot, this place.

The meetings at this place have closed with but little encouragement to the ministers. They did their part, most assuredly.

—Miss Whetsel, who has been visiting friends at this place for the past two weeks, returned home Tuesday to take up her school.

—Mr. Whuter, of Jackson, Michigan, spent Saturday and Sunday with Mr. J. S. Gale, of this place. From all accounts we think Jno. made it pleasant for him.

—That young man who went to call on his lady the other night had better let the chair rest on all fours next time, then he will not fall all over the floor and among the old folks in their rest.

—Mr. E., the young lawyer, got left badly Sunday evening. Our young friend Frank was too soon for him. We honor the choice of the young lady, as Frank is a good boy.

—The genial and whole-souled landlord, Baker, at this place, is doing a good business. Every one who partakes of his bountiful table pronounces it a good meal.

PERKINS.

Spencerville Items.

—Dan. had too much forty rod Thursday.

—Rev. Erick made two more souls happy Thursday.

—Miss Tilly Knight has returned after an absence of several months.

—Drawing "cuts" is a poor way to settle matters politically. Don't fight, boys, your little hands were not made, &c.

—The political state is receiving its usual amount of mar'as and scratches, and Concord will come forward with a long list of her able sons, seeking an inheritance at the public's hands, subject of course to the decision of the conventions to assemble this fall.

—Since the caucus of the two parties, both of which passed off with the utmost unanimity, with the usual disappointment of official aspirants, nothing of importance has transpired to mar the peace and harmony of the community, unless it be the chill which affected a certain young man, who last Saturday night made his bed among the beasts of the stable. His wall being against the sudden change of the weather, which rendered his bed uncomfortable and caused his bosom to heave and sigh for the comforts of Coburn's family fireside.

—We can scarcely refrain from giving publicity to the names of four certain young men, who Thursday night used the furnace at the furniture factory for the purpose of roasting chickens. This thing of stealing chickens has become an intolerable nuisance. People in town cannot raise a few chickens without sneak-thieves carrying them off to their night orgies, and we only refrain in this instance from giving names out of sympathy for their friends. A repetition of the act will be sufficient to send their names to the county papers, and call upon them the penalty of the law.

Sunday Music.

—Rev. Mr. Ervin has not returned from conference yet.

—The young folks held their prayer meeting Tuesday evening last.

—The M. E. Sabbath school will reorganize next Sunday afternoon, at half past two o'clock.

—There was no singing at the Presbyterian church Sunday afternoon. The leader not putting in an appearance was the cause.

—Rev. Wm. Meese delivered a splendid sermon both morning and evening at the M. E. church. The choir was not present in the evening—or a part of them—yet the singing was very good.

—Several meeting have been held at the Presbyterian church to raise money for the minister. It will have to be done immediately, or they will not have any preaching next Sabbath.

EXAGGERATIONS.

If there is any one mannerism universal among man kind, it is that of coloring to highly the things we describe. We are not content with simply telling the truth, we must exaggerate, we must over draw, we must have a "little too much red in the brush." Who ever heard of a dark night, that was not as "dark as pitch?" of a strong man who was not as strong as a lion? I would walk "fifty miles on foot" to see the man who never caricatures the subject on which he speaks. From "rosy morn to dewy eve," in our common conversation, we are constantly overstating the truth. If somewhat wakeful in the night, "we have scarcely had a wink of sleep." If a breeze blows up while on the lake, the waves are sure to run "mountain high." If a man grows rich, we all say he "rolls in money." No longer than yesterday, a friend, who would shrink from wilful misrepresentations, told us hastily, as he passed, that the newspaper had "nothing in it but advertisements."

Jackson Center.

—Two-wheeled carts are all the go.

—Roads are good—when you get to the bottom.

—A base ball club is being organized with every promise of a brilliant success.

—They dog crop is getting short. The assessor will soon be around. Nothing like trying to save "a dollar or two."

—To enliven the occasion, on Monday, jumping was resorted to, and Billy Magginus was the champion.

—The election passed off quietly and pleasantly, the democratic majority being 72. The largest ever cast in the "Southern Confederacy." STOUT.

—List of unclaimed letters in Auburn P. O., March 30, 1878.

Charley Bashler, Maggie Carr, Wm. Hatsel, C. Holman, Henrich Burman, Eunice Long, H. C. McDonald, Auguste Tugnetti. JOSEPH RAINIER, P. M.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The First National Bank of Tarrytown, N. Y., has collapsed. About $100,000 of worthless paper is among its assets, which fall short of the liabilities about $50,000.

Samuel Chambers and George Collins, both colored, convicted of outraging a female tramp named Kate Smith, alias O'Toole, were executed at New Castle, Del., on Friday, March 22.

Hon. J. Glancy Jones, ex-Member of Congress, ex-Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and Minister to Austria during Buchanan's Administration, died last week at Reading, Pa.... The steamer Magenta exploded a boiler on the Hudson river, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., last week. Two men were killed, two fatally scalded, and eight others seriously injured.

There was a triple execution at Bloomsburg, Pa., on March 25. Three Mollie Maguires—Patrick Hester, Peter McHugh and Patrick Tully—were the victims. Their crime was the murder, in 1868, of Alex. W. Rea, of Columbia county, Pa.... Philadelphia had a destructive fire, involving the loss of $1,000,000 of property on Fourth street, near Arch.

New York has had a destructive conflagration. The property destroyed consisted of several large stores in Canal and Howard streets. The loss is estimated at $500,000.... The Fall River mill operatives are urging the manufacturers to reduce the hours of labor instead of the rate of wages.... Judge Blatchford, of New York, has decided that the suit of the Government against Samuel J. Tilden, for the recovery of unpaid income tax, must go before a jury for trial.... Another movement has been started in New York for the release of Boss Tweed.

A citizen of Philadelphia, having been allowed to make a thorough examination of the much-talked-of Keeley motor, has just reported the result of his labors. After several months of careful scrutiny he comes to the conclusion that Mr. Keeley is an ingenious mountebank and his machine a fraud and a humbug.

THE WEST.

The most notable theatrical event of the season in Chicago has been the production of a new French play entitled "A Celebrated Case," now running at McVicker's Theater. No modern drama has so completely enthralled the sympathies of an audience. It is emotional to an intense degree. From the rise of the curtain to the end of the sixth act, says a Chicago paper, "the attention is kept on the strain to an almost painful degree, by the sustained interest of the story, the ingenuity with which the plot is woven, and the all-absorbing sympathy evoked by the pathetic tale of heroic suffering unfolded in its development."

The Citizens' Savings Bank, of Findlay, Ohio, has suspended for sixty days. Assets, $225,000, and liabilities about $200,000.

The late severe weather inflicted serious damage upon the fruit crop in many parts of the Northwest.... There is stored in the elevators of Chicago, 1,190,260 bushels of wheat; 347,187 bushels of corn; 226,962 bushels of oats; 165,829 bushels of rye, and 570,035 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,518,293 bushels, against 8,516,357 bushels at this period last year.... Cincinnati is greatly agitated over the mysterious disappearance of ex-Congressman Vance. It is feared he has been murdered.

Two men were frozen to death near Cheyenne, Wyoming, during the prevalence of the snow-storm of the 27th ult.

THE SOUTH.

A frightful saw-mill explosion occurred near Richmond, Va., last week. Five persons were killed and seven wounded, two of them fatally.

Dexter McCreary and Fortune Bush (colored) were hanged at Barnwell Court House, S. C., last week, for the murder of Stephen Enricks, his wife and two children. After killing the parents, the murderers fired the dwelling and the children burned to death.... One man was instantly killed and several fatally injured by an explosion of dynamite near Baltimore, a few days ago.

Two of the worst young desperadoes in the Southwest, Joseph and Teek Brassell, were recently executed at Cookesville, Tenn. They were brothers, aged respectively 23 and 20 years. The elder confessed that he had shot nine men.

GENERAL.

The United States steamer Wyoming, which recently sailed from New York with a cargo of articles for the Paris Exposition, was found to be in a leaking condition when about a fourth of the way over, and was compelled to put back.... John Wallace, suspected of the murder of his wife, child and niece, mention of which has been heretofore made, was, last week, taken from the jail of Littleton, W. Va., and hung by a mob of infuriated citizens. The fiend made a full confession, which cleared his brother of complicity in the crime, but implicated one George Villiers, who is now in custody.

It is reported that Gov. Emery, of Utah Territory, has gone over to the Mormons, and he will probably be removed by the President.

WASHINGTON.

Hon. John Allison, Register of the Treasury for the past nine years, died last week. Mr. Allison was a Pennsylvanian, and was 66 years old.

The Secretary of the Treasury has announced the appointment of the following as Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad: Charles F. Adams, Jr., Massachusetts; Ralph P. Buckland, Ohio; G. W. Smythe, Iowa; Daniel Chadwick, Connecticut; and C. C. Housel, Nebraska.

The President has appointed ex-Congressman Glenni W. Scofield, of Pennsylvania, Register of the Treasury, vice Mr. Allison, deceased.... The Senate Railroad Committee has agreed upon a bill extending the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad.

The House Commerce Committee has agreed upon a bill of much importance to Western navigation interests. It provides that all wrecks sunk which obstruct navigation must be raised by their owners after sixty days' notice, and that, in case the Government is compelled to raise them, the underwriters and owners shall have no claim to the property.

Much of the blame that has rested upon Mr. Delfosse on account of the Halifax fishery award should be shifted to the shoulders of ex-Secretary Fish.... Correspondence has been brought to light at Washington showing that, after having once refused to accept the Belgian Minister, for the very excellent reason that he represented a country under the protection of Great Britain, Secretary Fish was subsequently induced to change his mind, and to earnestly urge Delfosse to serve as arbitrator in the Fishery Commission.

The income-tax proposition is not likely to come before the present session of Congress, for the reason that the Ways and Means Committee are of the opinion that it is inexpedient to re-enact such a law at the present time.

POLITICAL.

The Rhode Island Democrats held their State Convention at Providence last week. J. B. Barnaby was nominated for Governor, and Isaac Lawrence for Lieutenant Governor.... A Democratic State Convention has been called to meet in Arkansas on the 4th of July.... The South Carolina House of Representatives, by an overwhelming vote, has adopted a resolution intended to conciliate the national sentiment of the country. It requests the Governor, in case he deems it expedient, to instruct an order of nolle prosequi to be entered in any of the prosecutions brought, or which may be brought, by the State, based upon the facts found by the joint investigating committee on public frauds.

Washington dispatches report a rumor to the effect that the President is contemplating a reconstruction of his Cabinet, and that Messrs. Evarts, Key and Schurz will retire.... A Washington correspondent says Montgomery Blair recently asserted that a bill was being drafted by able lawyers, and would at an early day be introduced in Congress, proposing to reopen the Presidential question.

A Washington dispatch says "a number of Senators and members of Congress called upon the President with reference to the speech of Senator Howe. They all expressed more feeling in the matter than the President himself, and suggested that the speech be answered, [illegible] might be an admission of its entire truth. The President took a different view, placing himself on the ground that what he had done in the way of official action was based on his sense of right, without thinking for a moment what might be the result as affecting him personally. He was opposed to a public response, preferring that his acts should be the best interpreter of his motives and principles. He had sought to perform his duty, and with this he was content, no matter how others with prejudiced minds might view his conduct."

The State Convention of the National party of Illinois was held at Springfield on Wednesday, March 27. A platform of principles was adopted and a ticket for State officers placed in nomination. E. N. Bates, a former Republican, was nominated for Treasurer, and Frank H. Hall, an ex-Democrat, chosen for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

A call has been issued for the assembling of the Pennsylvania Republican State Convention at Harrisburg on March 15.

This was followed immediately by the resignation of Lord Derby, Minister of Foreign Affairs. In announcing his retirement, Lord Derby said he did not disagree with the Cabinet as to the conditions upon which England should be represented in the conference, but solely upon certain measures which he did not consider prudent in the interests of peace or necessary for the safety of the country. Disraeli then explained that the measure objected to by the retiring Minister was the calling out of the reserves. This step had been resolved upon, he frankly said, in consequence of the Government's belief that the congress will not be held, and that all hopes of rectifying the disturbed balance of power in the Mediterranean had ceased.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, March 22.—Senate.—Mr. McDonald addressed the Senate in favor of the Thurman Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill, after which the Deficiency bill was taken up, and, after adopting the amendment appropriating $20,000 to assist Secretary Schurz in prosecuting the timber depredators in the public lands, the bill was put to a vote and passed.

House.—Mr. Ward, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill supplementary to the Homestead laws of the United States providing that persons bona fide intending to make actual entry and settlement under the Homestead acts, shall receive, through the Secretary of the Interior, free transportation for themselves, families, farming utensils, and personal effects to their new homes, and also seeds for two years cultivation.... Mr. Atkins introduced a bill to provide for the more economical survey of the public lands.... Mr. Hunton introduced a bill to reorganize a system of superintendence of railroads.... A large number of private bills were passed.

Monday, March 25.—Senate.—Mr. Howe called up his resolution asking the President for information in regard to the alleged defalcation of Judge Whittaker, of Louisiana, who presided at the Louisiana trial, and proceeded to make his promised speech, which consisted of a sharp attack upon the Administration. The President was arraigned for appointing Democrats and Liberals to office, and his civil-service reform policy was denounced as a pretense only. Mr. Howe was particularly severe upon the President's Southern policy, and declared that Packard's title to the Governorship of Louisiana was as good as Hayes' title to the Presidency.... Mr. Wallace submitted an amendment to the House bill to repeal the Resumption act, which provides that on and after July 1, 1878, United States legal-tender notes shall be receivable for all debts and dues, both public and private.... The Senate, in executive session, after a long debate, rejected, by a vote of 22 to 17, the nomination of Lewis E. Parsons, United States Attorney for the Northern and Middle Districts of Alabama.

House.—Under a call of the States a large number of bills were introduced and referred, among them the following: By Mr. Stephens (by request), authorizing the issue of Postoffice bonds bearing interest at the rate of 30 cents for every three calendar months, and redeemable on demand at any Postoffice having funds on hand; by Mr. Banning, authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund and pay back certain taxes to distillers, also, to reorganize the army; by Mr. Boyd, authorizing the State of Illinois to sell certain of the lake grounds in Chicago, and to use the proceeds on the Illinois river improvement; by Mr. Gunter (by request), to aid the education and advancement of the colored people; by Mr. Schleicher, to regulate the value of subsidiary silver coin (it provides that such coin shall be a legal tender for any amount not exceeding $10, and that whenever presented in amounts of $100 the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue therefor legal-tender money); by Mr. Sapp, for a branch mint in Council Bluffs.... Mr. Springer's motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to authorize the coinage of gold and silver on the same terms, and to permit the deposit thereof for the same purposes, was rejected—yeas, 149; nays, 109—not two-thirds in the affirmative.... Mr. Goode moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to suspend the operation of the Sinking-Fund act for five years. Rejected—yeas, 122; nays, 112—not two-thirds in the affirmative.

Tuesday, March 26.—Senate.—The Senate passed, without amendment, the House bill extending the time for the payment of the tax on whisky in bond.... Mr. Merrimon made a long speech on the Pacific Railroad Funding bill.... The Judiciary Committee reported a bill for the immediate repeal of the Bankrupt law, but allowing all pending proceedings to go on to their conclusion, as if the law remained in force. .... On motion of Mr. Blaine, the correspondence between the American and British Governments in regard to the appointment of M. Delfosse on the Halifax Commission was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. Blaine made a speech, in which he again declared that the award was an unjust one, and ought not to be paid.

House.—Fernando Wood, on behalf of the Ways and Means Committee, reported the Tariff bill to the House. It was referred to the committee of the whole. A resolution was adopted making the bill the special order for April 4, and from day to day until disposed of.... Mr. Atkins, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, reported the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill.... The House ordered the printing of 200,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and 25,000 copies of the report of the Forestry Commission.

Wednesday, March 27.—Senate.—Mr. Kernan introduced a bill granting pensions to Indians who were in the service of the United States in the war of 1812 as scouts, guides or warriors.... Mr. Conkling introduced a bill appropriating $500,000 for the improvement of the Harlem river, between Randall's island and the Hudson river.... Mr. Hill, of Georgia, addressed the Senate in opposition to the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill reported by the Judiciary Committee.... The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was passed.

House.—The bill to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases in the United States was passed. It provides for the establishment and enforcement of quarantine by the Marine Hospital Service wherever they may deem it necessary, to prevent the introduction of yellow fever or other contagious diseases into the ports of the country.... The House took up the Massachusetts contested-election case, Dean against Field, and, after debate, a vote was taken upon the minority resolution declaring Field entitled to the seat. Result—Yeas, 120; nays, 119. The Speaker, on announcing the vote, cast his vote in the negative, thus tying the vote and defeating the resolution. Butler voted with the Democrats in the negative, and the following Democrats with the Republicans in the affirmative: Hartridge, Herbert, Jones of Alabama, Potter, Rea, Stenger, Walsh, Williams of Delaware, and Cutler.

Thursday, March 28.—Senate.—Mr. Teller, from the Committee on Railroads, reported, with an amendment, the Senate bill to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company, the object of which is to construct and operate a railroad and telegraph line from Cheyenne to the Pacific ocean, via Deadwood, Fort Fetterman and Helena, Mont.... Mr. Eaton introduced a bill to allow American registry to foreign-built vessels.... A bill was passed granting a pension of $50 per month to Gen. James Shields, of Missouri.... Mr. Bailey, of Tennessee, addressed the Senate in support of the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill.... The Senate, in executive session, confirmed a large number of appointments, among them that of Glenni W. Scofield to be Register of the Treasury. The nomination of Reynolds, of Alabama, for First Auditor of the Treasury, was rejected.

House.—The Massachusetts (Third District) contested-election case was finally disposed of by the adoption of a resolution unseating Field (Republican), and declaring Dean, the Democratic contestant, entitled to the seat. The vote stood 124 to 123. B. F. Butler, of Massachusetts, voted in the affirmative with the Democrats, and the following Democrats voted in the negative with the Republicans: Cutler, Hartridge, Herbert, Henry, Potter, Rea, Stenger, Walsh, and Williams of Delaware.... Mr. Harrison desired to call up the report of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform in regard to the case of Doorkeeper Polk, but was opposed by Mr. Durham who wished to take up an appropriation bill, and, the question being put, the House refused—yeas, 107; nays, 125,—to proceed to the consideration of the Polk case. The affirmative votes were principally cast by Republicans, and the negative by Democrats.

Crime in Texas.

Texas issues a curious public document entitled "A List of Fugitives from Justice." It contains 225 pages, and puts the number of fugitives at 4,402, with forty counties yet to hear from, which cover some of the most populous portions of the State. Of these gentlemen and ladies who have wandered away from home and given the cold shoulder to the guardians of the peace whenever the latter made advances, 750 are charged with murder. Rewards, ranging from $50 to $1,000—the aggregate being $90,000—are offered for 300 of the fugitives, and detectives out of a job, as well as agriculturists, might find this State a good one to emigrate to. Apropos of which, it is estimated that over 100,000 horses have been stolen in Texas in the last three years. Some 750 indicted horse-thieves are fugitives from justice in the State, and the number that have escaped arrest is incalculable. An organized gang of several hundreds is operating in Middle Texas, and the loss of farm stock in some localities is immense. It is little wonder that, when one is caught, he is likely to be hung to the nearest tree.

Gladstone's Unpopularity.

In the hall of the Reform Club in London there are four pedestals, three of which are occupied by busts. Gladstone's bust was to have held the fourth place; but, a model being placed there the other day, such strong feeling was exhibited that, "to avoid accidents," it had to be removed within an hour.

The case of Miss Margaret Thomson, who had her pet horse shod with golden shoes and distributed showers of gold among the poor of various European towns, is in the Royal Lunatic Asylum, Gartnaval, near Glasgow, whither she was taken on her arrival in Scotland from Barcelona, Spain, having been taken charge of there by the British Consul. She is about 40 years of age. On the testimony of Dr. Tannahill she was declared unable to manage her affairs.

SHERMAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury Before the Senate Finance Committee—His Views on the Subject of Resumption.

The following is a report of the recent interview, at Washington, of the Senate Finance Committee with Secretary Sherman in regard to the repeal of the Resumption law:

Chairman of the Committee—Mr. Secretary, I have jotted down a few general questions, and some in detail, which I propose to ask you, and I suppose that other members of the committee may have questions which they may desire to ask at a later period; but I will ask some general questions, in order that you may make a statement, if you choose, with more freedom than you can by going into smaller details at commencement. First, ought the Resumption act, in your opinion, be repealed, and if not, why not?

Secretary Sherman—That question, as you say, is very general, and is rather a legislative than an executive question; but I have no objection to answering. I think that the Resumption act ought not to be repealed; that it was a declaration of public policy commenced with the act of February, 1862, and repeated by Congress several times, notably in 1866, notably again in 1869, and again by the passage of the Resumption act, that we would, as soon as practicable, redeem any United States notes which were presented for redemption in gold and silver coin. That is the declared public policy of this country, and it ought to be adhered to, and I am fully convinced that we are able to do what we have so often promised to do.

The Chairman—Do you think resumption is practicable under the law? You have partially anticipated the question, but still I ask it.

Secretary Sherman—That is a question very much of figures, and, supposing that I would have to answer it, I have brought quite a number of documents here, which I will give you, and they will speak better than I can. The best evidence that we are able to resume on the 1st of January next is the progress that has already been made. When the Resumption act was passed premium on gold was about 10½ per cent. Since that time it has been reduced to a nominal rate. It is now a little over 1. Since that time we have accumulated, in preparation for resumption, a large sum of gold.

The Chairman—It is $34,000,000 or $35,000,000.

Secretary Sherman—The amount of gold and silver coin and bullion available for resumption, in a business sense, is about $90,000,000, but the actual gold and silver bullion coin in the treasury, over and above all demand liabilities, is $71,775,860. We have in process of preparation for resumption a reduced volume of United States bonds and notes. The precise figures are familiar to you. The amount was $382,000,000 at the time of the passage of the Resumption act, and the amount now is $348,518,024. Again the amount of outstanding bank notes has been reduced. On Dec. 31, 1875, the amount was $346,479,756. On Dec. 31, 1877, $321,672,505, and on Feb. 28, 1878, the amount of bank notes outstanding was $321,989,991. But the amount of bank notes of banks in existence, not in process of liquidation, was $299,540,475, and the difference between these two sums being notes of banks in process of liquidation, although the notes are in circulation, yet an equal amount of greenbacks are in the treasury as a special deposit to redeem them.

Senator Kernan—They make part of the $348,000,000 of legal-tender notes?

Secretary Sherman—Yes, as many of the legal-tender notes are held in the treasury as there are bank notes in process of redemption.

Senator Ferry—Then there really should be but $299,000,000 of national-bank notes outstanding?

Secretary Sherman—If you count the whole greenbacks as outstanding, there would be $299,000,000 of national-bank notes. Then it must be remembered that United States notes have been in circulation since 1862, and the bank notes since 1864, and that large sums are lost or destroyed. This diminishes, to some extent, the amount outstanding; how much I don't know. You can judge as well as I.

A statement was here produced showing by months the issue of silver coin and the reduction of fractional currency under the act of April 19, 1876, from April 20, 1876, to Feb. 28, 1878, the amount of fractional currency redeemed being $24,318,089, and the total silver payments $33,479,808. The total amount fractional notes outstanding on the 16th inst. was $17,109,715. The average monthly reduction of outstanding fractional currency, estimated upon the basis of the redemptions of the past four months, is $290,000.

Senator Jones—How many millions, then, of legal tenders do you estimate as being in circulation now, outside of what you hold to redeem notes of banks in process of liquidation?

Secretary Sherman—I should think $320,000,000; deducting those that have been lost or destroyed, and those held for outstanding bank notes, make the aggregate of bank notes and greenbacks about $643,000,000. To repeat the general result of our preparations for resumption, we have already practically abolished the premium on gold, we have reduced the amount of United States notes and the amount of national-bank notes outstanding; we paid off practically the fractional currency, and now we have a very remarkable circumstance in our favor. The balance of trade is in our favor to the amount of $160,000,000 a year, bringing silver and gold and bonds back to us. In the last three years the balance of trade in our favor is $414,084,666. Now, in general answer to your question, I do express my opinion, officially and personally, that, for the reasons I have given, we can resume on the 1st of January next under the basis of the existing law.

The Chairman—What effect has the Silver bill had, or is it likely to have, on resumption?

Secretary Sherman—I do not want to tread on delicate ground. In answering that question, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to confess that I have been mistaken myself. Now, as to the Silver bill. I have watched its operation very closely. I think the Silver bill has had some adverse effects, and it has had some favorable effects, upon the question of resumption. Perhaps the best way for me to proceed would be to state the adverse effects first. It has undoubtedly stopped refunding operations. Since the agitation of the silver question I have not been able, largely, to sell bonds, although I have made every effort to do so.

Senator Jones—At what date was the last bond sold?

Secretary Sherman—We are selling bonds all the time.

Senator Jones—I mean the refunding of the bonds into 4 per cents?

Secretary Sherman—The 16th of October was the time when the last of the popular loan was paid for, and we had then a call ready to the issue of $10,000,000, and the associates, as they had a right to do, withdrew the call. The sales from the last of September, 1876, to the 15th of October were about $275,000,000. We sold $200,000,000 of 4½ per cents. and then we sold $75,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds.

Senator Allison—About a year and eleven months?

Secretary Sherman—Since October last we have sold $4,000,000, and perhaps now the sales have gone up to between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds. Now, another adverse effect the Silver bill has had is to stop the accumulation of coin. Since the 1st of January we have accumulated no coin outside of coin certificates except the balance of revenue over expenditure. The revenues in coin being more than enough to pay the interest of the debt and coin liabilities, we accumulated some coin. Another effect that the Silver bill has had is to cause the return of our bonds from Europe. Although the movement of our bonds in this direction has been pretty steady for more than a year, it is latterly largely increased; how much, I am not prepared to say. On the other hand, I will give the favorable effects. In the first place, the Silver bill satisfied a strong public demand for a bi-metallic money, and that demand is, no doubt, largely sectional. No doubt there is a difference of opinion between the West and South and East on this subject, but the desire for the remonetization of silver was almost universal. In a Government like ours, it is always good to obey the popular current, and that has been done, I think, by the passage of the Silver bill. Resumption can be maintained more easily upon a double standard. The bulky character of silver would prevent payments in it, while gold, being more portable, would be more freely demanded, and I think resumption can be maintained with a less amount of silver than of gold alone.

Senator Bayard—You are speaking of resumption on the basis of silver, or of silver and gold?

Secretary Sherman—Yes, sir; I think it can be maintained better upon a bi-metallic or alternative standard than upon a single one, and, with less accumulation of gold in this way, remonetization of silver would rather aid resumption. The bonds that have been returned from Europe have been readily absorbed—remarkably so. The recent returns in New York show that the amount of bonds absorbed in this country is at least $1,250,000 a day. This shows the confidence of the people in our securities, and their rapid absorption will tend to check the European scare.

Senator Voorhees—That shows, Mr. Secretary, that this cry of alarm in New York was unfounded, then. This capital seeks our bonds when this bi-metallic basis is declared.

Secretary Sherman—Yes; many circumstances favor this. The demand for bonds extends to the West and to the banks. I have no doubt we can sell 4½ per cents., and I think within a month we can sell all we want of 4-per-cent. bonds to carry out the Resumption law, for I would not accumulate more than $5,000,000 a month, and that largely in silver and gold bullion. There is no special necessity to force the bond market in order to maintain resumption. We now have $71,000,000 to $90,000,000 on hand, and every one can measure how much more will be necessary to maintain resumption. If the sale of bonds was ever so free I would not accumulate more than $5,000,000 a month of both metals, and all sales beyond that should be applied for refunding 6-per-cent. bonds.

Senator Allison—Do you think you can add largely to the stock of coin in this country by your process of adding to your reserves $5,000,000 per month? That is to say, will you accumulate from other countries or simply draw into the treasury accumulations already existing in our own country?

Secretary Sherman—I am glad you mentioned that point. Although since the first of January last we have accumulated no coin in the treasury, the banks since that time have accumulated more than $5,000,000 in gold per month.

Senator Ferry—Then, if you embrace the accumulation in the banks and in the treasury, it has been progressing at the rate of about $5,000,000 per month.

Secretary Sherman—Yes, sir; more than that. In New York alone the accumulation is $5,000,000 per month, but in Boston and Philadelphia it is also going on.

Senator Ferry—What, in your judgment, is there accumulated in both banks and treasury per month in amount?

Secretary Sherman—I should think it to be between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 per month. In giving an answer to Mr. Morrill's question as to the general effect of the Silver bill, I would not like to give a positive opinion. I do not think, taking it all together, that it is an obstacle in the way of resumption. It has operated in some respects adversely and in some respects favorably, but on the whole I do not think it should discourage us from resumption or from carrying out our general policy.

Senator Voorhees—Did I understand you to say you would undertake to maintain resumption with $90,000,000 of coin reserve?

Secretary Sherman—No, sir. I would undertake to resume upon the power afforded by the present law by going on and doing what I did last summer.

Senator Voorhees—How much surplus did you say you had on hand?

Secretary Sherman—I have now $71,060,000.

Senator Voorhees—Then you say that you would be willing to undertake resumption under the existing laws by the 1st of next January. Now, with the aid of the Silver bill and coinage, what amount of coin would you expect to have on hand with which to undertake resumption at that time?

Secretary Sherman—I would accumulate about $5,000,000 per month of both metals from the 1st of April to the 1st of January, which would be $45,000,000, and, if the market is favorable, I think I would try to make good the loss that I have suffered by not accumulating in January, February and March of the present year. I could in this way accumulate $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Senator Ferry—Then, on the question of resumption, your view is that, with $90,000,000 on hand, and an accumulation of $60,000,000 more, or even $40,000,000, which would be $130,000,000, you would be willing to commence resumption of the present volume of currency, both national and bank?

Secretary Sherman—Oh, yes. The banks must look out for themselves.

Senator Morrill—I will now ask you this question: How can the policy of resumption be aided by Congress?

Secretary Sherman—I am very willing to answer that, although I think it is a legislative question. I think that you can aid resumption very much if you will allow me to receive United States notes in payment of bonds, as the Senate has already expressed a willingness to do, and, if the House would concur with them, if I could sell 4 per cent. bonds for currency in purchase of 6 per cent. bonds, it would be an aid to resumption.

Senator Bayard—What would you do with the proceeds of the sale of these bonds?

Secretary Sherman—I would use them in the purchase of outstanding bonds. All I would have to do would be to pay the difference between greenbacks and gold, but that would only be paying 1 per cent. premium. I have a right to call in bonds, and I could use currency in their payment by giving $1.01 for the bond in currency, the difference between currency and gold at the present time.

Senator Bayard—You can sell your 4 per cent. bonds at par in currency, and you can then use currency to redeem higher-rate bonds.

Senator Jones—How would that aid resumption.

Secretary Sherman—By repealing a discrimination that is now made against the legal-tender note in the payment of bonds. The bond issued would be a coin bond.

A large number of questions were asked by several members of the committee, and the Secretary, in the course of his answers, said there was one thing he would recommend, namely, he would, on the 1st of October next, receive United States notes in payment for duties, and yet provide for the interest on the bonds in coin. In other words, he would assume that on the 1st of October next our notes were as good as gold and silver, and would receive them as such. You, gentlemen, will feel your way clear to allow my receiving the United States notes in payment of bonds, and will make it clear that I won't be compelled to redeem all United States notes that come in after the 1st of January next, and if you think, under the circumstances, I would be strong enough to redeem these notes on the 1st of October, I should be willing to guarantee the resumption. I think for us to go backward over all of this long, weary agony and struggle toward resumption would be a sign of national weakness, and do the nation great harm—do our credit harm, and bring injury on us all.

The Chairman asked what effect a repeal of the Resumption act would have upon the relations of currency, legal tenders and our coin gold and silver. Would not the repeal of the Resumption act cause a fall of paper below gold and silver?

Secretary Sherman—I have no doubt of that. I think the repeal of the Resumption act would at once cause a widening between coin and paper money—depending entirely on the confidence the people at large would have in the ultimate redemption of paper, but I don't want to enter upon this delicate ground.

Among other questions asked was the following, by Senator Ferry: You state that with $140,000,000 gold reserve you would be willing to hold $300,000,000 as part of the currency, and meet resumption on that basis. Now, I desire to ask if, with contraction as it is going on, it would be any obstacle to resumption, even if the outstanding circulation should be $320,000,000 on the 1st of January next?

Secretary Sherman—I think that the $20,000,000 would be provided for by an increase of bank notes.

Senator Ferry—Without any direct further contraction than under the present Resumption act?

Secretary Sherman—The present Resumption act would be sufficient. I would not by myself provide for any direct contraction of the currency except what is done under the act.

The Chairman—Don't you believe there will be an expansion come upon us naturally or by the action of the Treasury Department on the 1st of January? Will there not be more money in actual circulation after that period?

Secretary Sherman—I think and hope so.

Senator Ferry—Would not that produce a healthier condition?

Secretary Sherman—Yes, sir.

Senator Bayard—What would be the effect, in your opinion, if a declaration that $300,000,000 of treasury notes might be issued as a minimum, and as a maximum, to be supported by a retention by law of $100,000,000 of gold in the treasury?

Secretary Sherman—That would be beneficial, because I think the fear about that $300,000,000 would be overcome.

Senator Kernan—Ask your opinion is that authority to reissue legal-tender notes should be expressly given by law?

Secretary Sherman—I think that authority to reissue, unquestioned and undoubted, would take away fears of all classes of people—first, those in favor of inflation, who do not want the greenback destroyed; then in the Eastern States, where they think we ought to retire greenbacks and issue bank notes instead, and believe that we are bound, under the existing law, to pay the whole of the $300,000,000, and that we are not prepared to do so.

Senator Allison—In other words you think we cannot come to and maintain specie payments without the power to reissue?

Secretary Sherman—I do not think we can.

Talking-Machines.

Mr. Thomas A. Edison has recently invented an instrument which is, undoubtedly, the acoustic marvel of the century. It is called the "speaking phonograph," or, adopting the Indian idiom, one may aptly call it "The Sound-Writer who talks." Much curiosity has been expressed as to the workings of this instrument, so I purpose giving an account of it.

All talking-machines may be reduced to two types. That of Prof. Faber, of Vienna, is the most perfect example of one type; that of Mr. Edison is the only example of the other.

Faber worked at the source of articulate sounds, and built up an artificial organ of speech, whose parts, as nearly as possible, perform the same functions as corresponding organs in our vocal apparatus. A vibrating ivory reed, of variable pitch, forms its vocal chords. There is an oral cavity, whose size and shape can be rapidly changed by depressing the keys on a key-board. A rubber tongue and lips make the consonants; a little windmill, turning in its throat, rolls the letter R, and a tube is attached to its nose when it speaks French. This is the anatomy of this wonderful piece of mechanism.

Faber attacked the problem on its physiological side. Quite differently works Mr. Edison; he attacks the problem, not at the source of origin of the vibrations which make articulate speech, but, considering these vibrations as already made, it matters not how, he makes these vibrations impress themselves on a sheet of metallic foil, and then reproduces from these impressions the sonorous vibrations which made them.

Faber solved the problem by reproducing the mechanical causes of the vibrations making voice and speech; Edison solved it by obtaining the mechanical effects of these vibrations. Faber reproduced the movements of our vocal organs; Edison reproduced the motions which the drum-skin of the ear has when this organ is acted on by the vibrations caused by the movements of the vocal organs.—Prof. A. M. Mayer, in Popular Science Monthly for April.

The latest novelty in advertising is a gratuitous barometer. It consists of a portrait of an old toper with an enormous proboscis, which by an ingenious chemical application turns blue when dry weather is approaching, lilac when the prospects are for cloudy weather, and pink when moisture is imminent. It is irreverently named "Old Probabilities," or "the spirit bar-ometer."

The Rev. David Keppel writes for the Northern Christian Advocate, one of the official organs of the Methodist denomination, an article entitled "The Morals of Hell," in which he argues that hell is a "well-regulated prison, in morality only second to heaven." He says that no sin can be committed beyound the grave, and that, therefore, hell is necessarily free from it.

Peter Cooper on the Great Issue of the Day.

An Address to the People of the Country by the Venerable Philanthropist.

This appeal is made in behalf of the suffering millions of the American people whose money and property have been wrongfully taken from them by a course of legislation in direct violation of the first and most important requirement of the constitution of our country. That constitution has declared in those ever to be remembered words, that "We, the people, in order to establish justice, secure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America."

This general and constitution, covering as it does, the whole field of a nation's wants, has bound every member of the government by the solemnity of his oath of office, to use his best judgment to make all proper laws necessary for the establishment of justice and the promotion of the general welfare, which the people in their individual or state capacity cannot make for themselves.

No state or individual has a constitutional "right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, or to establish a system of national weights and measures, or make laws for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." This power is reserved to the congress of the people by the constitution.

The constitution has declared that "congress shall have the power, (and where power is given duties are implied) to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defence, and the general welfare of these United States."

The constitution has also declared that congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States, or any department of office thereof."

The fathers and founders of our country and government had gathered an amount of wisdom that enabled them to frame for us a constitution and form of government based on those eternal principles of truth and justice by which they saw that nature's God had entitled all men to the "inalienable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

The declaration of independence expressly says that it was to "secure these rights, that governments are instituted among men," and that "whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem most likely effectually to promote their safety and happiness."

And further, that declaration states "All experience has shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer while evils are sufferable, than they are to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed." "But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty to provide new guards for their future security."

"Such has been the patient sufferance" of the American people; they have borne with a course of financial laws that were as cruel as they are unjust. By these laws there has been taken from the people the very money which the government had authorized and paid out in exchange for all the forms of labor and property used and consumed by the government in a four years' struggle for the national life.

This money was actually paid out to the people for "value received" by the government. It was clothed with all the legal attributes of money, and sanctioned as such by the Supreme Court of the United States. It had become the people's money for all intents and purposes, as effectually as though it had all been paid to them in gold. The government had lost all control over this money so paid to the people, except to tax it as all other property, to meet the current expenses of the government. This money had been used for years by the government and the people as a national currency costing the government nothing but the paper on which it was made; it had been allowed to circulate as legal money until, as the present secretary of the treasury declared when a senator, "That every citizen of the United States had conformed his business to the legal tender law" regulating the currency of the country.

This present secretary, when a senator in 1869, gave to congress and the country a most fearful warning against any attempt to shrink up the volume of legal money which the government had been compelled to issue for the nation's salvation. He declared on that occasion in language never to be forgotten, that "the appreciation of the currency is a far more distressing operation than senators suppose." * * * * "Our own and other nations have gone through that process before." * * * *

"It is not possible to take this voyage without the sorest distress to every person except a capitalist out of debt, or a salaried officer or annuitant. It is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy and disaster. "To every railroad it is an addition of one-third to the burden of its debts, and more than that deduction to the value of its stock." * * * * "It means the ruin of all dealers whose debts become twice their (business) capital, though one-third less than their actual property. It mean the fall of all agricultural productions, without any great reduction of taxes." "What prudent man would dare to build a house, a railroad, a factory, or a barn, with the certain fact before him that the greenbacks he puts into his improvement will in two years be worth 35 per cent. more than his improvement is worth."

When that day comes, all enterprise will be suspended, every bank will have contracted its currency to the lowest limit, and the debtor compelled to meet in coin a debt contracted in currency, he will find the coin hoarded in the treasury, no adequate representation of coin in circulation, his property shrunk not only to the extent of the appreciation of the currency, but still more by the artificial scarcity made by the holders of gold." * * * * "To attempt this task by a surprise on our people, by arresting them in the midst of their lawful business, and applying a new standard of value to their property without any reduction to their debts, or giving them an opportunity to compound with their creditors, or to distribute their losses, would be an act of folly without an example of evil in modern times."

It would be literally impossible for Secretary Sherman to have drawn a more perfect picture of the scenes of wretchedness and ruin that the policy he so manfully opposed in the senate in 1869 has brought on the country, a policy that he then declared "was an act of folly without an example in ancient or modern times."

And now, the very same man, then senator, and now secretary of the treasury of the United States, is believed to have drawn the resumption act, and is now using all the powers of his mighty mind to consummate a ruin that he has so well described as "an act of folly without an example in ancient or in modern times."

These frightful evils predicted by the once Senator, and now secretary of the treasury, are being painfully verified by the many thousands of failures that are annually taking place as the result of the unjust and unconstitutional laws that have been passed. Laws promising to pay some four or five hundred millions in gold which the government did not possess, and could not command. The constitution has never given to congress any such unreasonable power. It has made it the duty of congress to "coin the money and regulate the value thereof," without saying whether money should be coined out of gold, silver, copper, nickel, or paper.

This unconstitutional promise to pay money in gold which they could not command, has been further made an occasion for congress to listen to, and adopt, the advice of the men who control the moneyed power of our own and other countries. These men have, by their arts, succeeded in obtaining from our government a course of financial legislation to advance their own interests as a class. They have doubled the expenses of the war by their influence in defeating a financial law in the senate that had passed the house of representatives after the most mature consideration.

It was an act making provision in the following words, for "a lawful money and a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States." This class interest succeeded in defeating the bill as it had passed the house of representatives, and by introducing the little word "except" into the bill, they depreciated and deprived the legal money of its power "to pay duties on imports, or interest on bonds."

This same class interest has prevailed on our government to so change the laws as to make the bonds that were at first made payable in national money to be paid in coin. They next got the law so altered as to make coin mean gold. They then succeeded in getting the gold bonds relieved from being taxed for any part of the burdens of the state or national government. It should be remembered that all bonds were originally issued to be payable in currency. This currency our government had deliberately depreciated by refusing to receive it for duties on imports, or interest on bonds.

And then our government allowed war taxes to continue until they had taken from the people the very money the government had stamped and paid out, as so many dollars of real value, made legal money, to be used as a national currency to enable the people to exchange commodities, and furnish all the supplies that were actually needed in a four years' struggle for the nation's life.

When that life was saved, the people had become the rightful owners of both their currency and their country.

Our government has no constitutional right to invalidate contracts by lessening the volume of the national currency, after the same had been issued and allowed to circulate as legal money in the payment of debts.

Such money having been paid out by the government for "value received," cannot be lessened in volume without invalidating contracts. This our government has done by having drawn from the people their money, which represents all forms of labor and property which had been used and consumed by their servants, employed and paid by the people, and all the supplies needed to put down a rebellion that then threatened destruction to all they held dear as a nation.

Was it not a most absurd and unpatriotic act of legislation to invite foreign capital, in the shape of gold, to take up our good money at 40 and 50 cents on the dollar, and turn that money into a government bond at par, payable both principal and interest in gold? Was ever a nation more deliberately and cruelly put under a heavy yoke of bondage by its rulers?

All these unjust acts must be rescinded. The people will not submit to them when they come to know their true nature and purpose.

The constitution has never given to congress (as I have before stated) the right to promise to pay hundreds of millions in gold, which they did not possess, and could not command.

It must be manifest to all that commerce can not be regulated with foreign nations, and among the several states, without a national system of money as a standard, over which congress can exercise an entire control, under constitutional restrictions only. This can never be done by the use of gold, while congress allows local banks to expand and contract, appreciate and depreciate the money of the country in their own interests as a class!

Thomas Jefferson was right when he said that 'Bank paper must be suppressed, and the circulating medium must be restored to the nation to whom it properly belongs." He wisely declared that "it is the only fund on which the government can rely for loans; it is the only resource which can never fail them, and it is an abundant one for every necessary purpose."

I find it impossible to frame an apology for a congress that could make an unconstitutional promise to pay hundreds of millions in gold which they could not command, instead of promising to receive such money as the government was compelled to issue as "the only resource which can never fail them."

Money so issued and accepted by the people should have been considered, as it was, the most sacred treasure that our country had ever possessed. It should have been held as more especially precious after it had fed and clothed our armies, and had carried our country safely through a most terrible war, proving to the world that President Grant was right when he declared the money so issued by the government was the "best currency our country had ever possessed," and that "there was no more in circulation than was needed for the dullest period of the year."

If our government had taken the advice of Franklin, Jefferson, Calhoun and Webster in the enactment of financial laws to "provide for the common defence, and the general welfare," they would have saved to our country the one-half of the cost of the late war, and the disgrace of being compelled to sell our nation's bonds at some fifty and sixty per cent. below the face value of the bonds.

Senator Beck, of Kentucky, in the senate of the United States, has drawn for the American people a most frightful picture of the course of special legislation that has taken from the people, as I have before stated, the peoples' money, and has converted the same into a national debt.

The following startling amounts have been wrung from the toiling masses of the American people leaving the debt in the main as large as ever.

The senator says: "The bondholders had, up to 1869, received $100,000,000 of profit before they got the principal of their bonds made payable in gold."

"It can be shown by the treasurer's reports, from year to year, giving the amount of bonds sold each year, and the premium on gold from 1862 to 1868, that the purchase of the bonds with paper at its face value, and the purchase of the paper at the discounts, gave a profit to the bondholders as follows:—

An account of the bondholders' clear profits arising from no investments at all may therefore be stated in the following tabular form:

1862	$ 25,138,969
1863	94,846,713
1864	306,551,583
1865	110,159,387
1866	53,787,183
1867	167,915,741
1868	253,157,765
On account of 5 per cent bonds	99,297,964
Total	$1,012,586,204

This most remarkable statement was, as Senator Beck declared, "carefully and truthfully prepared." The proof is in the official records. "It will satisfy the country," said the senator, "and ought to satisfy the bondholders and their advocates that they ought not to insult a suffering people whose hard earnings have gone to enrich them, by any complaint of want of good faith to them in the effort we are making to save the country from bankruptcy.

Our government, in addition to all the other acts of class legislation, has taken from the American people their small currency that was costing them nothing, and has put in its place, unsolicited by the people, a most inconvenient currency, thereby creating a debt of some forty million of dollars to be paid by the already overtaxed people of our country.

With regard to the demonetization of silver, every intelligent man must see that inasmuch as silver now forms more than one-half of the coin money of the world, that the effect of demonetizing silver must not only lessen the volume of the world's money, but must appreciate the value of gold in proportion as the value of silver has been reduced.

The plan for demonetizing silver is said to have been first presented to the great bankers of Europe, assembled at the great Paris exposition.

It required but little examination to show them that the demonetization of silver would appreciate the value of gold, and add hundreds of millions to their wealth, if they could only persuade the American government to join with them in the demonetization of silver.

Those bankers appointed a committee to visit our government for the accomplishment of that object, which, as the "Congressional Record," states—"the suggestion to the house committee made by the gentlemen from England in regard to the demonetization of silver, was incorporated into the house bill and passed."

It is the duty of our government to remonetize silver, and also to do all that is possible to be done to induce those governments that have demonetized silver to remonetize the same; as that is the smallest atonement they can make for the wretchedness and ruin that are now being inflicted on the unsuspecting toiling masses of those countries where the demonetization of silver has been taken by law, from the volume of the world's money, and has thereby caused gold to appreciate in value in its purchasing power to nearly double the amount of real estate that the same amount of gold would have purchased four years ago.

Nothing can be more important for us as a nation than to ascertain and remove a cause that is shrinking the values without shrinking debts in the same proportion. Our national policy in trying to force specie payments on a debtor country, is now producing a similar condition of wretchedness to that which was brought on England by their attempt to force specie payment on that country, after a suspension of more than twenty years. During all that time their paper money had not only carried their country through their wars with Napoleon during more than twenty years of suspension of specie payment, but that same paper money had secured to England the greatest national prosperity ever known in that country.

This policy, according to Sir Archibald Allison, brought on England a greater scene of wide-spread bankruptcy and ruin than all the wars, pestilence and famines that had ever afflicted that country. Notwithstanding the warnings of such an example, Mr. McCullough in his address made at the banquet given by the chamber of commerce in New York, spoke boastingly of his earnest efforts, both personally and in writing, with members of congress, in trying to persuade them to allow him to take out of circulation the people's money, which in his address, he states "had all the legal attributes of money."

He stated that in the very year in which the war closed the reduction of the debt was commenced, and this reduction has been steadily continued, to the amazement of foreign nations. He adds "In none of the treasury statements which I have seen, since the advent of the administration, has any mention been made of the reduction of the debt, previous to the present one." * * * "A person looking at one of these statements would suppose that the reduction of the debt was commenced with General Grant's administration, while, in fact, the previous reduction had been reported of two hundred and fifty millions of dollars, according to the books and published statements of the treasury, while a larger sum even than this was paid to the war and navy department, which did not yet appear on the books of the department."

Thus does Mr. McCullough speak of having contracted and taken out of the currency of the country, during his administration, some five hundred millions of dollars, that had been paid out by the government, and received by the people as money; possessing, he declared, "all the legal attributes of money."

Secretary McCullough's great mistake consisted in his regarding the money actually authorized and paid out by the government for value received, as something to be got rid of as soon as possible.

Mr. McCullough stated at that banquet that this legal money that was then serving the country so well, "gave him more anxiety than all the rest of national debt." It seemed that it cost him much writing and a great deal of personal effort to persuade senators and members of congress to allow him to take from the American people, by a combination of war taxes, the very money that the people had received as dollars in payment for all the labor and property that had been consumed in the prosecution of war.

I do not wonder that Mr. McCullough found that "It required the strongest kind of personal and written arguments" to persuade senators and members of congress to allow him to take from the people their money, and convert the same into a national debt after the same money had been allowed to circulate until (as I have said) it had bought and sold many times more in value than the whole property of the nation.

If crime is to be measured by the misery it produces, the act of taking from our people their money, and converting it into a national debt, must rank as one of the most unjust and cruel acts ever known to any civilized legislation.

I do most heartily unite with Senator Jones, when he says "The present is the acceptable time to undo the wavering and blundering work of [illegible] and to render our legislation the subject of money, conformable to the constitution of our country." * * * "We cannot, we dare not, avoid speedy action on the subject. Not only does reason, justice, and authority unite in urging us to retrace our steps, but the organic law commands us to do so; and the presence of peril enjoins what the law commands."

The claims of a common humanity with all that can move the manhood of the American citizen demand of our government the return to the people of their currency.

In the year 1866 there was in the hands of the people, as a currency, $58 per head; in 1875 the currency of all kinds was only a little more than $17 per head.

You may call this currency a vast debt of the people, as it was incurred by the government to save the life of the nation. But it was money, every dollar of it. It was paid by the government "for value received;" it was used by the people to pay their debts, to measure the value of their property, and, as your present secretary of the treasury said in his seat in the senate, "every citizen of the United States had conformed his business to the legal tender clause."

This currency was also the creature of law, and under the entire control of the government, but held in trust for the benefit of the people, as are all its functions. Was it either just or humane to allow $1,100,000,000 of this currency, a large part bearing no interest, but paying labor, and fructifying every business enterprise, to be absorbed into bonds in the space of eight years, bearing a heavy interest, of which the bondholder bore no share? (See Spaulding's "History of the Currency." The government seemed to administer this vast currency as if there were but one interest in the nation to be promoted, and that the profit of those who desired to fund their money with the greatest security, and so make money scarce and of high rate of interest! This is the issue of the hour, this is the battle of the people and for the people, in which the present administration is called upon to declare which side it will take. If this policy was unjust and ruinous at the first, it is unjust and ruinous now. If it has led us from prosperity into adversity, the only course is to retrace our steps, to stop this funding any longer, and give the people back their money, justly earned, and hardly won by the toils, perils and sacrifices of the people. But as this vast and life-giving currency has now gone irretrievably into bonds, and the bonds have gone largely abroad for importation, that have still further depressed the industry of our people by buying abroad what we could and should have manufactured at home, I see no way to establish justice without an act of government that will give back to the people as per capita at one per cent., their just proportion of the people's money actually found in circulation at the close of the war. This can be done by an issue of legal money at a per capita proportion of said money to every state, on the condition that the state will loan to every township a per capita proportion of their amount; said amount to be loaned to the townships at two per cent. per annum; to be loaned by the townships at three per cent. on unincumbered real estate to half the amount of its value—to be estimated by the valuation upon which taxes have been paid during the last three years would respectfully suggest the following policy in the present emergency and for the future prosperity of the people of this country:

First, Let the government place the method of giving back to the people their money as proposed as the best means to give immediate relief to unemployed labor, either through such definite methods of help, giving to settlers of unoccupied lands in the west, or by great and obvious public improvements which are seen to be necessary to the prosperity and safety of the country—such as a northwestern and a southwestern railroad. Both these methods might be used, in view of the great distress, now, of the laboring classes. The railroads will invite settlements, protect the country from Indian wars, more costly than the railroads themselves, and give employment and the money which will enable the poor man to settle the lands. Even state and municipal help might be evoked to this end of employing labor, by issuing currency, for the bonds of states and municipalities that could employ labor profitably in any local improvements.

Secondly, Restore the silver coinage as a legal tender; and while it swells the currency, it may be made as light as paper, for transportation, by "Bills of Exchange," or by a currency that represents silver. The demonetization of silver was a trick of the enemies of the poor man's currency. The remonetization of silver will be a great relief now, in the depression of all business, if not the final and best measure.

Thirdly, Let us adopt a permanent policy of public finance that shall hereafter control both the volume and the value of the national currency, in the interest of the whole people, and not of a class. Let us have a national currency fully honored by the government, and not as now, partially demonetized—the sole currency and legal tender of the country, taken for all duties and taxes, and interconvertible with the bonds, at a low but equitable rate of interest. This will forever take the creation of currency, and its extinction, out of the hands of banks and those interested in making it scarce and high, and put it completely under the control of law and the interests of the people, who can always bank on their own money.

Fourthly, Let us promote and instruct industry, all over the land, by founding, under national, state and municipal encouragement, INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS of every kind that can advance skill in labor. The rich need the literary and professional school and colleges, and they should have them; but the poor need the industrial school of art and science; and it should be made the duty of the local governments to provide a practical education for the mass of the people, as the best method of "guaranteeing to every state a republican form of government."

Fifthly, The government can do much towards promoting the industry of this people, and encouraging capital to enter upon works of manufacture, by a judicious tariff upon all importations of which we have the raw material in abundance, and the labor ready to be employed in the production. It is no answer to this to say, "Buy where you can cheapest." I have said before, "We cannot, as a nation, buy anything cheap that leaves our own good raw materials unused, and our own labor unemployed."

Sixthly, Let us have a civil service as well organized and specific as the military or naval service. Let us take the civil service out of mere political partisanship, and put such appointments upon the ground of honesty, capacity and educational fitness, so that no man can hold his office and receive its emoluments without a faithful discharge of the duties prescribed by the law.

By these methods of immediate relief and future administration, we may pass safely, I think, the great crisis through which our beloved country is now laboring.

"The producing causes of all prosperity," says Daniel Webster, is "labor, labor, labor." * * *

"The government was made to protect this industry—to give both encouragement and security. To this very end, with this precise object in view, power was given to congress over the currency, and over the money of the country.

Though the influences that are now working against the rights of labor and the true interests of a republican government, are insidious and concealed under plausible reasons, yet the danger to our free institutions now, is no less than in the inception of the rebellion that shook our republic to its center. It is only another oligarchy, another enslaving power that is asserting itself against the interest of the whole people. There is fast forming in this country an aristocracy of wealth—the worst form of aristocracy that can curse the prosperity of any country. For such an aristocracy has no country—"absenteeism," living abroad, while they draw their incomes from this country, is one of its common characteristics.

Such an aristocracy is without soul and without patriotism. Let us save our country from this, its most potent, and, as I hope, its last enemy. Let me, fellow citizens, beseech you to consider well what the crisis of the country demands of you and your political action, not losing sight of the fact that there are great wrongs that must be righted in the administration of the finances of this country for the last twelve years. Old issues of north and south are in a great measure passing away, and patriotism and far-sightedness, we hope and trust, will find a way to relieve the present distress of the country. There is no section of our common country that needs so much the reviving influence of an abundant and a sound currency as the south. The southern people have the finest natural resources that our country affords; every facility for manufacture—the material, labor, and water-power indefinite. They need only money, wisely distributed among its working and enterprising population; and it was well said, lately, by one of the southern statesmen, that the "Government had impoverished, discomfited, and crushed the south more by its financial policy, since peace was declared, than by its arms during the whole war of rebellion!"

If the people can look for no relief from the present congress and administration—if those who now sway the financial interests of the country cannot see their grand opportunity—then new men must be chosen by the people whom they can trust to make laws, and execute measures that "shall secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity."

PETER COOPER.

Have Our Winters Grown Milder?

Thirty years ago (says the New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun) wheeled vehicles of any kind were rarely seen on Broadway between Christmas week and the second fortnight of February. There were snow-storms for New York in those days, the noonday sun and the friction of travel scarcely dissolving one fleecy deposit before another fell upon it, all packing under hoofs and runners during the busy hours and freezing by night, until the customary January thaw found an icy road-bed too solid to be made unsleighable before the next white storm. Later winters, with exceptions now and then, have brought less and less snows for us, omnibus companies and other institutions of heavy equine draught selling off their formerly indispensable sleighs in consequence, and the city authorities actually undertaking to clear the streets promptly of all snowfalls, as though the latter were but so much ordinary dust of the thoroughfare. Last year's thirty days' sleighing in the side streets and suburbs was a hint that we may yet again have Decembers and Januaries compelling the universal runner back even to Broadway. The present season, however, had been tropically impracticable for skating ice, even up to the howling tempest of a few weeks ago, when a badly-drifting specimen of the old type of wintry dispensation gave the once-familiar jingling bells a brief recall to the daily symphony of the great city. In every well-appointed private stable having its sumptuously upholstered family sleigh or dashing cutters in stock, whatever the change of climate, no time was lost in improving the fleeting occasion therefor, and during the continuance of the sleighing each highway of the Manhattan island, from the points on all the uptown avenues where such riding begins to be possible to the banks of the Harlem river, swarmed with enthusiastic sleighers.

Crack Shots.

Last week the Austin brothers went out to shoot at long range with the Nationals, and, after the fun was over, the members of the company began to tell yarns about good shooting. One knew a fellow who had, in early times, shot another through the heart with a Colt's revolver at eighty yards. Another had a vivid recollection of the time when he was able to hit snow birds on the wing with a rifle. A third, not to be outdone, solemnly asserted that he had often killed two seagulls with one ball by firing when they crossed each other.

The Nationals had an idea that, with three examples before them, the Austin brothers would spin some big yarns, but, much to everybody's disappointment, they only heaved a joint sigh and started for the door.

"Say," sang out one of the Virginia men, "can't you tell us something about your crack shooting?"

One of the brothers turned back and sat down. There was a dead silence for a while, and presently he began:

"Some years ago I was out in New York State hunting grouse. There was an old fellow along who was somewhat near-sighted. We were just at the edge of the farm, when suddenly one of my favorite game cocks jumped upon the fence and he drew a bead on it, mistaking it for a grouse. I didn't have a second to lose, and so I just threw up my rifle and quietly knocked off the left nipple of his shot-gun at fifty yards, so that when the hammer fell the nipple and cap wouldn't be there—see?"

"You saved the bird then?" chipped in the attentive listener.

"No," said Austin, sadly; "I picked out the wrong nipple; the fellow fired the right and blew my $50 game-cock all to pieces!"

The crowd quietly dispersed.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

East Indian Thieves.

East Indian thieves are the most expert in the world. The Quartermaster-Sergeant of a regiment at an up-station was a very corpulent and heavy man. One night his house was entered by robbers, who not only cleared it of everything portable, but absolutely stole the very bed-clothes from under the fat Sergeant and his sleeping family without disturbing one of them. When they awoke in the morning they were lying on the bare mattresses. This is a common trick with East Indian thieves, and the way they manage it is this: The robber, before he enters a house or tent, first strips and anoints himself with oil, which is done in order that, in case any person should be awake and seize the intruder, he may be enabled to slip like an eel from his grasp. Thus prepared, he creeps into the dwelling as noiselessly as possible. The nights in India are generally excessively warm and oppressive, and the sleep of most people, although heavy, is uneasy and disturbed. Of this the thief takes advantage. He quietly crouches down close under the bed, and with a feather gently tickles the nose of the sleeper, who, half dozing, rubs it and turns on his couch. While he is doing this the sheet on which he is lying is withdrawn a little from under him by the thief. When he is fast asleep again, a second application of the feather causes another turn, and a little more of the sheet is pulled away. The thief then goes to the other side, and the tickling is continued until the sheet is completely withdrawn from under the unconscious sleeper. The operation takes some time, but is always so nicely managed that there is no case on record of the slumberer having been awakened while the robbery was going forward.

Flint.

Flint is really nothing more nor less than sponge turned into stone. Once the sponge grew at the bottom of the sea, as other sponges grow now; but that was ages and ages ago, and since then the sponge, turned to flint, has lain covered in rocks and earth of many kinds piled thick above it. Seen by a microscope, flint shows the make of sponge in its fibers; and sometimes you can see, bedded in it, the shells of the tiny creatures upon which the sponge fed. Now and then, inside a flint, will be found bits of sponge not yet changed.

THE LATE JUDGE LEONARD.

And Termination of a Romance in Real Life—The Object of Congressman Leonard's Visit to Cuba.

The announcement of the death of Representative Leonard, of Louisiana, at Havana, says the Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, recalls the reports published touching the purpose of his visit to Cuba. After his departure from New York, it was announced that Judge Leonard was sent to Cuba by the President to inquire into the alleged kidnapping of colored citizens of the United States, and their conveyance to Cuba, where they were sold into slavery. It was further alleged that Judge Leonard was commissioned to visit New Orleans for the purpose of representing to Gov. Nicholls the views of the President with reference to the prosecution of members of the Louisiana Returning Board. These stories were without the slightest foundation in fact.

The visit of Judge Leonard to Havana was purely personal and private, and was of a peculiarly interesting, delicate, and romantic character. Some time ago, at the city of New Orleans, he met a young lady, a native of Cuba, who was visiting this country with her parents, and between whom and Judge Leonard a warm attachment sprung up, which ripened into love. A marriage engagement was the result, but the parents of the young lady, in consequence of her youth, opposed the match, and Judge Leonard was not permitted to see the object of his affections except in the presence of her parents. When the time arrived for the departure of the Cuban and his family from New Orleans the young lady manifested some reluctance to return home, but an arrangement was finally made by which she and Judge Leonard were to be permitted to hold free and unrestricted correspondence through the mails. After her departure, Judge Leonard wrote her several letters, to which no answers were received, which naturally annoyed him very much, and gave rise to the suspicion that his letters had been intercepted and the young lady prevented from communicating with him. After a long interval he received a brief letter from the lady, which simply stated that she had not heard from him since her return to Cuba, and that she could not hear from him. This brief letter bore evidence of having been hurriedly written, and its broken and soiled condition led Judge Leonard to suspect that it had been carried some distance by a negro to be secretly mailed. After writing other letters and waiting anxiously for replies, he became convinced that the parents of the lady were not acting in good faith, and he determined to visit Cuba. A week or two before his departure he called on the President, and, informing him of his trouble, requested the President to write a personal letter to the Consul General requesting him to ascertain, if possible, the situation and whereabouts of the lady. The President did so, and in due time Judge Leonard received a cable dispatch from Havana which informed him that "Maria had been sent to a plantation in the country." This dispatch was not signed by the Consul General, but bore the name of a party unknown to Judge Leonard. This added to his perplexity, and he determined to set out at once for Cuba. He called on Senor Mantilla, the Spanish Minister at Washington, and, making known to him his trouble, obtained a letter from that official to the Captain General of Cuba, recommending him to do whatever was proper to aid Judge Leonard in his delicate mission. The sympathies of Mme. Mantilla were also enlisted in behalf of Judge Leonard, and that lady wrote such a letter as a lady would write in such a case, urging the Captain General to do everything possible to unite the lovers. With these letters Judge Leonard sailed for Havana, where he duly arrived. A friend in this city received a letter written by him from Havana, in which he said he had seen the lady in presence of her parents. No details as to the success of his mission were furnished, but from the general tone of despondency pervading the letter his friend believes he failed to obtain the consent of the parents to his addresses to their daughter. The announcement of his death was a painful surprise. Judge Leonard was 32 years of age, and was born at Chester, Pa. He graduated at Harvard in 1867, studied civil law in Germany, and received the degree Doctor of Laws from the university at Heidelberg. He was a widower, and has two children now at school in Germany.

Hunting Wild Horses.

The wild horse can run away from a man; but this protection fails at times. The horse-catchers—or "vaqueros," as they are called—are famous riders, and to see them capture a wild mustang is better than to go to a circus. The vaquero puts a Spanish saddle on a tame horse, and starts out to see what he can find. In front, on the high pommel of the saddle, he hangs large coils of leather rope, about a hundred feet long, called a lasso. It is made of strips of raw-hide, braided by hand into a smooth, hard, and very pretty rope. One end is secured to the saddle, and the other end has a slip-knot, making a sliding noose.

The vaquero has not long to wait, for there are droves of horses cantering or walking about over the swells and hollows of the prairie, with here and there a small group looking on, or watching a battle between two horses who wish to be captains of their bands or companies. Presently there is a strange sound of tramping hoofs, like the sound of a squadron of cavalry, except that it has a grand, wild rush and swing, such as no cavalry ever had, and a crowd of dark heads rises over a swell of the land. The leader sees the vaquero, and he halts suddenly, and the others pull up in a confused crowd, and toss their heads, and sniff the air, as if they scented danger near. The leader does not like the looks of things, and turns and slowly canters away, followed by all the rest, tramping in confusion through the yellow grass and wild barley. Presently they become frightened, and away they fly in a dusty throng.

The vaquero's horse seems to think his chance has come, and he pricks up his ears, and is eager for the glorious fun of a dash after the mustangs. Away they go pell-mell, in a panic, and the tame horse galloping swiftly after them. Down they tumble—some knocked over in the confusion, snorting and flinging great flakes of foam from their dilated nostrils, trembling over each other in mad haste, each for himself, and the American horse sweeping after them. Now the vaquero stands up in his saddle, and the lasso swings round and round in a circle over his head. Swish! It sings through the air with a whirring sound, and opens out in great rings, while the loop spreads wider and wider, and at last drops plump over the head of a mustang. The vaquero's horse pulls up with a sudden halt, and sinks back on his haunches and braces his fore feet out in front. Ah! How the dust flies! The mustang is fast, held by the slip-knot, and he rears up and plunges in wild and frantic terror. The rope strains terribly, but the vaquero watches his chances and takes in the rope every time it slackens. It is of no use! The poor mustang is hard and fast. Perhaps another rider comes up and flings another lasso over his head. Then they ride round him, and the mustang is twisted and tangled in the ropes till he can hardly move. He falls, and rolls, and kicks furiously, and all in vain. Panting, exhausted and conquered, he at last submits to his fate. His free days are over, and he seems to know it. A few more struggles, and he recognizes that man is his master, and, perhaps, in one or two days he submits to a bit in his mouth, and becomes a tame horse for the rest of his life. If, by any chance, he escapes before he is broken in and runs away to join his wild companions, he seems never to forget that terrible lasso; and, if he sees the vaquero again, he will stand, trembling and frightened, too much terrified to even run away.—From "The Wild Mustang," by Charles Barnard, St. Nicholas for April.

Roll on, ye dark waters; come, dark oblivion, come!

Think about it a couple of days, old man, before you mortgage the farm to send you daughter to Vassar. A girl at Newburg, Wis., thrashed her father so badly that he had to carry a beefsteak around three days, because he wouldn't give her all the pin money she wanted.

Only Plain Smith.

"Who is that?" asked Brown of Jones, as Smith passed by his store on Main street yesterday.

"That is Mr. —— Smith, sir," replied Jones, "and I will bet you the drinks you can't spell his name."

"I'll take that bet," quickly rejoined Brown, casting a glance toward the clouds, with a look of scholarly wisdom as he complacently removed a fresh Havana and puffed from his lips a cloud of blue smoke that floated in wreaths and curls over his head. "Smith—S-c-h-m-i-d-t," was his first effort.

"Try again."

"S-c-h-m-i-t."

"Wrong again."

"Well, it ain't S-m-y-t-h-e, for that spells Smythe."

"No."

"Now I have it; S-c-h-m-i-t-t."

"No, sir; you've missed it again and I have won the drinks."

"Well, then, I give it up," said Brown. "How in the d—l do you spell it, then?"

"Easy enough. I spell Smith—S-m-i-t-h."

"But that," said Brown, with a look of innocent surprise, "is plain Smith."

"Certainly," replied Jones, "that's what I said plain Smith."

Jones gently relighted his cigar and walked back into his office, repeating as he went, "Schmidt, Schmitt, Smith."

Story of John F. Tracy, the Dead Railroad King.

Sitting in his Chicago office in his shirt-sleeves, he was assailed by a glib-tongued emissary of a railway supply firm, who, getting the audience Mr. Tracy refused to none, went through his role briskly. It was Mr. Tracy's life-habit to be a simply absorbent listener, but it was like putting your errand into the mouth of a bronze lion. He listened and that was all. Nothing in his face ever foreshadowed his answer. The drummer, at the close of his appeal, dropped into a confidential tone and said: "Mr. Tracy, the figures we give are to your company—to you they will be 5 per cent. less." Without a word or a wink of intelligence Mr. Tracy rose, opened the door, sat down at his desk and became absorbed in his work. The visitor sat until the minutes began to drop as heavy as lead, and Tracy's pen scratched away in the silence like John Alden's in the poem. At last the waiting party said: "Well, Mr. Tracy, what do you think of my proposition?" Tracy turned with an affected air of intense astonishment. "What, you here yet? I thought you must have got a mile away. I opened the door for you half an hour ago."—Boston Advertiser.

Communication.

EDITOR COURIER, Sir—Will you please permit me to say a few words to the Greenback voters and clubs of DeKalb county, through the colums of your valuable paper, as I wish it distinctly understood, that in erasing my name from the Greenback Club of Waterloo, I did not with draw from the greenback party. You will remember Mr. Editor, that as long ago as the campaign of 1874, you printed posters for me in which I was advertised to speak through Steuben county on the greenback question; at which time there was not a greenback vote, condidate or club in our county, but in the opening of the campaign of '76, Mr. Kelly came to me and desired that I should do some canvassing in our own county, and I informed him that I was going into Steuben again to espouse the greenback cause, and that I would not do any canvassing in DeKalb unless I could speak my sentiments on the question of finance, to which Mr. Kelly replied: "You can not make your speeches too strong on the greenback subject to suit me." Therefore after returning from Steuben I made several speeches in this county, and it is for those who heard me to say whether I advanced greenback doctrine. About the close of the campaign, we organized a club at Waterloo of some fifteen or twenty members, and have continued to meet ever since in the hall owned by Dr. J. U. Winslow. We adopted a constitution and by-laws which provided for amendments by a two-third majority, notice having been given at a previous regular meeting. We required no particular qualifications in our members, except a co-operation in the greenback cause, and under our constitution and by-laws we neither voted men in or out, but left each individual at liberty to meet his adversary as to him seemed best, and with our machinery in what we called good running order, we came before the people of DeKalb county for the purpose of making greenbackers, expecting to obtain our material from both the Republican an Democratic parties. We have organized several clubs through the county, and being the oldest of any, other clubs have rather looked to us for advice, which has had a tendancy to give some of the leading members of our club the swell head, and as the result, a few meetings ago some of these would be leaders, assumed the authority of amending our by-laws without previous notice having been given at a regular meeting, so as to vote a member out of the club who happened to be obnoxious to a few, who like the old Pharisee of old could thank God they were not sinners like other men, or even like poor Freeman the publican. And when I heard of the cowardly act, I felt that it was so outrageous, that it would only be necessary to mention the perpetrators of the deed in order to make every man of honor blush with shame, but in this I was mistaken, as I found at least one whom it would insult to say that he is dishonorable, ready to advocate the right of a few members to amend our by-laws at any time, and under all circumstances, and upon the spur of the moment, and without giving a member any notice kick him out of the club under such amendments, and in addition to this I found others in favor of acting the gag law on any attempt to investigate or remedy the matter. Now if this be the political law of our party, what man of sense, having one drop of liberal blood in his veins, would feel like joining us. What guarantee would he have that some evening when absent from the club, a few farnatics would not take it into their wise heads to find fault with the color of his hat or the cut of his hair, and amend our by-laws, declaring every man who wears the particular kind of hat disloyal, and thereby send his boat adrift upon the political waters, without sail or oar. I am fully aware that our country is and has been in a fearful condition for some time. Labor is without protection. The poor man can find no market for his capital, which consists only of bone, muscle and skill. There are hundreds of stalwart men in DeKalb county, in whose right arms there reposes sufficient capital to maintain their families and to acquire comfortable homes for the future, if they only could find employment, but by a system of close legislation which has been adopted, these men without party ties or lines, have been driven well nigh to despair. But is it possible that we are driven so low financially and mentally, that our only salvation depends upon the efforts of three or four men, who assume to run the greenback party in Waterloo, men who have been suddenly seized with a wonderful itching after fame and notoriety. If so, may God in his infinite mercy save us. I have some where seen it said, that where men are attracted with this wonderful complaint, their best remedy is to enter a grave yard and scratch themselves against a tomb stone. They will there experience some very useful if not pleasing reflections, as they stand amid the silent city of the dead, and realize the fact that here those who like themselves, were once on earth mingling in the busy scenes of life, and who undoubtedly attempted to write their names high upon the roll of honor, but whose bones are now mingling with mother earth in silence and forgetfulness, while the sun continues to rise and set with the same regularity, the birds sing as sweetly, and the flowers bloom as brightly as when they were with us. Then go gentlemen and apply the remedy, and return with the realizing sense that you are but drops in the great ocean of life and humanity. Who gave you the authority to set up your own preconceived ideas as a criterion by which to judge other men's political faith, and by what power do you assume the right to disfranchise a free born American citizen by unceremoniously expelling him from the club. Our revolutionary fathers deemed the elective franchise a priceless boon, and no court in our land has ever attempted to deprive any man of its blessings, without giving him the chance to be heard in his own defense. Great and powerful political parties have arisen and fallen during our nation's history, parties who boasted of their Websters and Clays, their Madisons and Jeffersons, their Sumners and Wades, and yet no political party has ever yet attempted to thin its ranks by voting men out of the party. The Democratic party which was competent to stoop down and take our nation from the cradle of its infancy, nurse and foster it until it became a giant among the nations of the earth, never in its most prosperous moments attempted to disfranchise those who wished to identify themselves with the party. And why should a few members of the Waterloo club arrogate to themselves the reponsible duty of sitting in judgment on the qualifications of those who desire to identify themselves with a party which promises so much in the future for the mass of the American people, as does the greenback party. Is it because they expect to accomplish this great work alone and unaided, or do they only fear that if men of experience and ability join our ranks, their own little light will fade into nothingness, and vanish like the morning dew. Some of these men seem to be very much displeased because the Democratic party saw fit to adopt a greenback platform at their convention this spring, and if they could manipulate matters as easily in the Democratic rank, as they did in our club, they would undoubtedly force the Democracy of Indiana to withdraw their platform, and come before the people with a hard money one in its place. Now gentlemen, in my judgment this is all wrong, if the Democracy of Indiana have adopted a greenback platform, let us be thankful for the help they are affording us and see if we can not induce the Republican party of Indiana to give us a greenback platform also. Do you not see at a glance, if both the old parties would nominate greenback men for their candidates, the object for which we are contending, would be accomplished in our State, and ought we not to permit every man who desires it to take a part in this great and good work. Why attempt to pluck even one laurel from the crown of any man for the purpose of wreathing it around the brow of any living individual. There is enough in this great work of reform for us all to do, if we are only contented to work in our proper sphere. When we consider for a moment what peculiar qualifications are required to become the leader of a great political party, and how few there are who are equal to the emergency how strange it is that a little country town, situated in the backwoods of our Hoosier state, should be able to turn out three or four just such men as the occasion requires, and all from our greenback club. Who since the death of Thadeus Stevens, has successfully worn the cloak which fell from his shoulders, and although the flowers have bloomed and faded for more than half a score of years on the tomb of Douglass, who has been considered by the people competent to fill his place as a leader in the political ranks. It is true that during the winter of 1867 and 68, Brick Pomroy attempted to become the leader of the people, by advertising the payment of the bonds in greenbacks, and well do we remember how promptly the people of the North west responded to the sentiment, until his little office at Lacross could not supply the demand for his paper, and he therefore established a branch office at the city of New York, where he denounced Seymour as the bondholders' candidate for the Presidency, and while the Democratic party was in convention, he came out with an issue of his paper, in which he asserted that he already found where there had been one hundred thousand dollars paid out to buy bondholders' votes, but says he, more of this in my next issue, but before he issued another copy of his paper, the convention nominated Mr. Seymour as the candidate for the presidency, and Brick Pomroy, the man who had assumed to lead on the masses of down trodden Americans, says to those who were looking up to him as their friend and leader, the Democratic convention is over, Horatio Seymour is the regular nominee, and the man who refuses to vote for him ought to and will be considered an enemy to his party, thus in a dastardly manner betraying those whose confidence he had. And why is it that men of at least ordinary inteligence, are so willing to place confidence in one whose traitor name like that of Arnold's, should be cursed by American babes from their cradles. Brick Pomroy is taking no stronger measure in favor of the laboring masses to-day, than he did in 68, and yet when the hour of trial came, the time of all others, when he should have stood up and battled manfully for the right, like the traitor Hull, he basely delivered the fort into the hands of the enemy, and what guarantee have we to-day, that if we put our trust in Pomroy, and follow his leadership, when the enemy is hard pressed, his resources are exhausted, and victory is about to perch on our banners, he will not command us as he did in 68, to lay down our arms and quietly submit to our taskmasters. Then let us rely on no such uncertainties, but press boldly forward trusting in God, and keeping our powder dry. We have just held an election in our township, and in the precint to which Waterloo belongs, we polled two hundred and twenty-two votes, and had the roads been passable, so that we could have organized the south part of the township, as well as we did the north part, every greenback candidate would have been elected by a handsome majority. Seeing that we have done so well, let us do as did the apostle when he caught a glimpse of the city, thank God and take courage, and as soon as the roads get passable, let us go forth among the people and reason with them upon the subject of class legislation, calling their attention to the sound of the bondholder's hammer, as he rivets the chains, which are not only destined to bind us, but the untold millions of our posterity in abject slavery. Then let us call an early county convention, and nominate the best men, men who will be likely to poll the most votes, and men on whom we can rely. I some times meet greenback men, who seem to be perfectly agitated for fear we may nominate some man on our ticket whom the Republican or Democratic parties may recognize, but let us nominate good greenback men, and then I would be happy to see both the old parties support them. I know that both of the old parties have good greenback men in their ranks, and have had for years, men who have worked manfully and earnestly for the rights of the people, but have been overpowered and defeated by the bondholders, and I for one am willing to support such men, regardless of the party with whom they have been identified, nor shall the indorsement of either or both of the old parties drive me from the faithful support of such men, we want just such men on our county and state ticket, standing upon a square greenback platform, that will send forth no uncertain sounds, and then as Putnam left his plow standing in the furrow, when he heard the booming of the cannons at Lexington, and hastened to the field of battle, so will our merchants leave their counters, the mechanics his shop, the farmer his plow, and the poor man his squalid home, and hasten this fall to the poll for the purpose of burying the bondholder, the rich and aristocratic nabob, who has been living and ri ting upon our blood, sweat and toil, for the last fifteen years, so deep that he will fail to come up at the sound of Gabriel's trumpet.

THOUGHTS FOR THE COURIER.

NEW YORK, April 8, '78.

Glorious weather once more gladdens the hearts of city people, country people, good people, and poor people. The trees are budding, the grass is springing, the sunshine is pouring in at the open window, and soft winds are swaying the curtain beside me, fluttering the papers on the table with all the gentleness of a spring morning. Fires are out of date, and furs are among the forgotten things. The warbling of birds, and the no less musical laughter of children are heard from the street, and the sky above us with its beautiful depths of blue, seem to promise warmth and light, and long calm repose after our our little season of tempest and cold. The above is perhaps a little stale, as it sounds very much like an old composition of mine, written during my early school days, and inspired by just such a memory as this. Here, this year, we have had only winter enough to make us welcome the spring, though we hardly know when it came in, the last month having been as fair and mild as this; we enjoyed it in spite of the dismal old proverb;

"All the months in the year Curse a fair Februaer."

The mild and delicious air of Sunday enticed thousands from their homes, and many pale faces were over-spread by a warmer tinge. When on a cold bleak winter Sunday one wanders among the great tenement houses of the east or west side, and sees an ill clad woman, or half clad child run shiveringly across the windy street, like a frightened wild thing over a path in the woods, the first thought that fills our mind is a longing for spring, and the calico dress of the woman, and the broken toed boot of the chiid may not be such mockeries of protection against the out door elements. Our wishes do not soar so high as to wish the spring of the poets for them, we do not imagine the woman standing at a cottage gate, looking in gladness down the green lane, or place the child in a green field among violets and daisies, where he plays and gathers posies all day long. Not at all, we simply wish the warm sunshine to warm the dismal street. We ask for a blue sky, with here and there a fleecy cloud and gentle breeze, that will remove the bitter stings of Jack Frost. When this has come, as it did Sunday, a half mile walk among the tenements will clear the heart of the humane. You will not see exactly the stately staid procession of well dressed grownup people who parade Fifth Avenue on a fine Sabbath afternoon, so rich in silk and broadcloth, nor is it the more enlivening groups of Sunday Saunterers that throng Central Park. But what an out pouring of humanity we see, the sidewalks are thronged with men and women who laugh and chat and carry the blessing of fresh air and sunshine in their eyes. The old are there about the doors, forgetting the winter pains, and the children there are the greatest marvel of them all. If you stay in a quiet up-town street you see a few boys and girls playing about, but down among the tall tenements you see them in hundreds on every block, you recall all you have seen of bee-hives, and all you have read of hatching chickens by steam, and you find you have no idea of how many small children can be drawn out of a single tenement house by sunrise. Here we pause to ask why they are particularly found on the stone walk at one certain corner, and are told that a bakery underneath, warms the stones and makes quite a nice and comfortable resort for the little ones. As we walk back to the sedate world again, we ask if, after all, there is need in this broad land of packing humanity so close, and wonder when rapid transit is cheap, if it will be possible to spread this hive of humanity out a little in the direction of green fields, which they never see now, unless when they go out to bury their dead. And that reminds me of a circumstance which was in the papers some time since. Two of these children had been taken to the funeral of a relative in a carriage, and were so delighted with the ride and scenery they passed, wished most earnestly to go again. So earnestly did they wish for such a treat, that they formed a conspiracy to kill a little neighbor boy, which was carried out as successfully as many a similiar plot formed in older heads.

We have a word to say on the subject of temperance this time. Since our last we have joined the Teetotalers, doned the blue ribbon, and sing temperance songs by day, and dream of delivering temperance lectures at night. If we were only as eloquent as said dreams would have us believe, we would be tempted to hold forth for the beneft (?) of the public. Alas! we have no faith in dreams. We leave the lecture-field to more eloquent apostles, but hope and pray they may succeed in bringing every man, woman and child into the total abstinence fold. While multitudes of working men are being gathered into this reform, some of the great men of the nation, politically speaking, are making pitiful exhibitions of themselves shameful exhibitions of inebriety in the august halls of legislation. I have often noticed that no kind of revival or reform is likely to take hold of the two extremes of society at once. Indeed, while impelling one class, it often effects the other with a sort of backaction movement. Jacob and Esau cannot both recieve the blessing at the same time. Society is perhaps like the unmanageable old Indian convert, whom the Baptised clergyman undertook to bring into the kingdom by the saving rite of immersion. She was an old woman, much bent by years and the many heavy burdens imposed on her patient shoulders by the noble red men; so much bent that when the minister tried to immerse her completely in the shallow stream, a strange difficulty presented itself. When the head was under, the feet were out and vice versa. After several ineffectual attempts the good man exclaimed to his flock on the bank: "I fear bretheren and sisters, that Satan will have one half of this poor old squaw, in spite of all I can do." At one time there was an appalling rumor, that one of the most popular advocates of the temperance cause, had caught the epidemic of the times—embezzled the funds of the society and taken a french leave. It was held up in glowing colors and enlarged upon for a day or two, as an instance of teetotal depravity, but such a report was utterly without foundation. An interesting meeting of the American Temperance Union, was held yesterday in the large hall of the Cooper Union, Brooklyn. The audience was large. An essay on the effects of alcohol upon the system, written by Colonel Dudley, was read. Mr. H. R. Shackelford, of Georgia, then addressed the assembly. He said that during the short time he had been in the city, fifteen violent deaths had been recorded as being caused by strong drink, and three men murdered. It was the first glass drank by a man that caused him to become a drunkard, and that first glass generally came from some family board; so that the bar keeper is not the only one responsible for making drunkards. It is when the appetite is formed that a man does away with his modesty and enters the saloon, and then a hit at the ministers, he had no respect for a man who would hold a glass of whisky in one hand and a hymn book in the other, and said, "Discard liquor from the churches and you will redeem the country from drinking." Men were known who could not without perilous temptation, partake of the sacrament because of the alcoholic poison in the sacred cup.

I try to think of some nice little verse to end this prosy epistle, but am tired now and sleepy too.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BRANCH of the Bank of Nevada (owned by the Bonanza kings) is to be established in New York.

SEVERAL heavy commercial failures are reported in the East, including Joseph Foulks' Sons, shipping and commission merchants, New York, liabilities $450,000; Booth & Edgar, sugar refiners, New York, liabilities $750,000; and Manning & Sears, cotton brokers, Boston, liabilities $800,000.

THE WEST.

THE Bank of South Pueblo, Col., was entered a few nights ago, by masked robbers, who gagged the cashier, H. N. Banks, and obliged him to open the safe. They took $5,000 in currency and a gold watch and chain. No clew to the robbers.

GEN. SILAS A. STRICKLAND, a prominent citizen of Nebraska, is dead.

DETROIT papers report the drowning of Henry Crouch, his wife and two children in a pond near Augusta, Mich., caused by the capsizing of a boat.

HOLT & BUGBEE, lumber dealers, Indianapolis, Ind., have suspended. The failure was caused by the fraudulent action of Joseph W. Bugbee, brother of the junior partner, and hitherto an honored and respected citizen. To cover his own losses he drew heavily against the firm, using as collateral the notes of parties in the West whose signatures are admitted to be forgeries. Bugbee confesses issuing $192,000 of these notes. The revelation of his crime caused a great sensation in Indianapolis.... The paying teller of the American National Bank of Detroit is a defaulter to the amount of over $5,000.... The residence of J. J. Winegardner, a farmer at Rushville, Fairfield county, Ohio, was entered by burglars a few nights since, and $6,000 in currency stolen.

THE SOUTH.

COLLECTOR BRAYTON reports from Columbia, S. C., that the revenue raiding force has returned from a successful expedition on the North Carolina border, having destroyed eleven illicit distilleries, 25,000 gallons of beer and mash, and 200 gallons of whisky....At Eastville, Northampton county, Va., the other day, Sidney Pitts and A. P. Thoms fought a duel with pistols to settle a dispute. Two rounds were fired by each, and, as they stood only six feet apart, Pitts was killed, and Thomas received a ball in the head from which he will probably die.

THE Supreme Court of Louisiana has refused a rehearing of the case of Returning Board Anderson, and he has been released from custody.

THE Chesapeake and Ohio railroad was recently sold at auction, at Richmond, Va., for $2,750,000.

THE Bank of Jacksonville, Fla., was lately robbed of $7,500 in broad daylight.

GENERAL.

GRAIN in sight in the States and Canada: Wheat, 7,568,479 bushels; corn, 5,726,462 bushels; oats, 2,539,250 bushels; barley, 2,583,133 bushels.

THE rush of people to Europe has fairly begun, and nearly every steamer sailing from New York is crowded to its full capacity.

A TORONTO dispatch says the Manitoba sections of the Canada Pacific railway are being rapidly constructed. Several thousand workmen are engaged at $2 a day.

POLITICAL.

THE Republican Senators in Congress held a caucus the other evening, of which the Associated Press Agent at Washington furnishes the following report: "It appears, from the views expressed by Senators, that, while they concede that the recent speech of Senator Howe is mainly just in its structures on the course of the Administration, they can see no propriety in recalling past events in Louisiana and elsewhere, and making a direct issue with the President, and they are also agreed that the so-called civil service reform is a deception and a failure. They, therefore, think that the Republicans should strive to strengthen their party, irrespective of what the President may say or do. They are of opinion that it would be better to approve of such measures as they can in the future, rather than oppose the President in his Southern conciliation policy and other measures which do not meet with Republican approval. They do not impute dishonesty of purpose to the President, and see some things in his administration to approve; but they doubt the wisdom of much of his so-called policy. Under all circumstances, the Republican Senators do not think it wise to take an active part against the President, but to do the most they can for the interests of their party, remembering that the President has three more years to serve."

THE joint resolution of Montgomery Blair, instructing the Attorney General of Maryland to exhibit a bill in the Supreme Court of the United States on behalf of the State of Maryland, praying for a judicial review of the electoral count, and which passed the House of Delegates March 28, has been passed by the Senate by a large majority.

THE election in Rhode Island has resulted in the choice of Van Zandt, Republican, for Governor by about 3,000 majority. The Greenback candidate received 583 votes.

A PRIVATE meeting of the Republican National Committee and old Congressional Committee was held at Washington one evening last week. John A. Logan presided. There were present Z. Chandler, E. Hale, W. E. Chandler, Charles Foster, and others. The object of the meeting was to consult informally about the organization of the party for the fall campaigns. It was decided to ask the Republicans in Congress to reorganize the Congressional Committee, and to make arrangements for an earnest fight to carry the next Congress.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says, "it is intimated that the Senate will insist that all nominations hereafter sent to that body shall contain the State from which the persons are appointed, and fuller reasons for the appointment."

WASHINGTON.

THE House Committee on the Electoral Count has agreed to report in favor of a constitutional amendment fixing the tenure of the Presidential office at six years, and declaring the President ineligible for re-election....A new style of torpedo has been invented by an officer in the United States navy, and the infernal machine so deeply impressed Secretary Thompson with its fine points that he has communicated the matter to the House Committee on Naval Affairs, which in turn agree to report a bill giving the inventor $60,000 for the sole use of his patent.

THE Committee on the Presidential Count, in addition to the terms of the new constitutional amendments relative to the Presidential elections, are endeavoring to mature a plan to provide that the United States elections shall be held in November, as they now are; that Congress assemble on Jan. 1 next thereafter, and the Presidential term shall also begin on Jan. 1....To the close of March 1,000,000 silver dollars had been coined. Arrangements have been completed under which, during April, the Philadelphia mint will turn out $1,750,000.... In the past eight months the receipts of internal revenue have fallen $6,500,000 below the estimates.

THE House Committee on Banking and Currency had another long conference with the Secretary of the Treasury, the other day, on the subject of the propositions made by the treasury and national banks to execute the Resumption law. The Secretary reiterated his confident belief that, with the assistance of the proposed savings-bond scheme, specie payments can be resumed by the 1st of January next.

THE April public-debt statement is as follows:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 738,620,200

Interest repaid by transportation of mails, etc.	9,159,143
Balance of interest paid by the United States	28,737,190

Representative Wood is confident that his Tariff bill will go through the House without material change.

A WASHINGTON telegram says there are indications that the bill to repeal the Resumption act will be favorably reported by the Senate Finance Committee at an early day.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Kaffir war in South Africa is ended.... The Pope has indicated his intention of resuming diplomatic relations with Great Britain.... The Russian army around Constantinople is being largely reinforced.... Orders have been sent to the British Admiral commanding the Mediterranean fleet in the Sea of Marmora to patrol the Dardanelles and Bosphorus with or without Turkish consent, and to use such pressure, in unison with the British Minister at Constantinople, as to force the Porte to resist the demands and encroachments of the Russian Grand Duke.

THE visit of Gen. Ignatieff to Vienna for the purpose of gaining over Austria to the Russian side has proved a failure. He has returned to St. Petersburg with the alarming news that Austria will not accept the San Stefano treaty, and will immediately mass an army of 400,000 men on the Bosnian frontier, with a view of protecting Austro-Hungarian interests.

LORD SALISBURY, the new Minister of Foreign Affairs, has addressed a circular to the powers, giving England's reasons why she cannot enter the proposed congress. Nearly every article of the San Stefano treaty is condemned as tending to establish a dangerous Russian supremacy in the East. Lord Salisbury claims not only the right to discuss each clause of the treaty in detail, but to raise objections to the treaty in the aggregate. In a word, England wishes to set aside the whole treaty, and begin, de novo, the work of settling the Eastern questions by discussions in a congress.... Queen Victoria's message in relation to mobilising the reserves was read in both houses of the British Parliament last week. It states very briefly that the present state of public affairs in the East constitutes a case of great emergency, within the meaning of the acts of Parliament, and that, therefore, the Government is about to direct that the reserve force and the militia reserve force be forthwith called out for permanent service. Debate on the message was postponed for a week.

IT is stated in a cable dispatch from Constantinople that "Osman and Eyouf Pashas have become more Russian than English. The Turkish and Russian soldiers fraternize, the latter going about Constantinople in uniform without evoking animosity. If war comes, England must contemplate the possibility of having to fight Turkey and Russia. At best she would get from Turkey a one-sided neutrality, of little or no substantial use."....Lord Salisbury succeeds Derby as British Minister of Foreign Affairs.

A DUBLIN dispatch reports the assassination of the Earl of Leitrim. His Lordship, together with his clerk and driver, was shot dead while driving near his estate in County Derry, Ireland. The crime was committed by some of his tenants, eighty-nine of whom were under notice to quit....A Constantinople dispatch announces that the Russians, fearing the Turks will endeavor to maintain neutrality, have made the following demands, which may be regarded as an ultimatum: The abandonment to the Russians of the fortifications on both sides of the Upper Bosphorus, and Gallipoli and Boulair, on the Dardanelles. The Turks are also to evacuate Makrikevi and Maslak, and place some barracks and hospitals at the disposal of the Russians. It is also stated that the Russians have begun a fresh movement toward Gallipoli....France has notified Russia that she will not participate in a combination against England.

ADVICES from Havana report that 2,000 Cuban insurgents surrendered in the jurisdiction of Manzanillo during March. Of these 1,250 were men. The arms of all kinds given up amounted to 2,030 pieces.

ROUMANIA is bitterly opposed to the cession of Bessarabia to Russia, as well as several other provisions of the treaty of San Stefano, and a rupture between the Russians and Roumanians is exceedingly probable.

A LONDON dispatch says the trustees of the champion pedestrian belt have decided that O'Leary is entitled to take it to America, and anybody challenging him must go to America, unless O'Leary agrees to compete in England. ....It is announced from St. Petersburg that Gen. Tchernayeff has been appointed to the command of a special corps of eclaireurs destined to penetrate rapidly into the heart of Central Asia, in the countries where the Russian armies have already been on several expeditions.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, March 29.—SENATE.—Not in session. HOUSE.—In the House the day was devoted to the private calendar, and the proceedings were of no interest to the general public....Mr. Stephens introduced a bill to promote the general use of the metric system.

MONDAY, April 1.—SENATE—Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Railroads, reported a bill to extend for eight years the time for completing the Northern Pacific railroad. Placed on the calendar.. Mr. Windom dissented from the report, and introduced another bill. Referred to the Committee on Railroads..... The bill to regulate the advertising of mail lettings was passed.....Messrs. Beck and Christiancy addressed the Senate in support of the Pacific Railroad Funding bill....The Senate, in executive session, confirmed a number of appointments, and rejected the nomination of Alex. Reed to be Postmaster at Toledo, Ohio.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Stephens, for the financial relief of the country, and to facilitate the return to specie payments without injuriously affecting the commercial business of the people; by Mr. Money, to regulate contracts for carrying the mails; by Mr. Bright, to prevent the reduction of the national currency by fraudulently withdrawing legal-tender notes from circulation; by Mr. Fuller, declaring the waters of the Big Sponge of Arkansas forever free to the people; by Mr. Williams, of Michigan, granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims upon the claims of officers and soldiers of the late war; by Mr. Harrison, to provide for a more efficient civil service in the United States.....Mr. Hartzell introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution forbidding the assumption or payment of claims for losses growing out of the destruction of property within the limits of the States engaged in the rebellion. Referred....Mr. Durham reported back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill providing for [illegible] in the Treasury Department, and [illegible] trespassers on public lands, recommending non-concurrence in nearly all the Senate amendments.

TUESDAY, April 2.—SENATE.—The Senate spent the day in discussing the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, and Mr. Burnside's bill to remove all restrictions in regard to the enlistment of colored men in the army and navy, without reaching a vote on either.

HOUSE.—The proceedings in the House were of an unimportant character. Mr. Harrison, of Illinois, explained the report of the majority of the Civil Service Committee, which recommends the adoption of the resolution declaring the office of Doorkeeper vacant. On account of frequent interruptions, and from the excitement of manner in which he met these interruptions (chiefly from Luttrell, Franklin, Clark of Missouri, Crittenden, Eden and Ellsworth), the delivery of his speech was attended with great [illegible], but Mr. Harrison himself was very resolute and determined in urging on his own side of the House the propriety of expelling the Doorkeeper.

WEDNESDAY, April 3.—SENATE.—The Senate devoted another day to the Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill. Speeches were delivered by Messrs. Booth and Dawes, after which there was a long running debate....The Naval Appropriation bill was reported to the Senate and placed on the calendar.

HOUSE.—Mr. Banks, from the Committee on Rules, reported back the resolution admitting one representative of each public journal which employs a permanent correspondent for reporting the proceedings of Congress to the halls and passageways around the House. Adopted....Mr. Reagan, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the River and Harbor Appropriation bill....The case of Doorkeeper Polk was the subject of another long discussion in the House.

THURSDAY, April 4.—SENATE.—The Senate indulged in an animated debate over the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, Messrs. Thurman, Matthews, Blaine, Hill and Conkling being the chief participants. The contest finally narrowed down to Messrs. Thurman and Hill, neither of whom seemed disposed to let the other have the last word, and, even after the adjournment, the disputants continued their arguments as they left the Capitol....A resolution was adopted authorizing the appointment of a select committee of seven to consider the subject of taking the tenth census....The Senate authorized the printing of 26,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

HOUSE.—Mr. Butler introduced a bill to authorize the reissue of fractional currency of the denominations of 25 and 50 cents....The House finally disposed of the case of Doorkeeper Polk by adopting the report of Mr. Harrison, Chairman of the Civil Service Committee, declaring the office of Doorkeeper vacant.

Frightful Double Tragedy.

A most horrible murder and suicide occurred recently at Columbus, Ohio. Geo. Weineman, aged 64, and his son, Geo. Weineman, aged 36, had been proprietors of the Columbus steam pipe works for some years. They were inventors and manufacturers of a patent steam pump, which has met with large sale and allowed both to accumulate modest fortunes. Some months ago the old man began acting queerly, accusing his son of acting unjustly with him. His son then went into business with another man, which greatly displeased his father, who went to law about the ownership of the patent on the steam pump. A dissolution of partnership and a family quarrel were the results. On the night of the tragedy, as young Weineman was going home with a friend, a shot was fired from a vacant frame building located near his house. Weineman threw up his hands, crying, "My God, I am shot," and died instantly. Just as he breathed his last, another shot was heard in the frame building, accompanied by a scream. Upon going into the building the old man Weineman was found in a dying condition, with an empty double-barreled shot-gun lying beside him. His body presented a horrible appearance. His face was mangled past all recognition, his head blown almost off, only the ragged edges of the skull sticking out; his brains were scattered over a space covering fifteen feet; and one eye was found sticking in a rafter ten feet away. In order to keep the remainder of his head from falling off it was necessary to wrap the body up to convey the body to his late residence. An examination of the son's body showed that he had been struck by two round pieces of brass, which had been cut with a chisel from a half-inch brass rod. One of these chunks of metal had passed through his heart, while the other, with the load of shot, had mutilated his chest and neck. The old man had evidently thought well over his bloody work, as he was seen to enter the old building at 8 o'clock in the morning, and was not seen after. He had piled up bricks and placed barrels on them, in order to allow him to take aim out of a small window. Both men were well known in business, and were first-class, ingenious workmen, with large families. The old man was evidently crazed by business troubles.

Tongues.

Nothing but the proboscis of an elephant compares in muscular flexibility with the tongue. It varies in length and size in reptiles, birds and mammalia, according to the peculiar organic circumstance of each. A giraffe's tongue has the functions of fingers. It is hooked over a high branch, its strength being equal to breaking off large, strong branches of trees, from which tender leaves are then stripped. An ant-bear's tongue is long and round, like a whiplash. The animal tears open dry, clay walls of ant-hills, thrusts in its tongue, which sweeps round the apartments, and by its adhesive saliva brings out a yard of ants at a swoop. The mechanism by which it is protruded so far is complicated and beautiful. A dog's tongue in lapping water takes a form, by a mere act of volition, that cannot be imitated by any ingenious mechanism. The human tongue, in the articulation of language, surpasses in variety of motions the wildest imagination of a poet. Even in swallowing food its office is so extraordinary that physiologists cannot explain the phenomena of deglutition without employing the aid of several sciences.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Distilled Spirits.

The books of the Internal Revenue Office show the quantity of distilled spirits in bonded warehouses on the 1st of March in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, as follows: Ohio, 1,412,529 gallons; Indiana, 642,126 gallons; Illinois, 512,680 gallons; quantity in warehouse in Kentucky on the 1st of February, 5,708,665 gallons; producing capacity throughout the country on the 1st of March, 228,265 gallons per day, as compared with 246,539 gallons March 1, 1877, and 245,249 gallons March 1, 1876.

"I'M a yard wide and all wool," is the Kentucky way of describing a high state of hilarity.

The Redemption Agency Business.

The following is the statement of the operations of the National Bank Redemption Agency for March, and nine months of the fiscal year, compared with the corresponding periods last year:

National Bank-notes Disposed of.	Month.	Nine Months.
Notes fit for circulation assorted and returned to the banks of issue	$ 9,419,700	$112,791,900
Notes unfit for circulation assorted and delivered to the Comptroller of the Currency for destruction and replaced with new notes	3,550,300	35,536,500
Notes of failed, liquidating and reducing banks deposited in the treasury	692,650	7,853,600
Totals for 1878	$13,662,650	$156,182,000
Totals for 1877	18,277,900	165,755,900
Decrease	4,655,050	9,593,900

Coinage.

The coinage at the United States Mint in Philadelphia, during March, was 39,220 gold pieces, 1,153,700 silver, including 1,001,500 new silver dollars, and 600 base coin, representing a valuation of $1,750,328.

Fashion's Foibles.

Waistcoats are simulated on most of the new dresses.

Silhouette dinner cards are used for bachelor parties.

"Mother Goose" is the new style of children's bonnets.

Looped-up back draperies are no longer fashionable.

Lawn ties are embroidered profusely with variegated silk.

Queen Anne and Japanese styles of furniture predominate.

Charles II. collars are seen on new sacques and polonaises.

Silk sun-shades bearing the owner's monogram are a novelty.

All fashionable costumes are made of two or more kinds of stuff.

English serge for furniture covering can be bought for 30 cents.

Macrame lace-making is the fashionable woman's work at the moment.

Pin-head checked bourettes are among the most popular of the spring goods.

Gloves ornamented with the coat of arms or the monogram is a novelty in Paris.

Muslin bourettes and grenadine bourettes are seen among spring dress goods.

The newest things in stockings are bourette effects in colors to match costumes.

Mother-of-pearl buttons, in shades to match the new goods, will be used on wool and silk and wool fabrics.

Gold and silver tinsel, beads of all kinds, and mother-of-pearl are used in giving effect to spring millinery.

Ribbons, in two tones of color, watered on one side and satin on the reverse, will be en regle for summer bonnets.

Short kilt skirts, blouse waists or waistcoats, and cut-away jackets will be in high favor for midsummer out-door dresses.

Pin-head checks in various shades of the same color on a darker or lighter ground are seen in the prints and percales of the season.

Three ladies were remarkable by their toilets at the Queen's last drawing-room. Mrs. Cavendish-Bentinck wore a sort of sandals inlaid with gold; Mrs. Tom Brassey had a gorgeous train, resembling somewhat a peacock's tail, that floated from her shoulders—not her waist; and Lady Margaret Beaumont carried in her hand a bouquet worth a King's ransom.

A Mother Chopped in Pieces by Her Son.

A farmer, named Emmanuel Louchard, 26 years of age, residing in the Department of Eure, a portion of ancient Normandy, in France, was arrested in the month of March last, charged with having killed his mother, who was aged 56 years, and having chopped her body in pieces with an instrument known as a hedging-bill, or cutting-hook. He has recently been convicted of the crime. Her remains were discovered by a neighbor, concealed in an old marl-pit. The head had been severed from the body, and was crushed in and shapeless. The face, which was much mutilated, was no longer recognizable, and it was by the hair alone that the identity of the poor victim was established. Both arms and legs had been cut off. In the house of the accused spots of blood were found on the floor, the walls, the furniture, the mattress, the sheet, and, finally, upon the wooden shoes and the wheelbarrow of the accused, upon the latter of which he had conveyed the mangled remains to the marl-pit. Fragments of calcined bones were discovered in the fire-place, and there was found in the ashes of the oven a half-consumed bag, such as farmers ordinarily employ for their grain, on which was marked a bloody and oval outline that corresponded with the dimensions of the face of the victim.

A large number of witnesses were summoned at the trial, and the proof of his guilt being conclusive, the following sentence has been rendered:

"Louchard having been found by the jury guilty, with no extenuating circumstances, is condemned to suffer the penalty inflicted for matricide."

This punishment is that of death by the guillotine, with the addition that the criminal goes to the scaffold barefooted, clad in a long shirt and having the head covered with a black veil.

THE KEELEY MOTOR.

The Machine Pronounced a Humbug and the Inventor a Fraud.

The report of Mr. J. B. Knight, Secretary of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia (says a journal of that city), who has been for several months engaged in examining the so-called Keeley motor, has just been made public. It takes ground which, if well founded, is very damaging to Mr. Keeley and his motor. The examination was made on the invitation of the alleged inventor, to the end, as he said, that the conclusions of the engineer might be published to determine whether his claims are just or not. Secretary Knight says he was promised the opportunity of making a complete examination of the motor and all pertaining to it. His report is long and apparently conclusive. The substance of it is that the gauge graduated to register 12,000 pounds has been so altered as to make a small pressure indicate a very large one; that the movement of the engine was not caused by the motor at all, but by compressed air which had been stored in a twelve-gallon sphere. This was not easily observed, as there was a confusing number of cocks and pipes, and Mr. Keeley constantly drew the observer's attention to other things. There were concealed cylinders and many other devices calculated to deceive. Mr. Knight's conclusions are that the machine called the "multiplicator," with its attachments, including the so-called reaching device, are not capable of producing the effects claimed, and their enormous strength is entirely unnecessary in sustaining the pressure to which they are subjected, but are rather calculated to astonish and mislead those who witness his experiments; that the extreme high pressure claimed was not produced, the pressure probably in no case exceeding 500 pounds per square inch, and that the readings of the gauges and weighted lever apparatus were incorrect; that the so-called vacuum was not produced by the condensation or absorption of the alleged vapor, but by mechanical means, such as a previously-exhausted chamber, or its equivalents; that the substance used and claimed by Mr. Keeley to be a new vapor of his own discovery is simply atmospheric air, which had been previously compressed and stored up in the various hollow spheres and other chambers of the apparatus in the intervals between the experiments. Charles M. Cresson, M. D., on the request of Mr. Knight, analyzed some of the "vapor" which was bottled up for the purpose, and found it nothing but atmospheric air.

The Matrimonial Lottery.

A young stranger called on Dr. McC—— one evening, while he was a pastor in New York city, to engage his services in the performance of a nuptial ceremony.

"I wish to make a bargain with you, doctor," said the young man. "I think the girl I am to marry will make a first-rate wife. If you will wait a year for your fee, and she turns out as I think she will, I'll give you $50."

They agreed, the young couple were married, and the incident passed from the doctor's mind. At the end of a year, at the same time in the evening, the young man called again. The doctor did not recognise him at first.

"Do you not remember the bargain we made when you married me a year ago?"

"Oh yes," replied the doctor.

"Well," said the young man, "she is twice as good as I thought she was. There's $100 for you."

Exactly the opposite of this is the following:

A clergyman in one of the Hudson river towns united a German couple in marriage. When the knot was tied, the bridegroom said, "Dominie, I've got no monish, but I'll send you von leetle pig." It was done, and the circumstance was forgotten by the clergyman. Two years after he met the German in another town, for the first time since the marriage ceremony was performed.

"Dominie," said the German, "you remembers you married me, and I gave you von leetle pig?"

"Yes."

"Vell, if you'll unmarry me, I vill give you two leetle pigs."

The Metric System.

Congressman Stephens has introduced in the House a bill to promote the general use of the metric system. It authorizes the use of a metric system, and the continued use of any system now permitted by law is not prohibited, the true intent and meaning of the act being not to enforce any particular system, but to provide for public convenience by adaptation to its circumstances and exigencies. The following are the metric tables, as prepared by the bill:

Measures of length—100 hairs make a nail; 100 nails make a metre; 1,000 metres make a kile.

Measures of surface—10,000 square metres make a great acre.

Measures of bulk and capacity—100 drops make a spoon; 100 spoons make a quart; 100 quarts make a cask.

Measures of weight—100 seeds make a corn; 100 corns make a nut; 100 nuts make a bipound or bip; 100 bips make a ton.

THE average prices of domestic fleece wool in the United States from 1824 to 1861 were: For fine, 53.3 cents; for medium, 42.4 cents, and for coarse, 34.5 cents. Average prices for four years, 1861 to 1866 (during the war), were: For fine, 75.6 cents; for medium, 71 cents; and for coarse, 70.7 cents. Average prices for eleven years, from 1866 to 1876 inclusive, were: For fine, 55 cents; for medium, 53 cents, and for coarse, 48.2 cents. In September, 1864, $1.15 was paid for fine and medium grades.

RATS.

How to Rid Your Premises of the Pestiferous Rodents.

An exchange suggests, on this important topic, that there are three methods which fill the bill: First, the old French plan. This is followed, chiefly in Paris, by men who make it a special business. They take a deep tub, with water on the bottom and a little elevation in the middle like an island, on which is only a place for just one rat to sit. The tub is covered, but has in the center a trap. This trap is covered, and has a large balance-valve opening downward. On the middle of this valve a piece of fried pork or cheese is placed, and when the rat walks on to get the cheese the valve goes down, drops the rat into the water, and moves back in position. A road is made from the rat-hole to the top of the tub by means of pieces of board rubbed with cheese, so as to make the walk more attractive for the rats. In the course of the night some ten, twenty or even more rats may go down, and if the island was not there they would be found most all alive in the morning, quietly swimming around; but the provision of the little island saves the trouble of killing them, because their instinct of self-preservation causes them to fight for the exclusive possession of the island, on which in the morning the strongest rat is found in solitary possession, all the others being killed and drowned around him. Second, the New York plan, invented by one of the Friends. The floor near the rat-hole is covered with a thin layer of a most caustic potassa. When the rats walk on this it makes their feet sore; these they lick with their tongues, which make their mouths sore, and the result is that they shun the locality, not alone, but appear to tell all the rats in the neighborhood about it, and eventually the house is entirely abandoned by them notwithstanding the houses around are full of rats. Third, the Dutch method. This is said to be used successfully in Holland. A number of rats are left to themselves in a very large trap or cage, with no food whatever. Their craving hunger will cause them to fight, and the weakest will be eaten by the strongest. After a short time the fight is renewed and the next weakest is the victim, and so it goes on until one strong rat is left. When this one has eaten the last remains of the others it is set loose. The animal has now acquired such a taste for rat flesh that he is the terror of all ratdom, going about seeking what rat he may devour. In an incredibly short time the premises are abandoned by all other rats, which will not come back before the cannibal rat has left or died.

Boys Will Be Boys.

She had invited him to stop to supper, and he was trying to appear easy and unconcerned, while she was on her prettiest behavior.

"Have you used the sugar, John?" inquired the mother, in a winning manner.

"John don't want no sugar," ejaculated the young heir, abruptly.

"Why not?" inquired the father, curiously, while John, in his surprise, swallowed a bit of toasted crust and nearly cut his throat open.

"Cos he don't," explained the heir in an artful manner; "I heard him tell Mary last night—"

"You keep still," interrupted Mary, in a hysterical manner, while the young man caught his breath in dismay.

"I heard him say," persisted the heir, with dreadful eagerness, "that she was so sweet he shouldn't never use no more sugar any more—an' then he kissed her, an' I said I'd tell, an'—"

The young heir was lifted out of the room by his ear, and the supper was finished in moody silence.—Baltimore Standard.

Dun.

To dun is a word of consequence, for it is at once a verb and a noun, and is derived from the Saxon word dunan, to din or clamor. It owes its immortality—so tradition says—to having been the surname of one Joe Dun, a famous bailiff of Lincoln in the reign of Henry VII., who was so active and dexterous in collecting bad debts that when any one became "slow to pay," the neighbors used to say, "Dun him," that is, send Dun after him.—Chambers' Journal.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

It is stated, on excellent authority, that a Western New York farmer called 100 bushels of common marrow beans "Ox-marrows—a new variety," and sold them to the Washington Department of Agriculture for $4 per bushel.

Touch the chufa gently, if at all, is the advice of two Texas friends. They planted seed of it, at 60 cents a pound, on good soil, and gave cultivation sufficient to insure a crop of peanuts, and got for their pains a result indicated by the figure 0.

To make the small sticks used as supports for plants "last indefinitely," a Long Island florist seasons them when new, then soaks in linseed oil for two or three days, according to size, then removes them from their bath and dries again, and finishes off with a coat of "verdigris paint."

It is advisable, in the construction of poultry houses, to use pine lumber—the more pitch it contains the better—as this is very offensive to poultry vermin. Some think it pays well to make the roosting cribs of pitch pine boughs as a protection against their greatest enemy, lice.—Western Rural.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer says that after fifteen years' experience with it he cannot recommend orchard grass for general culture; that it is only suited to rich soils which can give two or three crops a year, and that its excellence consists in its rapid growth after each cutting. June grass has a similar habit, and both do well together.

When a horse stumbles, never raise your voice; he dreads his master's chiding. Never jog the reins; the mouth of the horse is more sensitive than the human lips. Never use the lash; the horse is so timid that the slightest correction overpowers its reasoning faculties. Speak to the creature; reassure the palpitating frame; seek to restore those perceptions which will form the best guard against a repetition of the faulty action.

Seeds are more easily killed by high temperature than low. Though no seeds have been known to germinate below 37 degrees Fahrenheit, they are, with few exceptions, destroyed by a temperature above 168 degrees, and many kinds perish below that point. They will not germinate above 128 degrees. Most seeds will stand the severest cold of the winters in this latitude, and wheat left for years in the Arctic region has been sown in England afterward, where it germinated freely.

The laying-nests for hens can be profitably arranged upon the ground in most poultry yards. Where this can be conveniently done it is a good plan, and no method excels this for the avoidance of an accumulation of vermin in the frequently-visited nest. When this convenience is not at hand, if a good-sized green sod be placed at the bottom of the nest, and the hay or straw laid upon this (the roots to be turned upward), it is an excellent plan during the summer months.—Poultry World.

The best time to secure Hungarian grass is when it is in blossom, and before the seeds have formed. The beards at this time have not reached that degree of stiffness which the writer thinks causes injury to the stomach of a horse. while the embryotic seeds are perfectly harmless. One large farmer in the State has, to our personal knowledge, been using it for feed for his horses, at one time keeping eight on it without injury; but then he always aims to cut at the right time.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

The value of parsnips for feeding purposes has heretofore, by many farmers, been underestimated. Horses, hogs and bullocks are fattened upon them in a very short time, and the flesh of the latter two is considered of superior flavor, while in cows it produces an extraordinary yield of milk, having a rich color, and affording butter of excellent quality. The culture of parsnips is largely extending in France; the soil that suits beets will satisfy the parsnip. When the plants are five or fifteen inches high, respectively, they are weeded and hoed; the leaves are cut in the month of September, and allowed to fade for twenty-four hours before being given to the cattle; the roots can be taken up during the winter as required; frost does them no harm; the ration is sixteen pounds three times a day, and the roots are cut; when given to pigs, they ought to be cooked.—Western Farmer.

Plan for a Poultry-House.—Small houses and large runs are most in favor. We give the dimensions of one to accommodate a dozen fowls; if a larger one is required, the same general features may be retained in its construction: Ground dimensions, five feet by seven feet; three and one-half feet from ground to roof; six feet from ground to peak of roof; door at one side of one end, two feet wide; nests on ground at the other side, running lengthwise of the house; platform just above nests; roosts four inches above platform; holes for ventilation in front and rear peaks; roof of dry boards, pressed tightly together, and cracks battened; sides same. Cover the whole with water-lime paint. Brackets can be placed on the four corners, and poles passed through so that the house can be moved to new ground.—Western Rural.

About the House.

To Put Up Horseradish.—Grate the root after thoroughly cleansing it, and put in wide-mouthed half-pint bottles. When full, add two table-spoonfuls of good, sharp vinegar, cork and seal air-tight with wax.

Polishing Copper Vessels.—A copper vessel, badly tinned, Miss Severn found in the kitchen, which had never been properly cleaned and was covered with that deadly poison, verdigris. She had it cleaned with vinegar, rotten stone and oil.

Currant Cake.—Cream, one cup of best butter, and two cups of sugar, one cup of sweet milk, three well-beaten eggs—the whites and yelks separately—three cups of sifted flour, two cups of well-washed currants—dried and well dredged with flour—two teaspoonfuls of baking powder.

Cup Cake.—One cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, two cups of sugar, three well-beaten eggs, four cups of sifted flour (always sift flour after measuring it), one-half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a little hot water, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, sifted in the flour, one cup of raisins well dredged with flour.

Apple Fruit Cake.—Soak three cups dried apples over night in cold water; in the morning chop and stew till soft in three cups of molasses; when cold mix with three cups of flour, one cup of butter, three eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, spices, two cups raisins, one of currants, one lemon chopped fine; this makes two pans of cake.

French Cream Cake.—Boil scant pint milk; take two eggs and two small table-spoonfuls corn starch beaten with a little milk; when the milk boils stir this in slowly with scant cup sugar, one table-spoonful butter, two teaspoonfuls lemon essence; make a cake of three eggs, one cupful sugar, one and one-half cupfuls flour, teaspoonful baking powder, two table-spoonfuls milk; bake in three layers, and while warm spread with cream.—Mrs. R.

Gen. Washington's Breakfast Cake.—Two pounds flour, one quart milk, one ounce butter, one teacupful thin yeast, three eggs, and teaspoonful salt; warm the milk and butter together, and pour it lukewarm into the flour and add the other ingredients; mix this at night, and put in a pan three inches deep; in the morning bake in a quick oven three-quarters of an hour. This cake was always on Gen. Washington's breakfast-table the last few years of his life.—M. A.

To Keep Meat Fresh.—For years I have preserved beef as fresh and nice as just from the meat-shop. Cut in convenient pieces, wash and weigh; to every 100 pounds take from three and one-half to four pounds salt, two pounds sugar, one-half ounce saltpeter, dissolve in enough water to cover the meat, put in a tight tub that will not leak; after it has been in the brine for two or three weeks take out the meat, wash it, boil the brine, skim it and put back again. This recipe is worth many dollars to persons far from market.—Philadelphia Letter.

Corn Pone.—If you will allow me space in your valuable paper I will give you a recipe for corn pone. Place three pints of water on the fire in an iron kettle; add one-fourth of a cup of a salt; let it boil; then thicken with Indian meal gradually until it is as thick as you can conveniently stir it with a pudding stick. When it is thoroughly scalded, take it from the fire, add three quarts of cold water and one cup molasses; then make it as thick as you can stir it conveniently with meal, adding a pint of shorts or graham flour. Keep it in a warm place till it rises up and cracks open on top. Bake slowly for three or four hours, or longer, with a slow fire, or what is better still, steam it. This quantity will make a two-gallon vessel. I bake it in the stove-oven in an old porcelain kettle unfit for other use, and I have met with few people who are not fond of it.—Mrs. E. Hynes, Pocahontas, Ill.

A Murderer's Fearful End.

A letter from Littleton, W. Va., gives the following particulars of the lynching of John Wallace, who murdered Mrs. George Wallace, her infant, and Miss Church:

A party of fifteen resolute men met in a building on the outskirts of the town and laid their plans carefully to take the prisoner from the house where he was confined and hang him. They were all armed with revolvers, and were determined to fight the guards, if necessary. They marched silently through the streets to the house in question, where they were joined by ten more men, also armed. They approached the first guard and demanded admission. He refused, and they drew their pistols and fired several shots in the air, and the man ran off. Entering the front door noisily, they began knocking off the lamp-chimneys with their pistol-barrels, and, as the wind was blowing strongly, the lamps were soon extinguished and the place was in utter darkness. Then the mob began firing into the ceiling, and shouting as though they were so many devils. They fired about in such a reckless manner that several of their party were slightly wounded.

When Wallace heard the uproar he began sobbing and praying, and, as the door of his room opened and the first of the lynchers made his appearance, he sprung behind one of the guards and screamed: "My God, don't kill me! Save me! Save me!" The mob laughed at his cries, and, after knocking the guard down and trampling on him, they threw Wallace on his back and began to tie his arms. Again he screamed in agony, as great drops of perspiration rolled down his face, "Don't murder, don't kill me, for God's sake; give me time to pray; I want to see a minister."

After placing a rope firmly about his neck, they dragged him down stairs head-foremost and out of the house on to the railroad track, where he uttered the most horrible cries, cursing, praying and begging them to let him go. They paid no attention to him, but began running with him as though he were a log or a barrel. Wallace did not stop begging for mercy until he had been dragged nearly a quarter of a mile. He vainly tried to regain his feet and stand up, but whenever he did so the mob would pull the rope suddenly and jerk him on his back. After going nearly a mile below Littleton, they stopped and hanged the body to a tree.

At 6 o'clock he was found dangling from the limb of an apple tree, alongside of the railroad, his feet about three feet from the ground. When the body was examined, the spine and neck were found to be broken, and the body horribly mangled and bruised.

A family of Canton, Mass., suffocating with coal gas, were saved through the instrumentality of a dog. They were all insensible, with the exception of the father, who was just able to go to another room to get some water, when he fainted. The house dog licked his face until he was restored to consciousness, just in time to revive the family.

ILLINOIS GREENBACKERS.

Platform Adopted by the Springfield Convention.

Whereas, Throughout our entire country the value of real estate is depreciated, industry paralyzed, trade depressed, business incomes and wages reduced, unparalleled distress inflicted upon the poorer and middle ranks of our people, the land filled with fraud, embezzlement, bankruptcy, crime, suffering, pauperism and starvation; and,

Whereas, This state of things has been brought about by legislation in the interest of and dictated by money-lenders, bankers and bondholders; and,

Whereas, While we recognize the fact that men in Congress connected with both the old political parties have stood up manfully for the rights of the people, and met the threats of the money power and the ridicule of an ignorant and subsidized press, yet neither the Republican nor the Democratic parties in their national policies propose remedies for the existing evils; and,

Whereas, The Independent-Greenback party and other associations more or less effective have been unable heretofore to make a formidable opposition to the old party organizations; and,

Whereas, The limiting of the legal-tender quality of greenbacks, the changing of currency bonds into coin bonds, the demonetizing of the silver dollar, the excepting of bonds from taxation, the contraction of the circulating medium, the proposed forced resumption of specie payments, and the prodigal waste of the public lands, were crimes against the people, and, as far as possible, the results of these criminal acts must be counteracted by judicious legislation, therefore we assemble in State Convention and make a declaration of our principles, and invite all patriotic citizens to unite in an effort to secure financial reform and industrial emancipation. The organization shall be known as the "National party," and under this name we will perfect, without delay, State, and local associations to secure the election to office to such men only as will pledge themselves to do all in their power to establish these principles:

1. It is the exclusive function of the General Government to coin and create money and regulate its value. All bank issues designed to circulate as money should be suppressed, their circulating medium, whether of metal or paper, should be issued by the Government and made a full legal tender for all debts, duties and taxes in the United States at its stamped value.

2. There shall be no privileged class of creditors. Official salaries, pensions, bonds and all other debts and obligations, public or private, shall be discharged in the legal-tender money of the United States, strictly according to the stipulations of the laws under which they were contracted.

3. That the coinage of silver be placed on the same footing as that of gold.

4. Congress shall provide said money adequate to the full employment of labor, the equitable distribution of its products, and the requirements of business, fixing a minimum amount per capita to the population as near as may be, and otherwise regulating its volume by wise and equitable provisions of law, so that the rate of interest will secure to labor its just reward.

5. It is inconsistent with the genius and spirit of popular government that any species of private property should be exempt from bearing its just share of the public burdens. Government bonds and money should be taxed precisely as other property, and a graduated income tax should be levied for the support of the Government and the payment of its debts.

6. The public lands are the common property of the whole people, and should not be sold to speculators nor gambled to railroads or other corporations, but should be donated to actual settlers in limited quantities.

7. The Government should, by general enactments, encourage the development of our agricultural, mineral, mechanical, manufacturing and commercial resources, to the end that labor may be fully and profitably employed, but no monopolies should be legalized.

8. All useless offices should be abolished, the most rigid economy enforced in every branch of the public service, and severe punishments inflicted upon public officers who betray the trusts reposed in them.

9. As educated labor has devised means for multiplying production by invention and discoveries, and, as their use requires the exercise of mind as well as body, such legislation should be had that the number of hours of daily toil will be reduced, giving to the working classes more leisure for mental improvement and social enjoyment, and saving them from permanent decay and death.

10. The adoption of an American monetary system, as proposed herein, will harmonize all differences in regard to tariff and Federal taxation, reduce and equalize the cost of transportation by land and water, distribute equitably the joint earnings of capital and labor, secure to the producers of wealth the results of their labor and skill, muster out the vast army of idlers who, under the existing system, grow rich upon the earnings of others, that every man and woman may, by their own efforts, secure a competence, so that overgrown fortunes and extreme poverty will be seldom found within the limits of our republic.

11. Both National and State Governments should establish bureaus of labor and industrial statistics, clothed with the power of gathering and publishing the same.

12. That the contract system of employing labor in our prisons and reformatory institutions works great injustice to our mechanics and artisans, and should be prohibited.

13. That the importation of servile labor into the United States from China is a problem of the most serious importance, and we recommend legislation looking to its suppression.

14. That we demand an immediate issue of a full legal-tender currency by the Government to the full limit at least of the $400,000,000 of legal-tender United States treasury notes.

15. That the credit of the Government can best be strengthened and preserved by its first paying off its interest-bearing debt before calling in any part of its non-interest-bearing obligations for redemption.

16. That we recommend and urge upon all State, county and township committees, and all other persons engaged in the work of organizing National Greenback and local clubs, that they support the principles set forth in the Toledo platform.

17. That the payment of all wages in lawful money is the only valid payment for labor, and that we are opposed to the employment of minors in shops and factories under 14 years of age.

Can There Be Too Much Real Money.

The project which has appeared in various shapes since the passage of the Silver bill—to authorize any holder of silver bullion to deposit it in the treasury and get certificates for it which can circulate as money—is causing much fresh alarm among the gold-monopoly newspapers. They perceive in it ruin and financial pestilence—"gorgons and hydras and chimeras dire." Perhaps the measure to use all available bullion as money is a little premature, for even a right thing is wrong when done at a wrong time, but it will certainly be adopted by-and-by and ought to be. The same rule already applies to gold, and silver ought to be put on the same footing. If the precious metals can be used without coining, they ought to be. Coining is a double waste, for it not only employs human labor unprofitably, but, more and more, it alloys the metals, and thus unfits them for use in the arts until their reconversion. This friction ought to be saved.

All the precious metals in the world that can be spared from the arts should be utilized as money. All the gold and silver money in existence could be stored in a building 300 feet square, and it is not too much to effect the exchanges of civilized man. History shows that the periods of the world's highest prosperity have been precisely those in which the volume of gold and silver money was the greatest; and that every reduction in the volume of money has been followed by an increase of misery. When the Roman empire was at the summit of its glory, and its citizens enjoyed a maximum of comfort and happiness, it is estimated by the best authorities that it possessed not less than $1,500,000,000 of gold and silver. But the sources of the precious metals began to fail and prosperity began simultaneously and rapidly to decline. During the first and second centuries of the Christian era $200,000,000 was lost. In the year 400 there was only about $1,000,000,000 left. By 500 it had sunk to $800,000,000; by 700, to $500,000,000; by 800, to $400,000,000; and by the year 1200, it is believed that the total money-wealth of the Roman empire was not more than $150,000,000, only one-tenth of what it had been 1,200 years before! The European world, meantime, had gone from bright light to thick darkness—from intelligence to degradation and deep barbarism. When Rome possessed $1,500,000,000, each emperor, on dying, left from $2 to $20 to every citizen of the empire. When the amount was reduced to $150,000,000, the utmost poverty prevailed; a cow could be bought for a dollar and a sheep for sixpence, and human beings became so cheap that they were scarcely considered worth holding even as slaves, but were transformed into live money—currency—a man or a woman passing from hand to hand as a representative of $10! These were "The Dark Ages," and now occurred the horrors of history. Not one in 10,000 could read or write. Europe was steeped in crime.

Suddenly Spain discovered Central America, with its gold and silver mines, and the Dark Ages were at an end. The amount of the precious metals quadrupled in a century. Learning sprung up again, and something like comfort was once more attainable. Spain became mistress of the world—because she was the world's silver miner. Crime diminished; moral responsibility was re-established; science reared its timid head; the Inquisition was abolished; the Reformation taught man to inquire; leisure gave him opportunity to study, and necessity stimulated him to invent.

There cannot be too much real money. Who so diminishes it, by demonetizing or disusing either of the precious metals in any country, is an enemy of human comfort, and deserves the execration of the race.—New York Graphic.

One Phase of Resumption.

The Resumption act orders that on the 1st day of January, 1879, not ten months hence, the Government shall redeem all greenbacks then outstanding in coin. The difference between the "irredeemable" greenback and gold is to-day but 1 per cent. This fact is an unanswerable tribute to the Government credit currency of the United States. Equalization is not resumption. The appreciation of the greenback dollar is not its redemption in coin. It is known to all the world that the Government has no coin at all in which to redeem its notes. Of these there are about $340,000,000 outstanding. There are national-bank notes to the amount of about $320,000,000, and these are made redeemable in lawful money. When greenbacks are no longer lawful money, or when they shy into the treasury in hot haste for coin, the national-bank notes are redeemable in coin unless something else, meanwhile, is made lawful money. Under existing law, therefore, the national-bank notes and the greenbacks will be redeemable in coin on the first day of next January. About $660,000,000 of gold and silver coin will be required for this purpose, nearly all of which must be accumulated before that date. The Silver bill will enable not more than $40,000,000 of silver dollars to be coined within this period, and there is little or no gold available for resumption purposes. Under the State-bank system men only cared to know that the bank had the money, the coin, and then they didn't want it. If the bank hadn't it men wanted it vociferously. The public was entirely ignorant of the condition of those banks, of the amount of coin they had. The public belief was that the coin was ready when the bank notes should be presented. Now, everybody knows that the coin is not in bank for the national-bank notes, and that the coin is not in the treasury for the greenbacks. The holders of those notes, therefore, knowing this fact, will be anxious for that coin. There will inevitably be a "run" on the treasury and on the national banks for coin. The greater the "run" the greater the relative value of the coin, and thus the "run" will constantly stimulate itself, by presenting constantly increasing temptations. An exceptional and enormous demand for coin is created, the supply remaining unchanged, and the holders of these notes alone are by law privileged to buy coin at 100 cents on the dollar. The result is easy to foresee. By the terms of the Resumption act the greenbacks, once redeemed, cannot be reissued. This clearly throws the burden of the redemption in coin of the paper money upon the national banks existing next January.

But this is only one feature of the Resumption act. The depositors of the country have deposited lawful money, or what was accepted as such, and are entitled to receive lawful money in return. Under the operation of the Resumption act greenbacks will be buried or burned, and no national bank will allow a note to go out because it is redeemable in coin. The depositors, therefore, must be paid in coin. Let us look at the effect of this. In June last the deposits in the banks amounted to $2,120,113,395. The banks will be called on to pay these deposits in coin. Deposits will have become valuable. Checks, etc., will have been deposited in bank as money, and have been used as money, and the deposits must be paid in money. Money will then mean coin, and the banks will be called on to take their own medicine. The banks are the money-lenders. When they are invited to pay $2,000,000,000 of deposits in coin, may we "be there to see." The Senate of the United States has the Resumption Repeal bill under advisement. Its Finance Committee has postponed its consideration from time to time. We suggest to that august body that they contemplate this phase of resumption before they fail to concur with the House in repealing the Resumption act. In saying this we are not specially moved by compassion, for the banks shovel everybody else into misfortune before they tumble in themselves.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The South and West Demand.

What are the facts as to the demands made by the people of the Western and Southern States concerning financial reforms? They ask that a national policy which has been steadily pursued until the country is on the verge of ruin shall cease. That the effort to bring the business of the land and all its property values to a gold basis shall be abandoned. That an immediate end be put to the system of contracting the currency which has paralyzed trade throughout the Union, and they insist that Government alone shall issue the circulating medium. They ask that a reasonable amount of currency be kept in use, because it is simply impossible to dispense with it as we are now situated, even if it were ever advisable to do so.—Quincy (Ill.) Herald.

THE EUROPEAN CRISIS.

Russia, England and Turkey.

During the recent war, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, Russia published news or opinions only when it suited her convenience or served her purpose. There were periods when her army officers were great news disseminators; and, again, there were long intervals when those same officers said nothing themselves nor allowed anyone else to say anything. The periods of silence covered eras of preparation, and the communicative moods were inspired by results accomplished. Throughout the whole campaign this policy was maintained. Judged by the rule of the campaign, the recent semi-official outburst from St. Petersburg is significant, in that it indicates that Russia has perfected her plans, has completed her preparations, and is ready to meet the crisis. Her readiness to declare what she will do, under certain contingencies, means that she is ready to precipitate the contingencies, or, in other words, that she is ready for action.

In such a crisis readiness for action on the part of Russia involves, or may involve, such tremendous issues that the nations of Europe may well contemplate the prospect with many misgivings. As matters stand now, Russia has settled several questions that have agitated Europe, or at least has opened the way to settlement, but a war with England will unsettle all these and add new and confusing complications everywhere. The attitude of Russia would n dicate that, notwithstanding all rumors to the contrary, satisfactory arrangements have been made with Germany and Austria; that an alliance with Turkey, in the event of war with England, has been concluded, and that the neutrality of other powers has been secured. It has been a difficult task to make all these arrangements without undoing the work of the war, but the very conditions under which the Russian diplomatists speak argue that the difficult task has been accomplished, or that Russia believes it has been accomplished.

A Turkish alliance is to Russia, engaged in a war with England, a necessity; and, with the new English policy in view, such an alliance is important to Turkey as well. England, to thwart Russia, would give all of European Turkey to Greece. Russia, to thwart England, would preserve the Turkish power in Europe, and give Bosnia, Herzegovina, Albania, and even part of Macedonia to Austria. England's policy invites no strong allies, while Russia's policy gives to an important power a new coast line on the Adriatic and a new port on the Ægean. In her counter play against England, Russia is forced to abandon her traditional policy; but, while maintaining her position as to Bulgaria and the straits, she makes friends of both Austria and Turkey, and, for the time being, isolates England.

With Turkey as a base, Russia is ready for battle at once, and if she has decided on war it may be assumed that she will by a bold demand force the retirement of England, or precipitate a conflict. England, on the contrary, even if determined on war, will delay hostilities until her preparations are complete. With her ironclads within a few hours' sail of Constantinople, and at the Dardanelles, she can well afford to do this.

Supreme Court Decision.

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States to review civil cases is limited to those in which the value of the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000. Benjamin F. Butler sued Alexander A. Thompson in the United States Circuit Court in Massachusetts, and obtained a verdict for $5,066.17. Before entering judgment the plaintiff remitted $66.17, so that the judgment as entered was for precisely $5,000. The defendant then sued out a writ of error to have the case reviewed by the Supreme Court at Washington. There he was met by a motion to dismiss the writ for want of jurisdiction, because the amount or value involved did not exceed $5,000. The opinion of the court, delivered by the Chief Justice, sustains this objection, and the writ of error has been dismissed. It is held that the trial court has the power to permit a plaintiff to reduce a verdict in his own favor, as was done here, and presumably no such reduction will be allowed if the object is to deprive the defendant of an appeal in a meritorious case. Whether this case was meritorious or not, it looks very much as if the reduction were made solely to prevent an examination of it by the Supreme Court. In dismissing the appeal the court holds that the fact that the judgment was for $5,000 "in coin" makes no difference. "Our jurisdiction," says Chief Justice Waite, "is to be determined by the amount of money to be paid, and not the kind."

A River Intensely Salt.

It was long supposed that the brackishness of Salt river, Arizona, was caused by the stream running over a bed of salt somewhere along its course. Its waters are pure and fresh from where it heads in the White mountains, to within fifty miles of where it empties into the Gila. Fifty miles from its junction with the Gila there comes into it a stream of water that is intensely salt. This stream pours out of the side of a large mountain, and is from twenty to thirty feet deep. It is very rapid, and pours into the Salt river a great quantity of water. Here could be easily manufactured sufficient salt to supply the world. All that would be necessary would be to dig ditches and lead the brine to basins in the nearest desert. The heat of the sun would make the salt. Were there a railroad near the stream its waters would doubtless soon be turned and led to immense evaporating ponds. It is supposed that the interior of the mountain out of which the stream flows is largely composed of rock salt.—Nevada Enterprise.

Costly Kiss.

Mrs. Smith, of Newton, Kan., wanted a troublesome tooth extracted, and called on Dr. Seaton to relieve her. The doctor poised Mrs. Smith in his barber-chair and was brandishing his tweezers when it occurred to him to snatch a kiss from the aching mouth of Mrs. Smith. He made the attempt, but the lady let fly on his left eye, and the tooth-pulling came to a sudden halt. Mrs. Smith was not satisfied with the punishment given the dentist. After a hotly-contested trial, the dentist was convicted and fined $25 and costs, amounting to $51.

A FIRST CLASS CALF BOOT MADE TO ORDER FOR ONLY $5.50 AT

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, APRIL 11, 1878

—Hayes has commenced to draw Tilden's second year's salary.

—We do not like the nomination of Mr. Field, of Georgia, for Doorkeeper of the house. Gen. Shields, of Missouri should have had the place. He is the veteral of two wars, is in poor circumstances and a mistake was made when he was not nominated.

—Mr. Polk, the Doorkeeper of the House has stepped down and out, for certain crooked acts. By a vote of the House he was remitted to his constituents, and as long as the Democracy will turn out and disgrace corrupt officials, that long we will feel proud of her record.

—England is in good financial condition to commence war. The Budget shows a surplus for the past year of £839,808, or more than $4,250,000. There was the vote of £6,000,000. The income tax is to be increased, also the tobacco duty and dog tax. England will not want for money, should war come. She lends to nations at war.

—Ex-Congressman Vance, of Ohio, went to Cincinnati a few days ago, and there all trace was lost of him. His mysterious disappearance caused many rumors, one of which was that he had eloped with a music teacher. Last Monday a dispatch was received by his wife from San Francisco, stating that her husband was there, insane but harmless. So it is not so bad as at first thought.

Demagoguery in the House.

There has been some excitement in the House at Washington, over the election of a Door Keeper. Polk was forced to step out, and Butler nominated Gen. Shields, of Mexican war fame, for the position, acting on the theory that the minority should dictate in anything out of which they could make political capital. Gen. Field, a confederate officer was chosen by the Democratic Caucus, and when the election took place, Butler made one of his characteristic speeches, appealing to the sentiment of the north, and warning Representatives that the graves of Union soldiers were yet too green to have a Confederate Brigadier elected Door-keeper of the House of Representatives. He rung changes on the loyalty, and had much to say about Gen. Field having been educated at West Point; about his going into the rebellion and about his subsequently expatriating himself and taking service under the Khedive of Egypt, and he insisted that in doing so he had to take an oath of allegiance to the Sultan of Turkey. Hunton, of Virginia, pricked that bubble and took the wind out of that sail by showing that he entered into the same kind of contract that Federal officers entered into in the same service, and that in that contract it was explicitly stipulated that they were not to engage in any conflict with the United States. Butler had also much to say about treason and traitors, and intimated that men like Field were alive only through the clemency and mercy of the Republican party. He boasted that he was the only officer who ever hanged a man for treason. Blackburn, of Kentucky, subsequently referred to this boast, and said that the execution of this unarmed man was the only case on record in which the distinguished warrior from Massachusetts had ever killed or hurt any one in the late war. Blackburn bitterly complained of the way in which the Republicans were continually hurling abuse at ex-Confederates, and he said they had never revived the issues of the war unless their manhood was attacked. He took the broad ground that when the Confederate armies surrendered all issues of war vanished, and that all now stood upon the same level as American citizens. Clymer, in a brief speach, said he did not at all feel disturbed at Butler's appeal to the loyalty of the North. He for one did not propose that the minority should dictate who the majority should select as their officer. Bragg, of Wisconsin, denounced Butler's resolution as clap-trap, and, while he would vote to give material aid to Shields, he did not propose to be forced to vote for him for Door-keeper. After the discussion had progressed for some time in this style Butler demanded the previous question, and the House refused to second the demand. This action gave Clymer control of the subject, and he yielded to different gentlemen. Cox, of New York, took the ground that all citizens were on equality, and he was not to be frightened by the cry of confederates. Hale got a few minutes, and was, as usual, demagogical. He wandered off from the record to attack gentlemen who were not in the case at all, and whose only trouble was that they had been Confederates, and had subsequently held office in the House of Representatives. McMahon made the closing speech, and demonstrated very conclusively that all the friendship for the soldier did not belong to the Republican party. He referred to the various acts that had been passed for the relief of soldiers, and showed by quotations from the record that the Democrats in the last two Congresses had passed bills through the House which were permitted to die in the Senate.

—Democrats of Keyser township may be gratified to know that Mr. Clark is telling on the street corners that he beat the best man the democrats claimed they could put up against him.—Those who voted for him ought to be delighted.

GARRETT, IND., April 8, 1878.

MR. EDITOR, Dear Sir:—In your COURIER of last week, I noticed your remarks in regard to the election in Keyser-tp., or rather Garrett, and being a resident of that town and a reader of the COURIER, I take the liberty to inform you that we had no such a thing here as an election in the true sense of the word—not according to Webster's definition of the term. In short it was "a grand Republican farce," well studied and executed by a few misguided business men, a would-be land agent, several so-called railroad officers with their subordinates as assistants, and Orrin C. Clark very conspicuously carrying his campaign document (a list of the names of donors and their donations, for the purpose of getting a piece of road opened in the country north of Garrett,) as the subject of the "farce."

There are various opinions expressed as to the motives of substituting this "farce" for an honest, decent election, to-wit:

Some seem to think it was worked up by a few shrewd business men of Auburn, in order to effect as much discord and strife as possible between Garrett and the eastern half of this township, to gain business advantages for Auburn but I hope and firmly believe that theory to be false, or a misspeculation, because the country people are wide awake and will do their trading where they can do the best.

Others are disposed to take a more charitable view of the matter, and seem to think that many voted for Mr. Clark because they learned that he had been an unsuccessful candidate for office among his fellow countrymen quite often, and finding him so over anxious for office, they sympathized with and consequently voted for him; while others thought he would be more harmless and less obnoxious in his capacity as township trustee, than he would be as representative of this county in the legislature of the state, which important office, if I am rightly informed, he has been a candidate for once or twice, and very likely would be again. Be that as it may, he has been bulldozed into the office so effectually that it rendered the aid of a "Returning Board" entirely unnecessary, and while thinking men ponder over the ways and means employed to bring about the result of what should have been an election, there is little doubt but what that result was carried in the pockets of the above mentioned principal actors in the "farce," who could be seen dealing out the same in the shape of republican tickets to two or three of their subordinates at the time, sending them out during working hours with instructions to deposit the same and return soon so as to give the next lot a chance to go, thereby carefully avoiding a crowding at the polls, which would have given some of them at least a chance to exercise their own free will, which instructions were by these subordinates almost invariably, though by some very reluctantly obeyed—these men very wisely taking into consideration the hard times in connection with the apparent determination of their superiors, also finding themselves carefully watched at the polls, and knowing it to be unsafe to incur the ill will of their boss or foreman. Quite a number of republican tickets appeared beheaded, with the name of a popular democratic candidate at the bottom, so as to make deception easy.

All this, Mr. Editor, may look very bad on paper, but to a close observer, it looked decidedly worse while transacted. Having been brought up and used to casting my ballot at a town and country where such disgraceful tampering with that sacred privilege of the people, the ballot would not be practiced nor tolerated by either political party. And finding the remark in the COURIER that the republicans had not won the election by any particular stratagem or shrewdness, I could not refrain from making these statements as well as I can. Having also the future welfare of Garrett and Keyser township at heart, I sincerely hope that the honest and conscientious citizens of both political parties will work together, to prevent a repetition of the playing of such a disgraceful political farce. W.

GARRETT.

—Some three or four weeks ago the idea was conceived in the higher circle among some of the upper tens of making a public charge against the Garrett correspondent to the COURIER. An old lying hypocritical literary machine was selected and after being dusted off and the old cobwebs brushed out, it was wound up, set a going and the following beautiful, moral, literary production was ground out, which appeared in the Garrett Herald, of last week. It has been the subject of considerable merriment here, in Garrett, and in order to renew their laughter, and to let others know, who do not take this delectable sheet, see what a learned and able author of moral literature we have here. Will you please give it space.

GARRETT, IND., April 2, 1878.

MR. EDITOR:—I wish to call attention to the Garrett "demagogue" correspondent of the Auburn Courier. I have observed his slanderous articles for the past four or five weeks, and have wondered that T. C. Mays would admit such "filth" every week in the columns of his valuable paper, from such a worthless rag.

I have seen this same obscene, self-assumed "literary" writer tumbling around on our sidewalks, which seemed too narrow for him to walk on, under the influence of that "chief" of evils, whisky! which has brought many such characters to an untimely end, and a drunkard's grave. And in his debauched condition, he goes home to his family, and after moderate preparations he retires to sleep off that drunken stupor which would probably last until late in the morning. Then by a strong effort upon the part of others he is finally aroused. He gets up, looks around—everything seems changed. He imagines he has slept the twenty years sleep of "Rip Van Winkle." He then sits down and devours his breakfast with an appetite of a "hungry wolf," after which his mind reverts back to his previous night's spree. He imagines some one else is better than he is, and he is determined to bring that party down to his own level, by slandering him thro' the columns of the Courier, and when he fails to find a male victim he hurls his slang at ladies.

MORAL.—If this "depraved victim of intemperance" would devote more of his time to the advancement of his business, and less of it laying around saloons, to catch all the slang that is used in such places, by which to slander his neighbors, he would gain more in the end. SPECTATOR.

This is one of the most eloquent, brilliant and spicy articles that has appeared in the Herald since it "squatted" here. By careful reading you will perceive small typographical errors. What is original in this epistle is marked with quotation marks, while the quoted part is omitted. However, this does not change the sense of the article or venom of this "Moral Spectator." They have come up and made the charge behind a thin masked battery, and we shall make an effort in our weak literary condition to scale their breast works. We do not claim to be without faults, or make any pretentions of temperance, and we are destitute of that sweet, smooth and refined "mocked" literary attainment. We admit our clothes are "ragged," but the old "rags" are paid for. We are responsible for all our items and criticisms to the COURIER. All our criticisms have been confined strictly to the parties at which it was aimed, and only those have been criticised who have thrown themselves liable. We have never traced any person to their private residence, into their private bed chamber and to their humble table, around which the family circle gathers, with the intention of hurling the public sentiment of shame and scorn on an affectionate companion and innocent children. God forbid that we will ever attempt to polute the columns of any paper, in this style, under the disguise of a "moral" writer; and any person who will be guilty of such a disgraceful act, would be kicked out of any a well regulated saloon we have ever been in. But a bird that is hit will always "flutters." Now, when this "Moral Spectator" says, through the columns of this refined sheet, that we have ever neglected our business, lost one day by the influence of whisky and that we have ever retired to our bed with "moderate" preparations, or that we have ever been guilty of such deportment at our family table, as this Spectator sets forth in the above article, we are ready to give our name to the public and prove this Spectator a literary liar. But oh! this Spectator fears we will meet an untimely end and fill a drunkard's grave.—There is no danger of this "Moral Spectator" meeting an untimely end, for God covets not the life of a sinner, but rather that they may live and repent. But when they do go it is certain that they will fill a liar's grave. Which has the best promise in holy writ, a drunkard or a liar? I would ask this Spectator to inquire among his every day associates, of those who would not be seen going into a saloon, if they know of any one who has been seen going around the street of Garrett, in the silent hour of the night, scratching and giving certain signs on certain doors, by which to gain admission, in order to gratify their fiendish and lustful appetites. We have faults and acknowledge them—they are all open to the world, and we do not travel in disguise. We acknowledge to be weak and liable to temptations. We will advise you for your own instruction and benefit to take the Holy Bible and read over carefully the "Parable of the Adulterous Woman."

"MORAL."—Had we abandoned our family before we came to Garrett, and came here dressed in a broadcloth suit, and it not paid for, putting on all the style of a "French Count," with the finger of virtue pointing us out from whence we came as a violator of female chastity, and as having a character blacker than the fumes of "Milton's Hell," we have no doubt we would be a welcome guest in the society of this great "Moral and Literary Spectator." We very humbly implore the assistance of Divine Providence to protect us from ever being the cause of bringing such a party down to our level.

—An effort is being made in the south part of town to get a plank walk laid between the Eel River and Baltimore railroads. A meeting was held last Saturday by the residents of South Auburn, Mr. Sheets presiding. It was agreed to make the walk three feet wide, and about thirty-five rods will be built by property holders along the line A subscription will be circulated through the township for logs, lumber, and other material for its construction. Mr. Mitchel has agreed to saw 4,000 feet gratis, and it is hoped that those who can will furnish lumber from which to cut the planks.

—Our friend Mike long was terribly worked up last week about an organ. It seems that the next morning after an organ was stolen from the Reformed Church above Waterloo, an instrument very much like it was shipped to Mike, at this place, from Summit. It is said that three men stole the organ from the church, late in the evening, and sure enough three persons, among whom was Mike, came down on the midnight train from Waterloo. It looked awful bad for Mike for a while, until he got his mad up and was ready to fight a regiment, when it came out all right. Of course, none who knew Mike, for an instant believed that he had any thing to do with the robbery.

—We fail to see what authority the county supervisors have for spending the public money in one part ot the county and none in another. The people have a right to demand that there be an equal distribution of it made so as to benefit the largest part of our population, and each township has the same right to demand its proportion of this money for the benefit of the township. We understand that this money has been principally expended in and around Auburn, while it has been more needed and would have been of greater benefit had it been distributed among the different townships. The use of the public money to build up any one town to the exclusion of others is a fraud perpetrated upon the trust and confidence of the people who elect the supervisors and pay the taxes. The people of this township should demand that some of this money be devoted to the improvement of the roads in this township. They have this right, and it should be exercised and heeded by those who have been elected to the trust of disbursing this fund.

The above item appeared in the Garrett Herald last week. Had it emanated from any other source, we would have characterized it as a condensation of of more ignorance and nonsense than we have seen for many a day. But as Bro. Powell is the author, courtesy will not permit us to say so. He evidently means the county commissioners, when he refers to supervisors, though he ought to have learned by this time the name of our county officers. The auditor's books will show that the "money has not been principally expended in and around Auburn," nor can it be shown that as much has been expended in and around Auburn as at several other points in the county. The commissioners have very little to do with building roads, except the approaches to bridges and a heavy cut or fill which townships are unable to handle. The only work done by the county near Auburn for years past is a small dyke between the Eel River bridge and Cedar Creek, and a new road way a few rods east of the bridge. Just what inspired Bro. Powell to insert such an article we don't know but we are very sure he is sadly mistaken as a examination of the record will show.

—Fort Wayne is retrograding. When Beecher lectured there, an immense throng was in attendance. After that Tilton came, and the audience was quite small. It is needless to say that Tilton is much the better lecturer. The audience on those occasions discloses this fact. Fort Wayne is for sensation, not for merit.

—Second street, at the north end of Main has been vacated, and there is some little talk of vacating several others. The work should not be encouraged, as it entirely spoils the looks of both Main and the streets they vacate. There are however, a few that might be closed, but on the contrary a part of the east and west streets are the most handsome ones we have.

—Smoke. Try Davenports 5c.

—Garden making in order.

CHARADE.

We submit the following, a Charade consisting of a word of two syllables, and as an inducement for its solution we offer that reaper and mower which Weamer offered to subscribers a few years ago:

MY FIRST.

I sunder friends, yet give to laws
A place to stand and plead their cause.
Though justice and sobriety
Still find their safest ground in me,
I spread temptation in man's way,
And rob and ruin every day.

MY SECOND.

Success and power are in my name,
Men strive for me for more than fame,
One thing I am unto the wise,
But quite another in fools' eyes,
Through me the world is rich and strong,
Yet too much love of me is wrong.

MY WHOLE.

My first and second when they meet,
As lawyers' fees, my whole complete,
And yet my first too oft enjoyed,
Is sure to make my second void.
My whole is good and bad by turns,
As every merchant daily learns.

Family Re-union.

We learn that Lemuel Flint, Esq., one of the oldest citizens in Concord township, held a re-union of his numerous family last Saturday. There were about sixty-five to enjoy a splendid picnic dinner, and about seventy-five souls who claimed to be a branch from this parent stem. Several very handsome presents were made to the old gentleman, who is as vigorous, hearty, although a cripple, as most of his sons. A handsome cake with the work "Grandpa" and the figures "80" was presented by a little grand daughter.

—We trust that at the lecture to-morrow evening, by Mrs. Young, all will try to be there by eight o'clock. On several occasions lately, the whole audience has been disturbed by tardy ones, which, to say the least, is very annoying. After a lecture has commenced, it is the heighth of ill manners to interrupt them in that way. There is no good reason for thus lagging behind, as the hour is certainly late enough for the laziest. When an audience once settles itself to listen, it wants to do so undisturbed.

Jackson Center.

—Our base ball club played its first game last Saturday.

—The literary at McClellan's school house closed last Saturday.

—A protracted meeting is now being held at Bear Creek church.

—Mr. Antrup has taken a child from the county asylum to raise.

—Rev. Cray preached to a very large congregation at Bethel church on last Friday night.

—Mrs. Shaffer, wife of Peter Shaffer, died last Saturday after a long illness of dropsy and heart disease.

St. Joe Items.

—Items scarce.

—W. Tustison is visiting friends in Ohio.

—Prange has skipped out and Di. is left to mourn his loss.

—Ed. and Jim. have got their fill of sport at the bridge shanty.

—The defeated candidates at the late election have retired to private life and all is as lovely as a big sun flower.

—The boss pump peddler has his headquarters at this place. He mostly excells in putting down pumps say sixty feet or more.

—Alex and Pete had a few sharp words on Friday, which might have made an item had there been a little more sand. Brush up gents and give us something to write about.

—Candidates for the fall election are springing up from every corner and Concord township will be on hand with her quoto of men wanting our support. Go it straight gentlemen, for St Joe., though small in stature, is big at the polls. Duroc.

St. John and New Era Items.

—Roads good again.

—Rain on Tuesday morning.

—John is gone and Relia is sad.

—Trustee Broughton and Constable John, shake.

—Charley Broughton is ambitious to become a clogg dancer.

—Vance Holmes and his sister Maggie, paid Mrs. Larimore a visit last Sunday.

—Miss Callie Whetsel of New Era, has got the management of the St. John school.

—Mr. Cal Walters, living north, is going to sell out at public sale, April 16th, and go to Kansas. Grasshoppers there you know,

—Wes Work has received of T. J. Williamson some time ago, one of the finest Short Horn thoroughbred bulls we ever saw, undoubtedly the finest in the county.

—The Sunday school at Cedar Creek Chapel, is having a good attendance, when the weather is pleasant. Several members met last week, and put up a new platform, which adds greatly to the appearance of the church.

—The exhibition given by the Literary Society at Cedar Creek on Tuesday before last, was a grand success. Henry Gettle, of Altona, favored us with his Troublesome Servant, and performed it so well, as to be a great credit to himself. The exhibition was the closing of the Literary, which is announced again on the second Tuesday in October

Somianaux.

Junction Items.

—Johnson how is your purp.

—Ed. Lane will be with us again at the Baker House, after the 15th.

—Fred S. will keep no more boarders as his wife's health is poorly.

—Beautiful music at the Junction. Sixteen sweet toned cow bells.

—Plumpstead will soon change his residence and take board with the newcomers.

—Winter lingers in the lap of spring. Let her linger, who cares so long as Chris. sets us those good cigars.

—W. Vanmatre of Dalville, Ind., has been spending the past week with his friend John Stineman, of this place.

—The B. & O. folks have moved the platform at the Auburn depot to Millers Ind. The depot will go next I presume.

—The B. & O. operator made friends at Fostoria, Ohio, last Sunday. Is it possible Fostoria has better looking girls than Auburn.

—Mr. Johnson, operator on the F. W. J. & S. R'y., has rented the house belonging to Mr. Whittington, at this place, and moved in last Saturday.

—We are glad to receive the intelligence that Mr. Baker, who was so badly injured Friday evening, while switching at the Junction, is convalesing and will be out in a few days.

—Mr. Jorden, road master on F. W., J. & S. R'y., visited this place Saturday to make arrangements for putting in a new siding on west side of main track. The siding will be about nine hundred feet in length and also a new turntable switch will be put in. Something new for the Junction.

Butler Items.

—Mr. Isaac Yobe, living south of town, is quite sick.

—Farmers have began spring work with energy, hereabouts.

—Last Sabbath was the first pleasant cloudless Lords day, for the past three months

—Mr. Searight and mother have moved into the house formerly occupied by Mr. Champion.

—Mr. Champion has removed to a farm east of town, to engage in the culture of Raspberries. May success attend him.

—The dreadfully demoralizing days of house cleaning is upon us. One of the seven wonders is, how the house wife ever brings order out of such bewildering chaos.

—The remarks of Mr. Otis on the pathological effects of alcohol, before the temperance society last Sabbath evening, brought out some lively discussions on our streets, Monday morning.

—It is sad to think how many poor homeless dogs the Assessor finds now-a-days. Dogs which heretofore have had what would fill volumes said in their praise, are now, nobodoy's dog. Poor Dorgy.

—Our town has its sensations, too. We had a shooting affair last week. Yet we have our peculiar ways of settling such little (?) affairs. We fine the person shot at, and compell them to pay the costs of prosecution. What's the use to make a f u r s e any how.

—Last week the Bar Association of DeKalb county, met at the Depot House, and enjoyed a spirited session. We may well be proud of this body of gentlemen. Mine host Boots, catered to their physical necessities in a manner satisfactory to all. The legal fraternity meet monthly for interchange of opinion, and discussion upon various topics of interest to them.

—The zeal of our town dads in keeping the road scrapers at work on our streets, is certainly commendable and there is probably no way in which our country brethren could exhibit more of good citizenship, and disinterestedness goodness of heart, than by spending an hour or two with their teams and scraper on the roads around their farms. Quite a number have the thanks of those who are compelled to use the public highway.

—Salters & Strafford have taken up their abode in LaOtto for the present, where they have established a black-walnut lumber business, buying and shipping.

—LaOtto feels about like the man that drew an elephant, in the selection of officers, she has got the officers—they look all right, but what are they good for.

—We omited to state last week that E. Gilbert is in durance vile, at Albion up for 30 days, for indulging himself in a little pugilistic exercise with his venerale stepfather, much against that party's will.

—Bill Zorn demolished a bluerACER one day last week, measuring 7 feet in length and 6 inches in circumference, so he says. His calumniators however insinuate that the recent election had something to do with snakes. William has so far recovered as to admit, that the snake might only have been 4 feet long.

—Dr. Dunlop of Waterloo, organized a greenback club at this place last Thursday eve. The following officers were elected: Pres. John Drake; Vice Pres. R. Taylor; Tres. John Miller; Sec. J. J. Strafford. The club has already 20 names enrolled, and more to follow.

ENTERTAINING HER BIG SISTER'S BEAU.

BY BRET HARTE.

"My sister'll be down in a minute, and says you're to wait, if you please,
And says I might stay till she came, if I'd promise her never to tease,
Nor speak till you spoke to me first. But that's nonsense, for how would you know
What she told me to say, if I didn't? Don't you really and truly think so?

"And then you'd feel strange here alone! And you wouldn't know just where to sit;
For that chair isn't strong on its legs, and 'we' never use it a bit.
We keep it to match with the sofa. But Jack says it would be like you
To flop yourself right down upon it and knock out the very last screw.

"S'pose you try? I won't tell. You're afraid to! Oh! you're afraid they would think it was mean!
Well, then, there's the album—that's pretty, if you're sure that your fingers are clean.
For sister says sometimes I daub it; but she only says that when she's cross.
There's her picture. You know it? It's like her; but she ain't as good looking, of course!

"This is me. It's the best of 'em all. No, tell me, you'd never have thought That once I was little as that? It's the only one that could be bought—
For that was the message to pa from the photograph-man where I sat—
That he wouldn't print off any more till he first got his money for that.

"What? Maybe you're tired of waiting. Why, often she's longer than this.
There's all her back hair to do up and all of her front curls to friz.
But it's nice to be sitting here talking like grown people, just you and me.
Do you think you'll be coming here often? Oh, do! But don't come like Tom Lee.

"Tom Lee. Her last beau. Why, my goodness! He used to be here day and night,
Till the folks thought he'd be her husband; and Jack says that gave him a fright.
You won't run away, then, as he did? for you're not a rich man, they say.
Pa says you are poor as a church-mouse. Now, are you? And how poor are they?

"Ain't you glad that you met me? Well, I am; for I know now your hair isn't red,
But what there is left of it's mousy, and not what that naughty Jack said.
But there! I must go. Sister's coming. But I wish I could wait, just to see
If she ran up to you and kissed you in the way that she used to kiss Lee."

A PROPOSAL FOR A HEATER.

I find that, in spite of his fatal experience, Mansfield still clings to his faith in a heater, though I am sure he was never happier than in the old days when we used to gather around the old-fashioned grate. Mary was young enough then to throw herself down upon the rug, and I don't want you to think that because her curly head cradled itself innocently against my knee once in a while that I was old enough to be her grandfather; my love for her increased with the years that went by, but I can't remember when it wasn't almost strong enough for me to die for her. But her father inherited a little money, and Mary's mother persuaded him to furnish up their snug little two-story house in Twelfth street; and what with velvet carpets upon the floors, lace finery at the windows, fine pictures upon the walls, and new furniture throughout, the dear old grate was at last put aside, and a brand-new patent heater was introduced into the front basement, which was warranted to heat all the parlor floor. When all was done, we found the rooms too expensive for every-day wear, and a sort of hankering after the bit of fire that shone through the little windows of the big black monster in the front basement, together with the familiar look of everything there, led us to make the room our home; but there was no rug for a lounging-place for Mary, who had suddenly, somehow, grown out of lounging, and, indeed, before I could fully realize the extent of such a calamity, she was engaged to be married to a young follow in our notion department by the name of MacMurray. We were all employed in the old jobbing-house down town, and MacMurray fell in love with her that day she came to the store. In fact, she was the cynosure for many a clerkly eye, and, as I saw some score of them boldly taking an inventory of her charms, I went over to Mansfield, with the blood getting hot in my veins. He was only second man in the white goods, and, as the head of the department was away, he was trolling one of his customers upon the hook of a fall in domestics. It was a big Western trader, and Mansfield had forgotten he owned such a winsome bit of property as Mary. He waved me away impatiently.

"I wouldn't leave him," said Mansfield, with a significant gesture to the Western merchant, "for a quarter of a second. I'll tell you what, Bruce," he added, "if you're not busy, I wish you'd take Mary down to MacMurray. I promised her a look at some gimcracks there. Tell him to let Mary have what she wants, and charge it to me."

Now MacMurray was the last man in the store I cared for Mary to know. I had no open objection to make, save that he was a handsome, fascinating fellow, who bore the reputation of being successful in winning the regard of women. I reluctantly led Mary down the metal-clad stairs, followed by the hungry gaze of my fellow-laborers, some of whom made pretenses to follow us, but were deterred by my unusual severity of mien and manner; and I was sorry to see that, Mary's modesty taking fire at all this open admiration, her very vexation was making her all the handsomer with every step that she took toward MacMurray. Her long lashes swept her cheeks, upon which an unwonted flush burned; and, when she raised these lashes to look upon MacMurray, I was not surprised that his cold, pale face warmed up with a sudden interest. The next thirty or forty precious minutes of Havershaw & Co. MacMurray used to most excellent advantage, even leading the ingenuous child to chat about her first luncheon in a restaurant that morning, and to tell him, in her sweet, womanly way, of how glad she would have been to have smuggled a cranberry tart home to Jamie. "Home-made crust, you know," she said to MacMurray, "is so different; it's quite impossible to make it so nice and flaky." All this while there was a minor key of ecstasy over the beads and ribbons and various gewgaws, which MacMurray took infinitely more pains to exhibit than if this sale was to determine his salary for the ensuing year. His slender white hands flitted from one bauble to another, and he managed to make that half hour one of the happiest of Mary's life. I was like a bull in a china shop, and served as an excellent contrast to this fine lady-killer, for I could feel my blood beginning to boil in my veins, and my manner was no doubt as flustered as my face. I put Mary at last in an up town stage; and, as I went through the store again, MacMurray made some frivolous excuse to call me, but soon plunged into the subject nearest his heart.

"She's simply enchanting," he said—"a lithe, vigorous, graceful bit of humanity! Then what magnificent eyes! What a sweet, tremulous mouth! How natural and naive she is! Her voice is so low and sweet, with that little musical ripple of a laugh! How prettily she told of the tart that she envied for Jamie—dear, generous girl! I had no idea that Mansfield had such a daughter."

Groaning in spirit, I turned upon my heel. No sooner had I reached my own department than I was pestered with a hundred remarks about Mansfield's beautiful daughter. For years she had lain in my heart like a pearl in its hiding-place, and suddenly she was dragged about by the many stupid mouths of Havershaw & Co. I resolved to speak to Mansfield about it that very night. But he was not at home at his usual hour, and when he did come he brought MacMurray with him. They had been detained, he said, at the store, and he had accepted MacMurray's invitation to dine, as he knew the meal would be over at home. MacMurray had a pretty little basket in his hand, which held a huge cranberry tart for Jamie, and a big box of bon-bons that Mary nibbled upon for the rest of the evening. What a fool a man is not to think of these things! Sugar-plums of that sort; bunches of violets that he got for 10 cents upon the corner; an insidious rigmarole of poetry, with a neat binding, that he picked up at a book-stand, and read with Mary close by his side the whole of the evening—they cost nothing, these little bribes to an already propitious fortune, and they go so far to further destiny. From that night forward MacMurray was one of us; and you may imagine how bitterly hard it was for me, who had for years listened to Mansfield's interminable stories, smoked his rank tobacco, breathed the hot air in his basement, lent a lenient ear to the melancholy whining of his invalid wife, tipped his boys with countless bits of silver, and even put my name to a couple of moderate liabilities in behalf of the household, all for the sake of that dear face, to have MacMurray come in and gloat upon it night after night, to see the faint color deepen in the cheek, and a tender light take birth in her eyes, and at last to have this marauder openly proclaim to me his undivided interest in that fair estate upon which I had been afraid to trespass even in thought.

But the future was comfortably vague. Mary was the corner-stone of the home masonry, and without her it would crumble to pieces. Her mother was a helpless invalid, three of the boys were of an unruly age, and little Jamie was like a baby of Mary's own.

MacMurray complained unceasingly to me, who would have been glad to shoulder the whole household for the sake of its womanly prop.

"She actually talks," said MacMurray, who had, singularly enough, chosen me for a confidant, "as if this abominable state of affairs was to go on forever. I wish it would please God to either rid her mother of her infirmities or take her where such troubles are over; as for the boys, they are a set of savages."

"Except Jamie!" I said, a little anxiously, for I knew Mary's heart was set upon the child.

"I except nobody but Mary herself," he returned. "I'm sick to death of them all. I don't suppose you'll believe it, Bruce, but I swear to you that this woman, who is my promised wife, I have never yet held in my arms, nor have her sweet lips been given to my own. She's shy and a little cold, and we never can be one minute alone."

"Mansfield is an Englishman, you know," I said, "and is prejudiced against our American customs." And as I spoke I felt a glad, warm, consoling pulsation through my whole body, and the thought that my little pearl as yet belonged to nobody, even in a caress, lent a sort of exultation to my voice.

But MacMurray went on to solicit my help in his extremity, and begged of me to further any opportunity that might present itself for this dual solitude which he naturally coveted.

Only one little week after, we sat, as usual, around the blazing heater. It was a freezing night in March; the wind roared down the big, broad stove-pipe; the flames went wantoning up to meet it: the sides of the heater sputtered and cracked, and took a sullen red tinge in unison with this fiery riot, and, in the meantime, while Mansfield went on with one of his stories, raking idly with a long plaything of a poker this demon of a heater, till the air fairly palpitated, and the temperature was only fit for a salamander.

"Can't we go up in the parlors?" said Mac. "If it's ever warm there it must be to-night; and I heard you say, Bruce, that you wanted to look over the engravings."

The sly rascal knew this was a hobby of Mansfield's, and, while we were busy with the engravings, he could coax Mary off into the front parlor. Even while my heart contracted with the thought, his proposition was hailed with enthusiasm, and we proceeded to carry it out, Mansfield at the head of the procession, with a lamp in his hand, for the hall above had not been lighted, the boys scrambling after their father, Mary and Mac following, and I bringing up the rear. The poor invalid lady was the only one left in the basement. No sooner had we reached the parlor door, and Mansfield had opened it, than a cold blast whipped out the light that he held, and suddenly we were in total darkness. I began to grope my way, as folks will in this emergency, and immediately my extended hands came in contact with other hands, so soft and warm and full of an electric magnetism that it thrilled through my every vein; and all at once my two hands had drawn those other two hands, and the body that belonged to them, close to my side. A fine, silken fluff of hair touched my chin. I was past helping then; my head bent instinctively down, and, as my lips touched hers, I inwardly vowed to take without a murmur whatever poor penalty could be meted out for this matchless felicity. The intoxicating half-second had scarcely fled when I found some powerful retribution close at hand. A muffled shriek from below was followed by more light than we wanted. A volume of smoke came rushing up the stair-way.

"Good God! my poor wife!" cried Mansfield, tumbling down this stifling crater to her relief. I caught up Jamie with one arm, and encircled Mary with the other. The boys scurried out through the front door with MacMurray, and we were soon in safety with some friends upon the block below, whither Mansfield shortly brought the insensible form of his poor lady.

She was not badly burned, but the shock was fatal, and she breathed her last before morning. Mansfield, who had never left her side, gave way over the poor rigid body, and it was found that he had sustained severe injuries in rescuing her. The doctor looked grave after the examination.

"Great Heaven!" cried Mansfield, "there's nothing serious, I hope? Mary and the children have nobody but me now, and there isn't a half-penny," he added, in a husky whisper, "between them and starvation. I spent my last dollar on that infernal heater that has burned us out of house and home, and I've hesitated to insure because everything is so shaky in that way."

He looked around upon us appealingly. Mac's face wore a sardonic solemnity, mingled with a contemptuous reproach, and he remained silent; but I stammered out something to the effect that everybody had lost confidence in insurance of late, and, lingering behind when Mac and I were about leaving for the night, I bent over Mansfield, and told him to give all his energies to getting well, that while I had a dollar it should be shared with him and Mary and the children.

"God bless you, Bruce!" said the suffering man—"God in heaven bless you!" Two big tears rolled down his fevered cheeks, and I caught just one sweet, fervid glance from Mary's tear-dimmed and hollow eyes.

"Here's a nice look-out," began Mac, as we walked along; "a hopeful future for me, isn't it?"

"Why, you've got your wish about her poor mother," I said, rather savagely, "and Mansfield is likely to soon follow his wife. You must be patient, you know."

"I suppose," he said, inquiringly, "the relatives, in that case, would come forward and take the boys?"

"What relatives?" I replied. "I never heard of any."

"Why, good heavens! Bruce," said the wretched lover, "a man can't be expected to marry all those boys with Mary?"

"It seems hard," I rejoined. "You might put them in an orphan asylum."

MacMurray began actually to muse over this idea, and declared he would be willing to give something toward their support by a charitable institution of this sort.

Whether he made known this liberality of intention to Mary, or that she was prompted by some other feeling, there came a note to MacMurray shortly after, releasing him from his engagement, and a declaration on Mary's part that her future was indissolubly linked with her father and the boys, and that she could not reasonably expect nor had she any inclination to marry under these circumstances.

It was a noble letter, and stirred MacMurray's passion to the dregs. I trembled when I saw him run his hands through his hair distractedly, and heard him declare that he'd do anything rather than give her up.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Bruce," he said; "I'll offer to take Jamie—confound the brat! I always hated him; he has a way of getting under everybody's feet that I'll cure when I have the charge of him; but I'll take the little cub for the sake of getting Mary. A man will do most anything for a woman that he loves, Bruce. But that's the extent of my offer—that's all I'm willing to do."

I told him it was nobly generous on his part, but it seemed that Mary disagreed with me. She not only refused his offer, but declined to have any further negotiation in the matter.

"And now," said Mansfield, when I went up to see him that night, "her whole future is blasted because of this Quixotic idea of devotion to me and the children." Mansfield was bolstered up in bed, Jamie was asleep in a crib near by that I had sent up for the little fellow's convenience two or three days before, and Mary was busily sewing. They had only saved the garments they wore, and her dear face already had that care-worn look that lacerates the heart loyal enough to share every pang. "It cuts me to the soul," continued Mansfield, "to see Mary deliberately put away, for the sake of me and the children, the happiness, perhaps, of a life-time."

"The misery, you mean, papa," said Mary. "I am only too thankful to have escaped marrying such a selfish, mean, miserable wretch."

Her eyes shone so, and her whole face was so glorified with intensity of feeling, that I could scarce keep from crying out at her beauty.

"Tut, tut, Mary," said Mansfield, "you can't reasonably blame a man for not wanting to saddle himself with a hulk like me, and a horde of half-grown boys. You can't blame MacMurray. I'm a miserable wreck, and the boys are none of them out of the way. You couldn't expect, Bruce, a rational man, however he might love a woman, to marry her under these circumstances."

"Not a rational man, perhaps," I said, and my blood was all in a glow; the words slipped to my tongue without any volition of my own—"not a rational man, perhaps; but suppose a madman should offer to do such a thing—and he must be a madman to hope for the felicity—suppose I was fool enough to think that Mary would marry me under any circumstances; suppose that I had worshiped her for years, and that she was dearer than ever to me now in her devotion to you and the boys; and suppose that, whether she marries me or not, she is but the one woman in the whole world for me."

"God bless my soul!" cried Mansfield, leaning forward and clasping his hands together; "can this be possible? Mary, Mary, don't speak just now, child. Take time to consider this noble proposal of our friend, to whom I am under unlimited obligations—a man in a thousand, Mary; the tip of his finger-nail worth the whole miserable body of such a reptile as MacMurray. Take time, Mary—take a week."

"Take a year," I implored; and as I went over to her, and got down on my knees beside her low chair, I trembled like a man upon the scaffold. The needle shook in her fingers; the muslin fluttered out of her hands upon the floor. "Mary, Mary," I begged, like the coward that I was, "don't take me from the sweet uncertainty; let me wait an eternity. In the meantime, I'll take Jamie," I added, for he was awake and whimpering. Poor Mansfield fell back upon his pillow, and, lifting the child to my heart, I sat down by the bedside. Suddenly two soft arms stole around my neck outside of Jamie's. Mary's warm cheek was pressed to mine.

"Take us all," she whispered—"every one of us, please." And I did, God helping me.

Mansfield began miraculously to mend from that moment, and took the head of his department in less than a year. One of the boys is in the counting-room already, and another one will be among the goods as soon as he can leave school. Mary and I will never have a child dearer to us than little Jamie. Everything prospers with us, and the only thing that troubles us just now is how to properly heat the house we are building up in Westchester county. What I wanted to say was, that if anybody knows of a heater that will do the business thoroughly without exploding, I'd like to communicate with him.—Harper's Magazine for April.

USEFUL INFORMATION.

TO DESTROY SLUGS.—For the destruction of slugs on fruit trees, this simple and readily-administered remedy is recommended: Select a quiet morning, when the leaves are laden with dew, to throw up among the branches fine, dry coal ashes. By this means both sides of the leaves become coated with the ashes, and the slugs are killed or driven off.

GUN-COTTON.—The best and simplest process for making gun-cotton is as follows: Saturate some cotton wool in a solution of equal volumes of the strongest oil of vitriol and nitric acid for a few minutes, then express the superabundant liquid out of the cotton, and wash it in cold water until all taste of acidity has gone. Lastly, dry it a gentle heat, say about 120 or 130 deg.

SODA FOR WASHING.—The very common use of soda in washing linen causes injury to the tissue, and imparts to it a yellow color. In Germany and Belgium the following mixture is now extensively and beneficially used. Two pounds of soap are dissolved in about five gallons of water as hot as the hand can bear it; then next is added to this fluid three large table-spoonfuls of liquid ammonia and one spoonful of best oil of turpentine. These fluids are incorporated rapidly by means of beating them together with a small birch broom. The linen is then soaked in this liquid for three hours, care being taken to cover the washing-tub by a closely-fitting wooden cover. By this means the linen is thoroughly cleansed, saving much rubbing, time, and fuel.

INFANT MORTALITY.—It is stated that 15 per cent. of all the children born die the first year. This results in summer, largely, from improper food. It cannot be made too widely known that the addition of a teaspoonful of common lime-water, to be had at the druggist's for a mere trifle, to each bottle of milk adapts cow's milk to the human constitution, and renders it perfectly digestible to either adult invalids or sucking infants. For the latter the milk should be diluted with tepid water, and slightly sweetened with moist, not loaf, sugar. Besides the effect on the digestion, it may be assumed that the lime goes to the formation of the bones; hence children thus fed have none of that softness in their bones so painfully displayed in what is termed "rickets."

UTILIZE THE WIND.—As we cannot all have what we want in the way of music, perhaps the following information how to make the most of what we all can get may be acceptable: Double, twist and wax strong silk thread; tie a knot on each end; make two little wedges of soft wood, with the little end split up a quarter of an inch, and put one on each end of the thread, the knot keeping it from slipping through. Now stretch it as tightly as possible between the sashes of a window where the wind will play upon it; fasten firmly with the wedges, and your rooms will be filled with music so soft and sweet, so full of changeful harmony, you will almost fancy it the music of angel voices, and listening to it will beguile many an hour of pain and weariness. By making the string coarser or finer different tones will be produced, but all full of rest and sweetness.

Spain Has Wounds.

Emilio Castelar, in a late speech to the Spanish Cortez, urged an increase of the army and a participation in the present European complications. He said that Spain had two wounds, one being at Gibralter and the other on the Tagus. Gibralter, he insisted, should, as a part of Spain, belong to it. He also said that the German and Latin races would ultimately fuse, an intimation probably of his expectation of future aid from Bismarck in realizing Spanish autonomy.

Get Married.

Although bachelors have (Crabb Robinson, for example, who lived to be 94) often attained a great age, statistics go to prove conclusively that, so far as men between 25 and 30 are concerned, the married state is more conducive to longevity. In France the mortality per 1,000 is 6.2 in married men between 25 and 30, and 10.2 in bachelors of the same age. Belgium and Holland show similar statistics.

COTTON-SEED OIL manufacture is becoming a marked industry in the South. There are now seven large mills in New Orleans, and others at Baton Rouge, Shreveport, Natchez, Vicksburg, Dallas, Memphis, Nashville, and even in St. Louis and Chicago. A ton of seed produces twenty gallons of oil, worth $3.50, while the refuse cake, worth $20 per ton, is valuable as feed for domestic animals and for fertilizing land.

A YOUNG lady in one of our schools took "Water" as a theme for her composition, and filled sixteen pages with what she knew about it. And yet you might walk into almost any crowd around a dog fight, and pick out men by their noses, who could exhaust their information on the subject without using over sixteen words.—Breakfast Table.

NEW AND CURIOUS INVENTIONS.

AN important invention is announced to have been made by Joseph Albert, the Munich photographer. By combining the ordinary photographic process with that pertaining to a peculiar printing press of his own invention, he is said to have produced images of objects with the finest shades of their natural color.

A NEW sewing-machine motor, cheap and simple, consists of a tubular boiler eighteen inches high, incased in cabinet work, through which steam is engendered by a small parlor lamp being placed underneath it. The apparatus which connects it with the sewing-machine is very simple, and consists of only three pieces. It takes only a few minutes to get up steam, and the speed is regulated by a little spring. The invention is compact, neat and clean, a great saver of health and strength, and in appearance resembles a little parlor stove incased in cabinet work.

A GERMAN has recently patented an apparatus designed to lessen the strain upon a horse, particularly at starting, of a loaded vehicle. The traces are fastened to an iron rod running through the center of a cylinder containing several ring of gutta-percha. When the horse exerts himself the strain first comes upon and compresses these rings, saving his shoulders. The German War Department, having made experiments, and found that the saving of force, not alone at starting but during traction, was at least a third, has resolved to employ the attachment in its artillery and military trains.

A FRENCH paper reports favorably on some experiments to substitute hardened glass for type metal. It is stated that the type-founders' molds and machinery can in general be used without further change. The new types, made of glass, preserve their cleanliness almost indefinitely; they are said to wear better than metal, and they can be cast with a sharpness of line that will print more distinctly than is possible with the old type. There will be also the advantage of an absence of half-defaced letters, since it is a peculiarity of the hardened glass that as soon as it is broken at all it crumbles altogether. But, as transparency will not be required in glass used for this purpose, it is believed that a toughness, extraordinary even for the hardened glass, can be secured.

AN Iowa deaf mute has invented a novel fire-escape. It is a cap or turban to be placed on the head and fastened securely under the chin. It contains enough material to form a small balloon, and, when inflated, looks like a balloon. It is so arranged that, when placed on the head in its collapsed state, the air can enter it from underneath and expand it. In the case of danger, it is adjusted firmly on the head, and the wearer then jumps boldly from the window of the burning building; the air instantly rushes into the turban, swells it into a balloon, and, buoyed by it, the wearer comes down so gently as to strike the ground with little force. The inventor claims that with it he can jump safely from a fourth-story window; but, to make certain of it, and to impart confidence to the jumper, there is a pair of huge padded shoes to be fastened on the feet so as to blunt the concussion.

A CURIOUSLY simple and ingenious leveling instrument has been invented by a Dresden engineer. Two glass tubes, standing upright on feet and open above and below are connected at the bottom with an India-rubber tube of any desired length. If water, therefore, is poured into one of these tubes, it will naturally rise to the same height in the other, however even may be the surface on which they stand. When the ground is to be levelled, the tubes are simply set up at convenient distances and stakes put in the ground so as to reach the height of the water level; the more uneven the ground is the higher must the tubes be, though the inconvenience arising from this may be alleviated in a measure by the use of temporary supports. The peculiar advantage of this instrument is that leveling may be performed with it even around corners.

A Martyr to Perpetual Motion.

The Journal of Commerce, apropos of an inquiry made by a correspondent, relates a curious story for truth of which which it vouches. The correspondent had asked whether any government had ever offered a reward to the successful discoverer of practical perpetual motion; and whether the idea of perpetual motion is not contrary to natural laws? Our venerable contemporary replies that no such offer has been made; but that the idea of perpetual motion is in itself quite in accordance with natural laws, the planetary world furnishing a visible illustration of it. It then says that thirty years ago a machine, moved only by gravitation, was exhibited in his office and seen by many. It ran in connection with a pendulum that regulated its motion, which was very slow but incessant. The editor had it under lock and key, and still it moved. It was then exhibited at a fair in New Jersey, and there—

"A professor from Princeton College and one or two other very learned and benevolent persons were indignant that the people should be so imposed upon, and, making the necessary affidavit, had the inventor, then an old man nearly fourscore, arrested for swindling, as he had taken money at the door from a few visitors. The man, the machine and the avengers of the law were brought into the court. Upon their representation that the cylinder could not revolve unless there was a spring concealed in it, an ax was brought, and, in spite of the tremulous remonstrances of the inventor, it was split into a dozen pieces. As in a former celebrated trial (described in John viii., 10), the accusers withdrew in silence, self-convicted. There was no spring in it; it had gone around of itself, but it was ruined, and so was the owner!"

But no practical good could have come from the invention, as it barely overcame its own friction and could furnish no useful power.—New York Graphic.

A HIDEOUS fashion has lately sprung up in London; haberdashers are now selling shirts that are perfectly black, with white spots here and there. The new Oxford blue-bird's-eye one are bad enough, but these are actually atrocious.

WHAT WAS HIS CREED?

He left a load of anthracite
In front of a poor widow's door,
When the deep snow, frozen and white,
Wrapped street and square, mountain and moor.
That was his deed;
He did it well;
"What was his creed?"
I cannot tell.

Blest "in his basket and his store,"
In sitting down and rising up;
When more he got, he gave the more,
Withholding not the crust and cup.
He took the lead
In each good task;
"What was his creed?"
I did not ask.

His charity was like the snow,
Soft, white and silken in its fall;
Not like the noisy winds that blow
From shivering trees the leaves; a pall
For flower and weed,
Dropping below.
"What was his creed?"
The poor may know.

He had great faith in loaves of bread
For hungry people, young and old;
And hope inspired, kind words he said
To him he sheltered from the cold.
For he must feed
As well as pray.
"What was his creed?"
I cannot say.

In words he did not put his trust;
In faith his words he never writ;
He loved to share his cup and crust
With all mankind who needed it;
In time of need
A friend was he.
"What was his creed?"
He told not me.

He put his trust in Heaven, and
Worked ever on with hand and head;
And what he gave in charity
Sweetened his sleep and daily bread.
Let us take heed,
For life is brief!
"What was his creed?"
"What his belief?"

"COME, don't be timid," said a couple of foolish snobs to two mechanics; "sit down and make yourselves our equals." "We'd have to blow our brains out to do that," was the reply.

SCRATCH MY BACK.

The sequel to that beautiful song by Eugene Field, "Grease the Griddle, Birdie, Darling," is just out. We have only room for one stanza:

Scratch my back, oh brown-eyed Mabel,
Throw the buckwheat flour away;
Scratch as long as you are able;
Harder; stronger; that's the way.
Somewhat higher; little lower;
Closer to the shoulder-blade;
Dig!!! Good heavens, go it slower!
Murder! Thunder! Come, that's played.

A LITTLE 6-year-old Whitehall boy was watching the sunbeams as they shot through a window and danced diagonally across the room. "Mamma," said he, what are those streaks?" "Those, my son," she replied, "are sunbeams from heaven." "O, I know what they are for, mamma," said the little fellow, who had been sliding down beams in the barn-loft, they are what God slides the babies down on when he sends them to folks."

MANY of the coolies in California are not real Chinamen. They hail from the large southern province of Kwang-tung, of which the city of Kwang-tung, or Canton, is the capital. They scorn the name of Chinamen, and we are assured that they are, intellectually, morally and physically, inferior to the genuine Chinese. Though now included as one of the eighteen provinces of China proper, Kwang-tung was formerly an independent kingdom.

THE PRESIDENTIAL POLICY.

Speech of Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, in the United States Senate—The Civil Service and Southern Policy of the Administration Denounced.

[Associated Press Report.]

During the past year we have seen here and everywhere throughout the country small but active squads of political inquisitors busy with the work of assisting the Republican party in gathering into hallowed garners all those who avow themselves supporters of the President's policy, and pouring unquenchable fire upon all the rest. Poles have been set up at all cross-roads; flags inscribed with the President's policy have been suspended from them, and self-appointed inquisitors have lurked in convenient jungles to detect who did and who did not uncover under the flag. It has happened to me to be advertised quite beyond the pale of my own modest seeking as an opponent of the President's policy. To the doctors of the Inquisition it seems no longer a question of moment whether one be a Republican or a Democrat. The absorbing question is, "Does he support the President's policy or does he not?" Sir, I have no wish to conceal any opinion of mine which the public is interested to know. Nevertheless, I have not hitherto answered to this accusation. I did not like to plead guilty, for I hoped I was innocent, and I did not like to plead not guilty, for I feared I might be guilty. I had withheld no honest effort to elect Mr. Hayes. It must of necessity pain me to be found not in accord with his views, and it must pain me still more to find he was not in accord with mine. My uncertainty arose not from the fact that I was doubtful of my own policy, but because I was not sure I understood his. My own policy is a very simple one, and may be briefly stated: Toward the States of the South my policy has been identical with the policy I have held toward the States of the North. I demand only that every legally-qualified elector in every State, South or North, Democrat or Republican, black or white, shall be permitted, undisturbed by force and unawed by fear, to vote at all elections and at the place prescribed by law, and nowhere else, just once, and no more than once; that every vote so cast shall be honestly counted, and that every person chosen by such votes to any office shall be freely inducted into it. That is my Southern policy, and the whole of it. The very head and front of my offending against the South hath this extent, no more. Concerning the civil service, my policy is not a bit more complicated. I would have that service administered by the best men attainable, and I believe a Republican President should select Republicans for all those places where the harmony and vigor of the administration require its policy to be represented. I believe, as the President declared in his inaugural address, that, once commissioned, the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remains untarnished and the performance of his duty satisfactory. Some things have happened since the President's inauguration not at all in harmony with the policies I have indicated. He has selected for his Cabinet one who was not a Republican, but a Democrat. Still, the individual was so well known to me, and I believed so implicitly in the moderation of his opinions, in the justness of his sentiments, and the integrity of his character, that if I could not have advised his selection I could not and did not complain of it. He had selected one other who, although not a Democrat, was yet not a Republican, who was equally at home with all parties and in all places. By turns he has been everywhere and has espoused and deserted every party. He spoke like an oracle, and his facile speech could be fitted to the vicissitudes of parties as readily as a double-faced satin can be turned to hide the accidents of society. His critiques upon his political associates gave him popularity with his political opponents, and he resembled prophets in never being without honor except where he happened to reside. Inconstant in everything else, he has been constant to his trade, that of politics. He entered upon that before he was of age, and he has pursued it since without variableness or shadow of turning. His first enterprise was to revolutionize the Government under which he was born. That failed, and he fled. He was for a short time a lawyer in Wisconsin, but without clients. He was a Minister at Madrid, but did not reconstruct the diplomacy of the world. He was a Major General, but perverse history refused to record his victories. He was transplanted into Missouri, and the generous Republicans of that State bore him into this Senate. That elevation did not prove fatal to him, but his party died—died not in spite of him, but because of him, and under the blows which he inflicted. Having outraged one party and not yet received absolution from the other, he denounced both as machines. Having failed as a dealer in legitimate politics, he turned his attention to the contraband article. In 1872 he helped to lead Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown to the Baltimore market, and taught the Democracy of that year that they should call nothing common or unclean if it promised to beat Grant. For six years he traduced the Republican party, probably through more languages than any other man living. Upon that illustrious Captain who from the 4th of July, 1863, to the 4th of March, 1877, led the Republican party, who always led his party to victory and always lifted his country to renown, at whose approach but recently the Eastern continent stood up and uncovered, he threw more mud than any dredge not worked by steam ever threw in the same time.

After reviewing still further Secretary Schurz's career, Mr. Howe took up the Packard case and the Louisiana election, and said: When the President was inaugurated Stephen B. Packard was Governor of Louisiana. Within sixty days after that inauguration he ceased to be Governor. When he disappeared the will of Louisiana was subverted and trampled upon. Such an event is always a matter of sincere regret to all who respect republican institutions. But very few such events would be required to render the republican institutions that by-word and that hissing on this continent which for centuries they have been on the other.

He then reviewed at length the work of the Louisiana Commission in a sarcastic tone, and said: If it was their mission to depose an actual Governor, they did not consume time enough. Under the constitution of Louisiana four years are required for that purpose. I could not, therefore, see in all that transpired in Louisiana the development of a new policy for the Republican party or the abandonment of an old policy. I saw only the acquiescence in what seemed to be a disagreeable necessity. But I was not prepared to see the act advertised as one of the President's choice, which every Republican as well as every Democrat was bound to approve. It was, therefore, a matter of surprise, and profound regret also, that I heard the President declare in his late annual message that "the discontinuance of the use of the army for the purpose of upholding local Governments in two States of the Union was no less a constitutional duty and requirement, under the circumstances existing at the time, than it was a much-needed measure for the restoration of local self-government and the promotion of national harmony." If that be a correct definition of the President's Southern policy, I am no longer in doubt as to whether I approve it or not. It is impossible that I should approve it now or ever. It is a clear abandonment of one of the plainest and most solemn duties charged upon the President by the constitution and laws of the United States.

When the President abandoned the Government of Louisiana to domestic violence, he surrendered the constitutional rights of a single State. But, when he advertised he would never interfere where the result of an election is disputed, he surrendered a national prerogative vital to our institutions. He abjured a constitutional duty essential to every State. He proclaimed a license to insurrection. He notified the minority in every State, when defeated by ballot to appeal to the bayonet, and he proclaimed in advance that the nation shall be neutral in the conflict. If Packard was not elected Governor of Louisiana, nothing can be more certain than that Hayes was not elected President of the United States. Without the electoral vote of Louisiana the whole world knows Hayes had not the votes in the Electoral College necessary to constitute an election. If Louisiana did not vote for Packard the whole world knows that Louisiana did not vote for Hayes. Packard received nearly 2,000 votes more than some of the Hayes electors. Under the constitution the President had but one plain duty to discharge, that was to ascertain whether the constituted tribunals of Louisiana had declared Packard to be Governor; if so, then to defend his authority to the extent of his ability when legally required so to do. If they had not so declared, then it was equally his [illegible] duty to have withheld all support of Packard's pretenses, but to have given all required support to the claim of Packard's rival. If it was his duty to have done that, not merely on the 10th of April, but to have done it on the 4th of March immediately upon his assuming the office of President, and, if he found it his constitutional duty to require Packard to surrender his office, he should have also recognized the duty of surrendering his own. I do not mean to intimate a doubt that President Hayes was entitled to the vote of Louisiana. It is my settled belief that Louisiana declared for him; but all I certainly know is, that if Packard was not elected President Hayes was not. If the latter is not a usurper, Nicholls is. I can see no possible escape from the conclusion either that the President has usurped his own office or that he has aided Gov. Nicholls to usurp his.

After a long discussion of the Louisiana case and the Southern question generally, Mr. Howe continued: Mr. President, let no man say I do injustice to the purposes of the President. I am not discussing his purposes but his acts. I understand he still avows himself to be a Republican, and a friend of equal citizenship. It is not for me to dispute him. But it is for me to say he has offended both Republicanism and free citizenship as Samuel J. Tilden never would have offended them. Perhaps had Mr. Tilden been made President events would have transpired in South Carolina and Louisiana as they have transpired. Mr. Hampton would have been Governor in the former State and Mr. Nicholls in the latter. So far the offense would have been precisely the same. But that would have been an offense not against Republicanism, but against Republicans in those States. Mr. Tilden would have decided, perhaps, that Hampton and Nicholls were chosen Governors of those States, and that if so they ought to be recognized, and even if not so, since he had jurisdiction of the question, would have acquiesced in his decision. But President Hayes never made such a decision, and does not to make it to-day. Mr. Tilden would have excluded Packard and Chamberlain, because he decided against their election. President Hayes excluded them because their election was disputed. The former would have given an erroneous judgment, and would then have seen it executed. President Hayes has abandoned the judgment-seat to the rifle-clubs in those States; left them to make the decision which the constitution and courts commanded him to make, and, infinitely worse than that, has permitted proclamations to be made in his name that, when rifle-clubs choose to take the field in behalf of a ticket, it is not necessary for them to elect their ticket, but only to dispute the election of the other. And, after all this prolonged effort at pacification, this outpouring of concessions and good-will, the Angel of Peace still refuses to descend upon us. Day after day the President sends the dove out over the angry floods, and night after night the bird returns weary and leafless. In these very days that the Government which rules Louisiana, which was born of Presidential grace, and not of popular choice, has signalized its ingratitude by an act not less insulting to the President than atrocious in itself. It has dared to accuse, try and convict a member of the State Board of Canvassers of the crime of forging the election returns of Vernon parish of 1876. Remember, sir, I do not complain because Anderson was tried for a political offense. If he is guilty of the offense charged, I have not a syllable to urge in his defense. The point I make against the Government of Louisiana is, that it prosecuted not in the name of public justice, but of partisan malice; that it prosecuted a man guiltless of the offense alleged against him, and known to be guiltless. Anderson is the victim, not of a mistake, but of malice; not of personal, but of partisan, malice. He was prosecuted by that same fell spirit of party spite which prompted Georgia forty years ago to offer $5,000 for the privilege of prosecuting Garrison, and which twenty years ago made South Carolina clap her hands at the whipping of Sumner. Anderson stands convicted in a court commissioned by Gov. Nicholls, who in turn stands practically properly commissioned by President Hayes. He reviewed the action of the Returning Board at length, ridiculed the idea that Anderson forged the returns, and said Whittaker, by the grace of Andrew Johnson, was formerly Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New Orleans; that as such he was a defaulter to the Government in the sum of more than half a million dollars when he sent Anderson to prison; that Whittaker had been under indictment for that heavy embezzlement, but that, on the 19th of April last, just as Nicholls took the office which Packard ought to have had, the indictment against Whittaker was nolle prossed, and he was permitted to send Anderson to the penitentiary where he ought to be himself.

Mr. Howe spoke in the following tone of civil-service reform: An eminent statesman from Kentucky recently made a pilgrimage to Boston in the interest of civil-service reform. There, in sight of that great monument which marks the spot where immaculate valor died for immortal truth, he dared to say, "The cause of reform in the hands of brave men will not be put down or defeated by the scoffs and derision of its enemies." I should like to ask this apostle to the Bostonians who those enemies of reform are against whose derision he has to incite brave men. In spite of all the vociferous prate about a reform of the civil service, no man has formulated it, no man has defined it. I do not know what they mean by it. The President did issue an order forbidding those employed in the civil service from acting on political committees or political conventions. Is that what is meant by reform of the civil service? If so, the President has already abandoned it, or I am misinformed, or, if he still believes that means reform, he is the only man in the United States who does believe it. This is not reform. That is tyranny which no predecessor of his ever attempted, and no successor will venture to imitate. Once it was industriously advertised that public officers should not be removed during their official terms without cause. As already remarked, I believe in that rule. I have myself adhered to it, but the President has flagrantly violated it. That surely cannot be what is meant by the reform of the civil service. Latterly it has been suggested that the great reform consisted in making appointments to office regardless of the advice of Senators and Representatives from States, and so smashing the machine. In some conspicuous cases the very reverse has been done. What rule there is upon this or on any point touching appointments it is not given to finite intelligence to know. But I have four remarks to make upon this last suggestion.

1. All the Presidents have been, all the Presidents must be, and President Hayes is, guided by some advice, and that advice does come and will come from one or the other of three sources: Either it will be supplied by those whom the several States have selected for their representatives, or by those who have not been, but aspire to be, chosen as representatives, or it will come from office-brokers who have no political aspirations, but do a chiefly cash business.

2. When any President will absolutely relieve representatives from all responsibility for that multitude who want office and do not get it, he will shield them from that service which most impairs usefulness and imperils the continuance of their employment.

3. When any President will take upon himself the sole responsibility for all of whom he does and all of whom he does not appoint, he will not need to pledge himself against a second term. The best man ever born could not achieve a second term under such a load.

4. Whether the people will have an improved civil service when its agents are selected upon the advice of those not in Congress depends upon whether the people send their best men to Congress or keep them at home.

The Conscience Fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury has received from Cincinnati three $1,000 coupon bonds, accompanied by a memorandum that the amount should be credited to the treasury of the United States. The bonds have been so thoroughly canceled that their serial numbers cannot be ascertained. The amount was credited to the conscience fund.

HEALTH AND DISEASE.

To Cure Chilblains.—To one ounce of [illegible] add one grain of morphine; good also for burns.

Dyspepsia.—A simple and effectual remedy for dyspepsia is to abstain from drinking immediately before and during meals, and for an hour afterwards. Also, use no milk in either tea or coffee.

Cure for Milk-Crust.—Fresh mutton tallow melted and applied very thick, once or twice a day; wash once a week or oftener with white Castile soap; apply fresh tallow after washing; it will allay the burning and itching; no medicine is needed.

Sulphur Mixture for the Blood.—Five teaspoonfuls powdered sulphur to one of cream tartar; mix with molasses; take a teaspoonful three successive mornings, then omit three, and so on until it has been taken nine times. Excellent in the spring.—Western Rural.

Bleeding at the Nose.—The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason in one of his lectures, is the vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child, a wad of paper should be placed in its mouth, and the child should be instructed to chew it hard. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of the blood. This remedy is so very simple that many will feel inclined to laugh at it, but it has never been known to fail in a single instance, even in very severe cases.—Scientific American.

Palpitation of the Heart.—Dr. Lardies, in l' Union Medicale, describes a method by which palpitation of the heart not due to organic lesions may be arrested at once. The patient is directed to bend the body head down, with the arms hanging so as momentarily to cause congestion of the upper part of the body. In all cases of nervous or anæmic palpitations the heart quickly resumes its normal functions. If respiration is arrested for a few seconds while the patient is in the above position, the relief is still more speedy.

Unhealthy Gums.—Unhealthy gums are very common. A lotion made from the following recipe will be found valuable in restoring them to a healthy condition: Carbolic acid, twenty drops; spirits of wine, two drams; distilled water, six ounces. Use first a soft toothbrush with water, after which pour on a second toothbrush, slightly damped, a little of the above lotion. After using this for a short time the gums become less tender, and the impurity of the breath, which is commonly caused by bad teeth, will be removed.—New York Times.

Rheumatism.—This disease is a standing "conundrum" to medical men, but Dr. Julius Pollock thinks that he has at least cleared the subject of some confusion that surrounded it. He says the term rheumatism is applied to several different diseases which are essentially distinct, although they have certain features in common. The two chief forms are articular and muscular rheumatism. The former is a disease of early adult life, more or less acute in character, with a tendency to get well in about six weeks. Articular rheumatism, when at all severe, is called rheumatic fever. It attacks the synovial membranes and also the similar serous membranes, especially of the heart. There is a distinct predisposition to this disease in certain persons, which is sometimes inherited. The immediate exciting cause is exposure to cold or "taking a chill." It never attacks the muscles. Muscular rheumatism is a disease of middle and advanced life, is commonly chronic, and will continue indefinitely if not treated. It attacks, not the muscles themselves, but the tendons and other parts of the muscle which have a similar anatomical structure. Muscular rheumatism does not attack the heart, and is rarely fatal. —Journal of Chemistry.

Take Care of the Horses.

The Illinois Humane Society, through an appeal issued by their committee, make the following suggestions, which owners of horses will serve their own interests by attending to:

1. Shoes.—If horses are sharp shod in icy weather they will pull larger loads to greater advantage; it is poor economy to neglect the proper shoeing of horses, which may thus be seriously injured.

2. Blankets, etc.—Horses should be protected by blankets or water-proof covers from rain or snow, while standing. The cost of a blanket is very small, and its use would repay the outlay many times.

Any woolen or other protection placed under the pad or saddle, and extending back over the hips, will be found very useful, as protecting a weak part of the animal.

3. Clipping.—The clipping of horses at this season is considered to be, at least, imprudent, and by this society inhumane; owners are respectfully urged to allow the animals to retain the covering which nature has provided.

4. Check Reins.—Work horses, if at all, should be checked very low; they can thus pull to greater advantage, protect their eyes from rain or snow, and are less liable to stumble or injure themselves. It will be noticed that the city railway companies have largely abandoned the use of check reins.

5. Bits.—It is prudent to warm with the hands, or otherwise, bits before placing them in the horses' mouths.

That Phonograph.

The sudden unpopularity of the phonograph in Rome is all owing to Bubbins. He bought the first phonograph ever owned in this city, and it came by express Friday evening. He took it under his arm, and stopped in at several places to discuss politics and things, and when he got home and attempted to exhibit the phonograph to his wife, that depraved instrument remarked in several distinct tones: "Set 'em up for the boys, barkeeper. Whoop, hooray! Yer's luck. Fill the flowing bowl. Who's afraid of the old woman." No more phonographs in Rome.—Rome Sentinel.

A man was scared to death in Berryville, Mo. He was passing a graveyard at midnight, when two men sprung from behind a monument and shouted at him. He ran home and went to bed, but was so nervous that he could not sleep, and before morning he died in convulsions.

Stingy Men.

I despise a stingy man. I don't see how it is possible for a man to die worth fifty millions of dollars, or ten millions of dollars, in a city full of want, when he meets almost every day the withered hand of beggary and the white lips of famine. How a man can withstand all that, and hold in the clutch of his hand twenty or thirty millions of dollars, is past my comprehension. I do not see how he can do it. I should not think he could do it any more than he could keep a pile of lumber when hundreds and thousands were drowning in the sea. I should not think he could do it. Do you know I have known men who would trust their wives with their hearts and their honor, but not with their pocket-books—not with a dollar. When I see a man of that kind I always think he knows which of these articles is the most valuable. Think of making your wife a beggar! Think of her having to ask you every day for a dollar or for two dollars, or for fifty cents! "What did you do with that dollar I gave you last week?" Think of having a wife that is afraid of you! What kind of children do you expect to have with a beggar and a coward for their mother? Oh, I tell you, if you have got but a dollar in the world, and you have got to spend it, spend it like a king; spend it as though it were a dry leaf, and you the owner of unbounded forests! That's the way to spend it. I had rather be a beggar and spend my last dollar like a king, than be a king and spend my money like a beggar. If it's got to go, let it go! Get the best you can for your family—try to look as well as you can yourself. When you used to go courting how nice you looked! Ah, your eye was bright, your step was light, and you just put on the very best look you could. Do you know that it is insufferable egotism in you to suppose that a woman is going to love you always looking as bad as you can! Think of it! Any woman on earth will be true to you forever when you do your level best.—R. G. Ingersoll.

Remarkable Success.

The success of the leading literary paper of the West, The Chicago Ledger, is truly remarkable. Since its introduction to the reading public, six years ago, The Ledger has steadily advanced in favor, and is now acknowledged second to no paper of the kind in the country. Its circulation is national, and has been obtained through the efforts of its publishers to produce a paper of high moral character, and at the same time sell it at a price consistent with the present hard times. That they have succeeded, and well, too, the thousands of readers of The Ledger scattered from Maine to Texas and from Oregon to Florida will bear testimony. The Chicago Ledger is a large forty-eight column weekly paper, which contains stories both complete and continued, in each number, written by the best authors of the day, and a great variety of information interesting to every one. The subscription price of The Ledger is only $1.50 per year, postage paid, and it is equal in every particular to other papers of the same character which sell for $3 a year. Three copies of this valuable paper will be sent to any one who sends 10 cents and their address to The Ledger, Chicago, Ill.

Signs.

People who still adhere to the look-at-your-tongue-and-feel-of-your-pulse doctor sometimes express not a little curiosity in regard to Dr. R. V. Pierce's original method of distinguishing all forms of chronic disease without personal consultation. Some even suppose that he accomplishes this through clairvoyance, or some other species of professional jugglery. All this is utterly false. He claims to determine disease by the rational methods of science only. Says Comley, in his Biographical Encyclopedia of New York State, speaking of this distinguished physician: "He perceived that in each of the natural sciences the investigator proceeds according to a system of signs. The geologist in his cabinet accurately determines and describes the cleft of rock, which he has never seen, from the minute specimen on his table. And the chemist in his laboratory notes the constituents of the sun with the same precision that he analyzes a crystal of rock salt. The analogous system developed by Dr. Pierce in Medical Science is worthy of his genius, and has made his name justly celebrated." For a full explanation of this ingenious system of diagnosis, see the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, sent, post-paid, to any address on receipt of one dollar and fifty cents. CO-OPERATIVE NEWSPAPERS.

Between two and three thousand newspapers in the United States are printed upon what is known as the Co-operative plan. Nearly 40 per cent. of all the weeklies adopt this method. It makes a better paper at a lower cost, and is specially suited for the requirements of papers in small towns and villages. The system maintains a competition with the home-printed country journals to such an extent that none but those firmly established and backed up by accumulations of former prosperity are able to stand beside it, and in the matter of advertising it offers circulation at a price with which the great weeklies are unable to compete. The matter has become of vital importance, and the New York Times, a journal having a great name, has commenced upon it a vigorous crusade. In its issues of March 4th, 11th and 19th there appeared long libelous articles. Every statement contained in them reflecting discredit upon the Co-operative system is untrue. The undersigned have furnished the Times with careful answers, showing wherein the articles published are untrue, and the Times has neglected and refused to give them to the public. Despairing of justice, we sought to use the advertising columns of the Times, and these also have been closed to us. We have, therefore, no other resource than to appeal to the public. Our answers to the charges of the Times are complete, and cannot be refuted. They will be mailed to any applicant. The only reason for the attack which we know of is to be found in the fact that we have inaugurated a system of advertising which gives an advertiser four times as much circulation for a dollar as is afforded by the columns of the Times. Circulars, with full particulars, free by mail.

CAUTION!

Hypophosphites-Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites.

As this preparation is entirely different in its combination and effects from all other remedies called Hypophosphites, the public are cautioned that the genuine has the name of Fellows & Co. blown on the bottle. The signature of the inventor, James I. Fellows, is written with red ink across each label, and on the yellow wrapper in water-mark, which is seen by holding the paper before the light.

Fellows' Hypophosphites is adapted for diseases which are produced by loss of nervous power and consequent muscular relaxation, viz.:

Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Aphonia, Cough, Nervousness, Mental Depression, Neuralgia, Epileptic Fits, St. Vitus' Dance, Nervous Debility, Chronic Diarrhea, Leucorrhœa, Fever and Ague, Marasmus, Dyspepsia, Diphtheritic Prostration; Diseases produced by Overtaxing the Mind, by Grief, or Anxiety, by Rapid Growth, by Child-Bearing, &c., &c.

POND'S EXTRACT

CATARRH.—Pond's Extract is nearly a specific for this disease. It can hardly be used too often, even in old and obstinate cases. The relief is so prompt that no one who has ever tried it will be without it.

CHAPPED HANDS AND FACE.—Pond's Extract should be in every family this rough weather. It removes the soreness and roughness, and softens and heals the skin promptly.

RHEUMATISM.—During severe and changeable weather, no one subject to Rheumatic Pains should be one day without Pond's Extract, which always relieves.

SORE LUNGS, CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS.—This cold weather tries the Lungs sorely. Have Pond's Extract on hand always. It relieves the pain and cures the disease.

CHILBLAINS will be speedily relieved and ultimately cured by bathing the afflicted parts with Pond's Extract.

FROSTED LIMBS.—Pond's Extract invariably relieves the pain and finally Cures.

SORE THROAT, QUINSY, INFLAMED TONSILS AND AIR PASSAGES are promptly cured by the use of Pond's Extract. It never fails.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein A. C. Dawson for the use of R. A. Morris is plaintiff, and Frederick Groscup and Mary Groscup are defendants requiring me to make the sum of Twelve hundred and Fifty-Eight Dollars and Fifty cents [$1258.50] with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY the 4th day of MAY, 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to-wit:

The east half of the south east quarter of section thirteen 13, township thirty-four 34, north of range twelve 12, east, also the south part of the south west quarter and the west half of the south east quarter of section eighteen 18, after one hundred and sixty 160, acres are taken from the north end of the two last pieces or parcels of land above described, also the north west quarter of the north east quarter and the west half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter of section nineteen 19, all the pieces or parcels of land above described are in sections eighteen 18, and nineteen 19, situated in township thirty-four 34, north of range thirteen 13, east, all in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. C. St. CLAIR, Sheriff.
By Thos. D. Gross, Deputy.

C. W. Dawson, Atty for plaintiff.
Auburn, April 11th 1878. Pr. fee $10.90.

BUILDINGS MOVED.

Those wanting Buildings moved, with care and neatness, can have the opportunity by calling upon in the south part of town. He warrants all his work and does it promptly Imno13.

For the Ladies to Read.

White gloves are worn only at balls.

The bouquet embroidered gloves are novel.

Cameos are decidedly fashionable in jewelry.

Cardinal capes are among the new spring wraps.

Silver and mouse gray shades prevail in kid gloves.

Pretty new fans are of rustic bamboo, hand painted

Black and beige colors will be much used in parasols.

Butterflies are among the new ornaments for spring hats.

The street hat should be dark and to a certain extent plain.

Dresses are trimmed of double pipings of contrasting colors.

Lovely spring prints are selling as low as four cents per yard.

Plaited skirts have deep yokes, which give a splendid appearrance.

Basques, entirely covered with flowers are in vogue for evening toilets.

Cream color and greenish-grey are the popular tints in linen dress goods.

Misses' parasols are of small size in the designs and colors used for ladies.

All straw hats and bonnets are principally restricted to the dark color.

Byron collars and cuffs in guipure lace, for the ladies, are among the latest.

Yokes and plaited and gather waists are very becoming to tall, slender women.

The old color, "ash of roses," so long out of fashion, will be revived this summer.

Handsome evening dresses are made of plush grenadine in solid colors of light hues.

One of the novelties for summer dresses is crapebatiste—a thin linen fabric crinkled like crape.

Corlored embroideries appear on many of the handsomest sets of wide collars and deep cuffs.

Scarfs of crepe lisse, with the ends embroidered in silks or Oriental colors, are pretty novelties.

Flowers should be mostly worn on the left side of ball dresses, as the escort walks on the right.

There is a decided change in the shape of the parasols this season from those of last summer.

The shaded blue Madras gingham are very popular, but great care is required in washing them.

Very fine colored embroideries are seen on many of the newest stytes of pocket handkerchiefs.

Many of our store windows, with their beautiful spring goods and novelties, are as pretty as pictures.

Parasols and sunshades differ in shape from those of last year, being bell-shaped instead of canopied.

Organdies, with plain tinted grounds and flowers, and borders of fern leaves, grasses, &c., will be much worn.

The jauntiest of spring wraps is a coat that fastens over the chest with one button and shows a waist coat below.

It is above all things out of place to wear a gay bonnet in the street, or one strikingly in contrast with the rest of the toilet.

Dressy costumes for watering-places' are made of demask silk of light quantity, combined with plain silk of contrasting color.

It will be fashionable to sew the new style large collars and cuffs of white lace on the dark silk dresses that will be worn this summer.

Dull, unpolished ebony handles, quite massive, with a bar at the end, or hook inlaid with pearl or ivory, are the most stylish for parasols.

Black parasols lined with white or cream color, or cardinal red, are the newest. They are finished with whalebonefringe, and are very handsome.

Gold embroidery, in fringes, lace, tassels, balloons, passementeries, in every thing, in fact, is worn in paris, both in the morning and evening.

The Scotch and Madras ginghams, which make charmingly cool and fresh looking dresses, will be trimmed in Russia laces in colors to match the dress.

For school-girls and blonde young ladies, navy-blue and white ginghams, made up with white vests, and trimmed with Smyrna lace or rufles of embroidery, will be popular and fashionable.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumonia, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and villiage on this continent. Samepie bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

How A Spirited Girl Saved Her Father.

"Gentlemen,' said James Timmons, an elderly tobacco planter of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, "the eleven prisoners we have caught have amply deserved death; and as they are still in our hands, I think we had better put them to death without delay. Twenty highway robberies have been committed in our neighborhood by this dangerous gang within the past month, and I am sure that its villinous members also robbed and murdered poor Jack Grossius and his son, near Annapolis.'

"Don't know about that, Mr. Timmons,' remarked James Sturges, a country merchant, whose store was situated on the Baltimore cross-roads, "we have no proof whatever to that effect.'

"Pshaw Sturges, we should hang them otherwise our lives would be in danger.'

"Let's hang them, let's hang them!' cried the other twenty Marylanders, mostly farmers, who were assebled, on the 17th day of June, 1867, in James Timmons' sumptuous parlor.

During the preceeding night they had caught a gang of outlaws, consisting of ten men and a hansome young girl of nineteen, Annie Maisburg, whose father, an old man of notoriously bad character, was among the male prisoners.

These prisoners were known to have committed a number of outrages, principally upon persons travelling on the Baltimore highway, and their audicity had finally become so great that the most respectable citizens of that part of Maryland determined to put a sumary stop to the nefarious doings of the outlaws.

During the night preceeding the day on which our narative opens they had succeeded in surprising the whole gang in a low hovel close to the sea-shore, where they were carousing.

Pointing their rifles at the outlaws, the latter had at once surrendered.

Their pockets were searched, but, strangely enough, no money whatever was found on their persons.

Then the hovel was searched, and in the hayloft was found young Annie Maisburg, sound asleep.

They aroused her rudely from her slumbers.

She sprang to her feet and looked defiantly at the citizens.

"What do you want with me?' she cried, with flashing eyes.

"We want to know what has become of the money which your thief of a father and his confederates have stolen, was the reply.

She gave no answer, but tried to jump out of the hayloft. But they seized her threw her down and searched her pockets. Her dress contained no less than fourteen of the latter.

In each of them considerable sums of gold and bank-bills were found, the whole aggregating to nearly $7,000.

She refused to say where she got all this money. They handcuffed her and heavily shackeled the male prisoners.

All of them were taken to the plantation of Mr. Timmons, where they were locked up in the tobacco drying house.

As we said before, the citizens assembled in Mr. Timmons' parlor, and, with the sole exception of Mr. Sturges, were in favor of hanging the prisoners.

Sturges said: We surely can not string up the young woman. If we do public opinion will be adverse to us, and we may have to pay dearly for this whole affair.'

After a long discussion they resolved to extort, if possible, a confession from Annie Maisburg.

"Edgar,' said Mr. Timmons to his only son, a young man of twenty-two, "call in Pompy.' Pompy, a herculean negro slave, stepped in. "Bring that young woman from the drying-house,' said his master to him.

A few minutes later Annie Maisburg stepped in. She wore a plain, close-fitting calico dress, which admirably set forth her faultless shape.

Her small hands were still manacled. Her pale face, with its truly classical features, was crowned with luxurant raven hair. She still looked unabashed and defiant.

They told her that she must confess everything.

"Never! never!' she exclaimed.

"Then my man Pompey shall flog you within an inch of your life, hussy!' cried Timmons

"You are woman-whippers then!' she said disdainfully.

Pompey was told to give her fifty lashes on the bare back.

The negro was about seize the girl when Edgar Timmons, who had averted his eyes from her, huled him back. Drawing a pistol, the young man cried:

"You shall not turtue this girl. She is now under my protection.'

Annie turned gratefully to him. The citizens uttered cries of surprise.

"Why don't you marry the hussy, cried old Mr. Timmons, indignantly.

"I am ready to do so,' replied Edgar, "if she will take me.'

"She raised her shackled hands.

"I will! I will!' she cried. But I do not say so becouse I am afraid of torture or death. Only save my poor old father.'

"Edgar,' now said his father coldly, "you are no longer my son. If my friends say so, her father may go, too. But all three of you leave my plantation in ten minuter, or——'

"Save yourself further trouble,' said Edgar. Relieve her of her handcuffs, set her father free, and we shall leave your plantation.'

This was done, and in less than five minutes Edgar, Annie and her father had taken their departure.

The remaining prisoners were hung. Old Timmons became a hypochondriac.

Six years after the events which we have related occurred, a young woman bearing a beautiful child in her arms arrived at the plantation.

When Timmons caught sight of her he uttered a cry of surprise.

"I am Annie Timmons,' she said quietly, "and this is your grandson. My father died three years ago. Edgar, my husband, is very sick at Richmond. He longs to see you once more. Can you forgive him?'

For a moment the proud old man hesitated. Then he burst into tears and replied:

"Yes, yes, I will go with you!'

Then they went to Richmond, and an effecting scene took place between Edgar and his father.

The latter took him and his spirited wife back to his plantation, and passed the rest of his days in unalloyed happiness.

The Literature of Norseland!

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

There has been a terrible accident on the Lehigh Valley railroad, near Slatington, Pa. An oil train, going at the rate of twenty miles an hour, dashed into the rear of another freight train, which had stopped to allow a hot box to cool off. The engine of the oil train exploded, setting fire to the oil, and the entire train was destroyed. Four cars of merchandise were also burned. Total loss, $200,000. An oil tank exploded soon after the collision, scattering the burning oil in all directions, killing four persons and wounding twenty-one. ....At Chester, Pa., a few days ago, Clemens Lloyd, aged 40, killed his wife and himself. Jealousy was the cause.... A real tragedy was enacted before a horrified audience gathered in a Pawtucket (R. I.) theater the other evening. One of the feats to be performed was the shooting of an apple from the head of a performer. Mlle. Volante, a trapeze performer, held the apple on her head, and Mrs. Jennie Fowler was to shoot the apple. With uncommon recklessness, the shooter stood with her back to the mark, taking aim by reflection in a mirror. The rifle was discharged, and Mlle. Volante fell dead on the stage, shot through the forehead.

A blood-curdling disaster occurred at Bath, Steuben county, N. Y., on the morning of the 7th inst. The insane department of the county-house was fired by L. C. Ford, an inmate from Hornellsville. Nearly seventy patients were in the building, and fifteen—five males and ten females—perished in the flames. Some escaped, and forty or more were rescued. One was fatally injured. Ford, who fired the building, was subject to fits of aberration, but had never before done anything violent or dangerous. He was trusted, and had for some time been given almost complete liberty, while many of the others were kept closely confined under lock and key and iron-grated windows. Ford had a lamp in his room, and it is supposed while temporarily insane he set fire to the bedding in his room.... A fifty-horse-power boiler in the engine-room of the Boston stamping manufactory of Seavey & Co., Cambridge, Mass., exploded the other day. Three men were killed, another fatally injured, and three others more or less wounded.

The Wellfleet, (Mass.) Savings Bank, with deposits of $423,163, and the South Boston Savings Bank, with deposits of $1,565,962, finding themselves unable to meet the demands of the depositors, have been placed under the restrictions of the new Savings-Bank Stay law.

Sexton, the champion billiard player, was robbed the other night, in Hartford, Ct., of the valuable champion badge and other property....Thomas Benny and Harry Brennan were killed at Pottsville, Pa., last week, by an explosion of sulphur in a coal mine.

Fall River, Mass., has been greatly agitated by the discovery that S. Angier Chace, treasurer of the Union Mills, is a defaulter to the amount of about $500,000. Chase was also President of two banks, and always looked upon as an honorable man.

The visit of the Secretary of the Treasury to New York has resulted in arrangements with the members of the late loan syndicate by which the latter engage to take $50,000,000 of the 4½ per cent. bonds, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to preparation for the resumption of specie payments on the 1st of January next. The syndicate are to pay for the bonds 101½ in gold and accrued interest. They take $10,000,000 at once, and $5,000,000 per month for the remainder of the year. In the meantime the sale of the 4 per cents. will be continued under the existing arrangements, the proceeds being devoted to the redemption of the 5.20 bonds.

John E. Lyon, President of the Boston, Concord and Montreal railway, was burned to death at Plymouth, N. H., a few nights ago. Being ill, he arose during the night, fell, and the lamp in his hand, breaking, set fire to his clothing.

THE WEST.

Hon. Henry Fairbanks, Mayor of Terre Haute, and a wealthy and honored citizen, is dead.

There is stored in the elevators of Chicago 720,698 bushels of wheat, 1,258,615 bushels of corn, 391,808 bushels of oats, 105,116 bushels of rye and 356,504 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,846,532 bushels, against 8,830,787 bushels at this period last year.

A Denver dispatch states that H. R. McIntyre, President of the First National Bank of Lake City and Vice President of the First National Bank of Colorado Springs, Col., has absconded with $70,000....A row at Dodge City, Wyo., resulted in the killing of the Sheriff and two cowboys whom he was attempting to arrest.

THE SOUTH.

A telegram from Dallas, Texas, says "the through express train on the Texas Pacific road was stopped and robbed at Eagle Ford station. The express messenger and mail agent surrendered without resistance. The passengers were not molested. The amount stolen is not known. The robbery is supposed to have been committed by the same party that recently robbed a train at Hutchins and Allen station, on the Central Texas road."

Sunday, April 7, was a great day for the sports of San Antonio, Texas. Thousands of people turned out to witness a fight between a lioness and an immense Texas bull. The lioness had been starved to increase her ferocity. It was overdone, and left her weak and entirely at the mercy of the bull, which, in about ten minutes, had well-nigh gored her to death.

The Sandy Fashion, a small steamer running from Catlettsburg, Ky., up the Sandy river, exploded her boilers at the mouth of the Sandy, and sunk in three minutes in nine feet of water. Four persons were instantly killed, and a number badly injured....Accounts from the Texas border show that recently there have been but few, if any, incursions from the Mexican side.

William Brady, the Sheriff of Lincoln county, N. M., and his deputy, Hindman, were recently assassinated by a party of four men belonging to one of two factions who have for a long time been at deadly war. Four men, including a Deputy United States Marshal, are under arrest for the crime.

A dispatch from Dallas, Texas, reports another train robbery on the Texas Pacific railroad at Mesquite station, thirteen miles east of Dallas. When the train stopped at the depot, the engineer and fireman were taken from the engine and placed under guard. The express messenger and route agent barricaded themselves in their car, but the robbers saturated it with coal-oil, set fire to it, and forced them out. The express and mail were then plundered. Conductor Alford and two robbers were wounded. The plundering party numbered fifteen or twenty. The passengers were not molested.

WASHINGTON.

The House Elections Committee have agreed, by a unanimous vote, to dismiss the South Carolina contested-election case of O'Connor (Dem), against Cain (Rep), the sitting member.

The receipts of internal revenue for the fiscal year 1877 to April 9 were $89,908,329; for the same period this year, $83,179,953; decrease, $6,728,386.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House has decided, by one majority, in favor of an income tax. The yeas were: Tucker, Sayler, Robbins, Harris, Burchard and Gibson—6. Nays: Wood, Garfield, Banks, Kelley and Phelps—5. The details of the measure have yet to be prepared.

POLITICAL.

The New York Tribune's Washington correspondent interviewed several Senators on the Maryland resolutions to unseat Hayes. Davis and Morgan both agreed that the Supreme Court of the United States, if the case was brought to its attention, would hold that Congress had already exercised its supreme power under the constitution to settle the Presidential difficulty by the creation of the Electoral Commission. Neither of them is in favor of reopening the electoral controversy.

About 1,000 business men of Milwaukee have signed an address to President Hayes, approving his administration and his efforts to reform the civil service, and also indorsing his Southern policy. A good word is spoken for Secretary Schurz, and Senator Howe's philippic is characterized as unwise and uncalled for.

The Greenback National State Convention of Iowa met at Des Moines on the 10th inst., and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, M. Farnsworth; Treasurer, M. L. Devlin; Auditor, S. V. Saucaringer; Register of the State Land Office, M. Farrington; Attorney General, C. H. Jackson; Judge of the Supreme Court, J. C. Knapp; Clerk of the Supreme Court, Frank Dowsley; Reporter of the Supreme Court, G. W. Rutherford.

The Illinois Democrats held their State Convention at Springfield, on Thursday, April 11. E. L. Conkrite was nominated for State Treasurer, and S. M. Etter, present incumbent, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The resolutions declare in favor of a tariff for revenue only, the taxation of United States bonds, and the repeal of the Resumption and Bankrupt laws....The Oregon Democratic Convention met at Portland last week, and nominated W. W. Thayer for Governor, and John Whitaker for Congress.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Bismarck's organs tell Russia that, in negotiating the treaty of San Stefano, she did not sufficiently consider the interests of other powers, and that she can only purchase the complete fulfillment of the treaty by success in another war. The tone of these articles is moderate, but unmistakably hostile to the maintenance of Russia's present position.

It is announced from Constantinople that the current of feeling in the Turkish Government is now running wholly against Russia.... A correspondent at Pesth has had an interview with M. Tisza, Premier of the Hungarian Ministry, who said Austria-Hungary would go to war if necessary to prevent the establishment of a Sclav state on her southern frontier.

In the British House of Lords, on the 8th inst., Lord Beaconsfield moved an address of thanks to the Queen for her Majesty's message calling out the reserves, and followed with a speech which was repeatedly cheered. Sir Stafford Northcote moved the address in the House of Commons, and made a speech. He was followed by Gladstone, who urged the acceptance of Germany's proposal for a preliminary conference.

The cable brings an outline of Russia's reply to England. It is argumentative and conciliatory, rather than dogmatic; points to the fact that the San Stefano treaty is preliminary only as proof that Russia did not expect to exclude Europe from a voice in ulterior arrangements; defends the stipulations as to Bulgaria, which, it is said, will be no more under Russia's influence than Roumania has been; and asserts that the annexed territory in Armenia has only been taken for defensive purposes. The reply may be accepted as an invitation for a renewal of negotiations, but it does not promise Austria and England much satisfaction from the renewal.

Unsuccessful efforts have been made to negotiate a new Russian loan in Paris....Turkey is making fresh purchases of arms....All the garrisons on the Danube, from its mouth to the Servian frontier, have been occupied by Russian troops....The Captain General of Cuba has issued a decree, directing that, in conformity with the proclamation of the 28th of March, the restoration to its owners of all property embargoed for political offenses shall begin immediately.

It is reported that ex-Marshal Bazaine is dead....The Earl of Leitrim was buried in St. Michael's Church, Dublin. A crowd of about 300 hissed, hooted and cheered outside the church.

A St. Petersburg dispatch announces that "an active exchange of communications is proceeding under the moderating influence of Germany, with a view of arriving at a pacific understanding, the natural path to which would be a congress. An improved aspect of affairs has developed, so as to justify the hope of the speedy attainment of a favorable issue if England does not raise fresh obstacles."....Rumors have reached London of a disastrous defeat to the British troops in South Africa....All but two of the insurgent chiefs in Cuba have surrendered.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, April 5.—Senate.—The Senate passed the Naval Appropriation bill, discussed the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, and adjourned until Monday.

House.—Messrs. Butler and Cox furnished considerable amusement by a wrangle over the election of Doorkeeper, in which they indulged in a good deal of wit at the expense of each other. It was brought about by Mr. Butler nominating Gen. James Shields for the vacant position, and insisting in going into an election before a caucus had been held by either party. The House decided to postpone the election to Monday. After spending some time on the private calendar, the House adjourned till Monday.

Monday, April 8.—Senate.—Mr. Ferry introduced a bill to amend the Revised Statutes in relation to temporarily filling vacancies in the Executive Department....Mr. Matthews gave notice of his proposed substitute for a bill to repeal the Bankrupt act....Mr. Dorsey introduced a bill relative to the rank of certain retired military officers....The bill providing for a public building at Topeka, Kan., was taken up, amended so as to limit the cost to $200,000, and passed.... There was a brief discussion on the subject of repealing the law which authorizes four regiments of colored troops....The Pacific Railroad Funding bill was discussed without action.

House.—The Doorkeeper controversy was settled after a long and bitter partisan debate, in which Ben Butler and Sam Cox were the central figures, by the election of Field, the Democratic caucus nominee. The vote was as follows: Charles W. Field, 132, all Democrats; James Shields, 101, all Republicans except one (Springer); John H. Trent, 8, all Republicans....On motion of Mr. Clarke, of Missouri, the rules were suspended and a bill was passed authorizing the President to appoint James Shields a Brigadier General of the United States army on the retired list, his pay to commence from the time of the passage of the bill. There were only six negative votes—Messrs. Randolph, White of Pennsylvania, O'Neill, Jones, Cox of Ohio and Acklin....Mr. Blount, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Postoffice Appropriation bill. Referred to the committee of the whole. It appropriates $35,[illegible].

Tuesday, April 9.—Senate.—Mr. Morrill reported from the Finance Committee a bill to repair and put in operation the mint at New Orleans.... The General Deficiency bill was reported, and placed on the calendar....The Pacific Railroad Funding bill was discussed, put to a vote and passed—yeas, 40; nays, 19. This measure is known as the Thurman bill, and makes the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroad Companies pay into the treasury of the United States, in addition to the whole of the Government's earnings, not to exceed for the former company $150,000 and for the latter $300,000 per year....A bill to provide a code of army regulations was passed....Mr. Ferry introduced a bill to regulate compensation to railroads for the transportation of the mails.

House.—Mr. Buckner, the Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, reported back the bill to substitute treasury notes for national-bank notes. A point of order was raised that the bill must go to the committee of the whole, which the Speaker sustained, and it was so referred.... Mr. Wright offered a concurrent resolution, proposing to issue $[illegible] in United States notes, to be known as national money. It [illegible] the amount [illegible] throughout the country, and [illegible] the sum of $[illegible] to the United States, to be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and to be placed in circulation at the earliest moment. Referred.... Mr. Wood, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, made a long speech in [illegible] of the Tariff bill.

Wednesday, April 10.—Senate.—Mr. Matthews offered an amendment to the bill for the repeal of the Resumption act, which was referred.... The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was discussed.... A few unimportant bills were passed.... The executive session of the Senate was largely devoted to the discussion of the case of John W. Hoyt, of Wisconsin, nominated to displace John M. Thayer as Governor of Wyoming. Gov. Hoyt's nomination was reported adversely from the Committee on Territories, but the Senate, by a small majority, confirmed it.

House.—Mr. Turner introduced a bill imposing a fine of not less than $5,000 or not more than $20,000 upon any Senator or Representative who shall act as attorney for any railroad or other corporation created by the Government, or for any patentee of the United States, or for any mail contractor or their assigns....Mr. Fuller introduced a bill authorizing the loaning of treasury notes, the taking up of greenbacks and national-bank notes, prohibiting a contraction of the currency, and repealing the internal Revenue laws....Mr. Potter introduced a joint resolution, proposing a constitutional amendment as to sessions of Congress. It provides that after 1880 there shall be but one session every two years, unless when Congress shall be convened by the President....Mr. Turner offered a joint resolution directing the Committee on Civil-Service Reform of the two houses to inquire into the propriety of limiting Executive patronage by a constitutional amendment, and also into the propriety of adopting some new method of keeping the accounts of the Federal Government....The House debated the Pension Appropriation bill.

Thursday, April 11.—Senate.—The bill appropriating $75,000 to repair and put in operation the mint at New Orleans was passed....Senator Mitchell presented the following cablegram from the United States Consul at Tientsin, China: "The famine is spreading. Cannibalism exists. No rain. It will be worse next year. Will the indemnity bill pass?" This cablegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where the bill providing for the return of the Chinese indemnity fund to China is pending....The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was discussed....The Deficiency Appropriation bill was passed....Mr. Dennis presented the Blair resolutions passed by the Legislature of Maryland in relation to the Electoral Commission, and expressed his dissent from them, and his belief that the large majority of his constituents had no desire to agitate the Presidential question, but preferred peace. On motion of Mr. Dennis the resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

House.—The House devoted the day to the consideration of the Pension and Postoffice Appropriation bills. The feature of the Pension bill providing for the abolishment of the pension agencies was defeated, and in its stead an amendment was adopted providing that after July 1, 1878, all pension agencies shall be filled by crippled and wounded Union soldiers. The bill as thus amended was passed with a loud hurrah after a day of animated debate.

A BALM FOR EVERY ILL.

Alex. H. Stephens' Panacea for the Country's Woes.

[From the Washington Post.]

The Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, introduced in the House yesterday a bill which contemplates important changes in the financial system of the country. Mr. Stephens has been carefully studying the national finances for a long while with a view of effecting such legislation as would bring some relief. He has consulted the financial officers of the Government and many of the most influential members of Congress on the subject. Mr. Stephens' measure will undoubtedly command sufficient support in the House to secure its passage, most likely in its present shape or substantially so. The title is, "A bill for the relief of the financial embarrassments of the country, and to facilitate a return to specie payment without affecting the commerce, business and industries of the people, and for other purposes." The text is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed and required to raise, to keep and maintain the amount of coin and bullion in the treasury at or above $100,000,000, and when it exceeds that amount he shall redeem the present outstanding United States legal-tender notes, when presented in sums of $1,000 and upwards, with coin of full legal standard, but when the metal in the treasury sinks below $50,000,000 such redemption shall cease, and he shall exchange the present issue of 4 per centum bonds at par for such notes as may be presented, until the metal in the treasury rises to over $100,000,000, when he shall resume redemption in coin, and thus continue to redeem in coin or bonds as the state of the metal fund in the treasury may require under the act. The Secretary of the Treasury shall also change the plates for printing United States legal-tender notes so that they shall bear simply the inscription that they are exchangeable with bonds as hereinafter provided, at the option of the holder, and receivable for all public and private dues, together with the signs, words, and figures denoting the value they represent, and on and after the 1st day of July, 1878, the issue from the new plates shall be substituted for all the old issue in the hands of the Government and for all that may come into the treasury, and shall be exchanged for all old notes presented at the treasury. And, to aid in maintaining the exchangeable value of the United States notes and coins, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed and required to prepare a series of 3 per centum 3-30 bonds, to be known as home savings bonds, in denominations of $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, which shall at all times be kept by all authorized agents for the sale of any other bonds of the Government, and exchangeable at par with any new treasury notes, or certificates of value or legal standard coin, or any gold or silver bars on which may be stamped their value in standard coin. These bonds shall be paid upon demand in any new United States notes or certificates of value at any and all times. The interest shall be payable semi-annually, and the principal at maturity of the last coupon in the same, but if the bonds be called for payment by the treasury before maturity the principal shall be paid in coin. All excess of moneys in the treasury over $100,000,000 of metal and $25,000,000 of the United States notes shall be used to purchase the highest interest-bearing securities of the Government that can be paid at par, and when the metal fund exceeds $150,000,000 or the note fund exceeds $40,000,000, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall reduce the interest upon all future issues of bonds hereinafter authorized, the one-half of 1 per cent. at a time, to be repeated yearly until the United States notes will return in circulation to the amount of $325,000,000, below which they shall not be reduced. And on or after the 1st day of July, 1878, the business of the treasury shall be so conducted as to relieve, so far as possible, the burden of taxation from the people and secure the prompt conversion of the higher interest-bearing securities to or below 4 per cent. and to this end all provisions for a sinking fund are hereby suspended until such time as the debt be brought to or below the rate of 4 per cent. per annum interest, when payment of the principal may again be resumed. And all provisions of law inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

FUN IN THE HOUSE.

Spicy Colloquy Between Ben Butler and Sam Cox.

[Associated Press Report.]

Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, put in nomination for the position of Doorkeeper, Gen. James Shields, of Missouri (Democrat). Mr. Butler presented Gen. Shields as a Union maimed soldier.

Mr. Cox, of New York, said that he did not desire to interfere when so honorable a gentleman as Gen. Shields was nominated in pursuance to the rules of the House, but the Democratic party preferred to have the matter settled tomorrow.

Mr. Butler said if he had not believed that a majority of the House would have selected Gen. Shields he would not have pressed his motion. That gentleman had been shot in the Mexican war, and had had his arm shattered in the late war. He was an old man, had been a member of the House and United States Senator, and was now without means of support.

Mr. Cox—Why have you not provided for him in all these years? There was no intention to throw dishonor on Gen. Shields by the action of that side of the House, but the gentlemen on the other side had had the disposition of 90,000 offices, and why had they not discovered that distinguished soldier until this emergency?

Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, to Butler—Why did you turn him out of Congress when he was elected by a majority of thousands?

Mr. Butler—Don't howl. That was a question of election, and men sometimes vote according to partisan views on questions of election.

Mr. Butler denied that he sought any clap-trap popularity by offering the resolution. He simply desired to provide for an old soldier. He was surprised that he should be reproached by the other side of the House because, by voting for a Democrat in a contested-election case, he had followed the dictates of his conscience, and he had no thought he should live to hear again in the House an attack upon him by the gentleman from New York (Cox). He thought that on a former occasion that gentleman had learned enough not to do it again, but he (Butler) would be merciful now.

Mr. Cox—I don't want any mercy.

Mr. Butler—Shoo fly, don't bodder me!

Mr. Butler—It is said by the gentleman from New York (Cox) that we did not take care of Gen. Shields before. To that I answer that the Democrats have had two Congressmen, this one and another one. They have had caucuses where we did not interfere with them, and why did it not occur to them to take that gallant man for Doorkeeper instead of the gentleman whom they deserted yesterday? Again, why need any caucuses on this question? Why say we will do something for him some other time? Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation on this question of Doorkeeper. It may never come again. It is only "while the lamp holds out to burn that the vilest sinners may return." The flame is flickering now, and low. It may go out between this and 7 o'clock, and no space left for repentance, and then the shout shall go up to heaven. "Lost! lost!" again forever. Why do we debate this question? Is there a man who says Gen. Shields is unfit for the position? No. What then is the objection? That he is too fit for it, too good, too noble to hold it, and that the Doorkeeper's place is not fit for him? The only reason I have to believe that it is not fit for him is, because its last two occupants were not fit for it. I should think the place might have been fairly fit for him, because his case seems to have been answered by the text: "Better be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than a dweller in the tents of the wicked."

Mr. Cox, of New York—A word of personal nature in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Butler). That gentleman is always known to be rich in intrigues of a political nature, and this is perhaps one of them; but I never knew him before to have any poverty of wit, or to repeat his old wit again. So far as independence of party is concerned, I have never known it to be shown until since he was beaten in the Salem district. Now he is becoming independent. He did not vote with his parity yesterday, and I did not vote with some of the friends on my side, so there was a party between us there. So far as independence is concerned in voting for the extension of slavery, I am not too old to remember that he was a delegate to the Cincinnati Convention ——

A voice—You mean Charleston.

Mr. Cox—Yes; he committed himself twice on the slavery question, so that he ought to be very lenient.

Mr. Butler (who had approached to near where Mr. Cox was speaking)—I am.

Mr. Cox (addressing Mr. Butler directly)—And, when growing older, you ought to grow in grace day by day. I will bring you up here to the anxious bench and pray over you. There is not a man anywhere whom I should rather lift by kindly prayer than the distinguished intellectual gentleman from Massachusetts. I do not say that he needs it more than other members. I know the good points of his character. I know his friendly heart. I know many things about him which the world does not know, and count to his honor and integrity. It is no laughable matter; but I beg the gentleman never hereafter to repeat that little old stale wit.

Mr. Cox (as in the act of benediction)—Then I will send you to your seat now, pardoned. Go and sit down, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul.

Mr. Butler (sitting down)—I do not see anything to reply to.

English Crown Jewels.

The English crown diamonds have arrived at the Paris Exposition, and are valued at $8,500,000. They are in a thick iron chest, and are guarded by sentinels day and night. There is a diadem of eighty-six diamonds of various sizes, in the middle of which is the celebrated Koh-i-Noor, alone valued at $380,000; also a collar of 108 diamonds, in the center of which is an emerald, said to be the purest and most beautiful extant. A second diadem is a blending of diamonds and emeralds. In the center is the large Kaudavassy diamond, valued at $600,000. It would be rated at a higher sum were it not for a slight defect. These, and many other valuables of the kind, belong to the English crown; a portion are used by the Princess of Wales on special occasions; the others are reserved for the Queen. The Kaudavassy was formerly the eye of a one-eyed Hindoo deity, and has been but lately added to the collection.

A family, consisting of man, wife and seven children, live in the woods of Southeast Texas, with no other shelter than that afforded by the forest trees. They never labor nor purchase food of any kind, subsisting wholly upon acorns, nuts, herbs, rats, birds, fish, frogs, and what they can procure by foraging. They have repeatedly refused offers of assistance, and express the desire to live a wild life.

The new Pope has three brothers. The youngest of them, Cav. Gio. Battista Pecci, is married, with three sons and two daughters—one of his sons being in the Italian army. In summer the cavalier resides in Carpineto, the family homestead of the Peccis, a little village of 4,000 inhabitants, on the Rome and Naples railroad; during winter he dwells in Rome, with the eldest of the brothers, Signor Carlo, an octogenarian. The other brother is a simple priest.

Complaints of the lack of population in France, so much dwelt upon in our day, were rife in the middle of the last century. France had then but 17,000,000, of whom it was calculated a thirty-fourth part were clergymen who did not marry. The deaths at that time largely exceeded the births. The obstacles placed in the way of soldiers marrying also considerably affected the population. This, with continual wars, helped to keep the population of France at a very low ebb.

Henry Meiggs, the South American railroad king, so far from dying bankrupt, as has been alleged, left an enormous fortune to his sons, Henry H. and Minor K. Meiggs, who, inheriting also their father's energy, have already entered into new contracts with the Peruvian Government involving an outlay of millions. One project likely to be completed is the Sutra tunnel beneath the famous silver mines, which is expected to give access to the greatest mass of silver ore in the world.

London fogs are not caused by the rarefaction of the air, nor by the consumption of gas, nor yet by the hills on the north, nor by the river. The peculiar atmospheric condition termed an anti-cyclone is the real cause of these annoying visitations; the wind is then blowing round a well-defined circle, in the center of which the air is tranquil, and consequently the smoke, condensed vapors, etc., cannot escape as they do when there is a direct onward movement of the wind. These objectionable visits occur mostly in November.

Assassination in Ireland.

The following details of the assassination of the Earl of Leitrim, his clerk and driver, has been telegraphed from Dublin. The Earl of Leitrim left his residence at Milford shortly before 8 o'clock yesterday morning, accompanied by his clerk, and was driving on an outside car to Derry to meet his solicitor. He always carried arms. It is supposed the assassins concealed themselves behind a low embankment between the road and plantation, and that, having first shot the Earl of Leitrim, they shot the clerk and driver, so there might be no witnesses. His Lordship's valet was driving about a mile behind, and, on coming up, found his master and the clerk lying dead on the road. Life was still in the driver. The assassins meanwhile escaped in a boat across Mulroy bay. The valet drove back to Milford and alarmed the police, who, coming to the place, found the driver still alive, but unconscious. He died shortly afterwards.

There is no doubt that the murder was agrarian. The relations between the Earl of Leitrim and his tenants were unfriendly. His Lordship was kind and liberal to the poor, but was very particular and exacting in his dealings with his tenantry, visiting with unsparing severity the slightest infraction of the rules of the estate. The Ribbon Society have a strong hold upon the county, owing in a great measure to his harshness. He had an iron will which disregarded alike appeals or menances, and he possessed extraordinary courage and perseverance in the pursuit of his purposes.

The London Times, in an editorial on the assassination, says it is no exaggeration to say that the news of the murder of the Earl of Leitrim, which caused a profound sensation in the House of Commons when confirmed by the Irish Secretary, has struck this country with as much pain and amazement as an unprovoked declaration of war.

One Use for Old Postage Stamps.

The Boston Journal uttered the query the other day: "What use is made of the millions of old postage stamps which are collected?" A correspondent answers informing the public of a practice which prevails in convents and other Catholic institutions in this country, and is almost unknown to those outside their walls. All canceled stamps are saved and sent to missionaries of the faith in China, who buy with those worthless scraps of paper infants who would otherwise be destroyed in accordance with the custom of the more degraded Chinese. The many-colored stamps are used for the decoration of walls etc., by the ingenious Orientals, and are valued so highly that 100 of them will buy a baby whose parents have doomed it to death. The little ones thus purchased are gathered into asylums, and reared in accordance with the laws and customs of civilization.

Hanging in England.

A bill for the abolition of capital punishment in England has been rejected by the House of Commons, by a vote of 263 against 64. Notwithstanding this vote, the sentiment against the death penalty in England is very strong. When a murderer was to be hanged lately, at Dolgelly, the inhabitants of the place refused to have anything to do even with the preparations. No local carpenter would erect the gallows, and, when the materials for the structure had been got from Chester, no carter could be persuaded to fetch them from the station. Out of eighty-four persons convicted of murder in England in a single year, only eighteen actually reached the gallows. In France, during the ten years ending with 1865, there were 1,084 convictions, and only 121 executions.

English Railroad Earnings.

Notwithstanding the depression in trade, English railroads tell a much more cheerful tale than ours. Only one of the fourteen principal companies has, during the past year, suffered a positive reduction of gross revenue, while, on the other hand, one company obtained an expansion of $400,000, and, as regards three others, there were increases exceeding $150,000 each. On the average, an increased dividend has been paid, notwithstanding an outlay of capital which raises that capital employed upon the construction of English railroads down to the 31st of December to about $2,800,000,000.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

THE HONEST FARMER.

Happy I count the farmer's life,
Its various round of wholesome toil;
An honest man with loving wife,
And offspring native to the soil.

Thrice happy, surely [illegible] his breast
Plain wisdom and the trust in God;
His path [illegible] straight from seat to [illegible]
[illegible]

[illegible] loss to other men;
[illegible] blows inflict no wound;
Not busy with his tongue or pen,
He questions fruitful sky and ground.

Partner with seasons and the sun,
Nature's co-worker; all his skill
Obedience, [illegible] as waters run,
[illegible]

A vigorous youthhood, clean and bold;
A manly manhood, cheerful age;
His comely children proudly hold
Their parentage best heritage.

Unhealthy work, false mirth, chicane,
Guilt—needless cup, and [illegible]—
O cities, vain, insane, insane!
How happy is the farmer's life.

This impression seems to be general that excessive corn-feeding is the cause of what is called hog-cholera.

Leghorn eggs average ten to eleven to a pound. Those of Light Brahmas average between six and seven.

Farmers are seriously inquiring if they can make pork for $2.50 per hundred. They did for half of that in 1861, and lived over it. In 1841 they sold dressed pork for 75 cents per hundred, and no more than half took the benefit of the Bankrupt law. Nearly half did, however.

Let every man who expects to raise but a litter of pigs, put in a few rods of mangel-wurzels, and begin to feed out the thinnings as soon as they begin to crowd; keep the corn till fattening time. Instead of having to fatten a lot of stunted shotes, he will begin on 250 hogs at least.

I would advise farmers not to let their ideas run too high on the subject of chufas, for they are nothing new, and, although very prolific and edible, are not delectable. The great labor incident to harvesting will prevent their being extensively produced for swine or poultry, and when estimated in bushels artichokes will exceed them in yield. Frost kills their germinating powers.—George R. Drake, in Rural New Yorker.

Ever since the epizootic year I have given my team a pint of onion sets every morning during winter and spring; they kept off the epizooty then and twice since, when it became threatening. I am satisfied they are very beneficial in other ways, as my team are never sick or off their feed. I use the "top onion," merely because they are plenty with us, and cheaper than other kinds, otherwise they are no better. They are always eaten before the corn.—S. R. Mason, in Moore's Rural.

If there is a profession upon earth, which must be practiced in order, it is that of farming. There should be a time for everything as well as a place, and more depends upon timing work on a plantation than on almost anything else. Good seed, good sowing, good plowing, good cultivation, are good only when employed at the right time, and many a man, if he looks back over 1877, will see that his failures arose from a disregard of nature's first law.

In transplanting remember: Dig wide holes—cut off all broken or marred roots, spread out the roots in a natural position, set the tree a little above its previous depth, fill in with good soil (no manure), work it between the roots with the hand, do not pull the tree up and down, and finally press the earth firmly down and if there is a likelihood of dry weather spread a mulch over the surface. Bear always in mind that plants are injured if their roots are exposed to sun or wind for even a few minutes.

In an old agricultural paper of forty-seven years ago, we learn that it is a good plan to put a piece of chalk in the pen with the young calves. They will lick it and thus correct the acidity of their stomachs and assist digestion and prevent dyspepsia, which often leads to scours. There is no doubt but that this is a most excellent practice. Prepared chalk is often prescribed by doctors as a remedy for heart-burn, which is a symptom of dyspepsia, and for diarrhea. The crude chalk (carbonate of lime) is unquestionably a good preventive and remedy for similar disorders in stock. The prepared chalk is the crude with all the gritty particles worked out.—Cor.

S. D. Payne, of Kasota, Minn., announces his expectations of having 100 acres in forest trees before the end of the year. He planted 70,000 during the past season, and his mode of operations, briefly stated, is as follows: "Break the land the first year, crop it the second, plant the trees, seeds, or cuttings the third. Put 2,000 trees to the acre. Distance apart, 4 feet 8 inches each way, or 6 feet one way and 3½ feet the other; the latter distance preferable for many reasons. Planted as last stated, and after the ground becomes thoroughly shaded, I intend to cut out every other tree. This will leave my plantations 6 feet by 7. After this cut out only dead trees. Our forests are like the human family, composed of pigmies and giants. The pigmies do not amount to anything. At the expiration of thirteen years I do not expect to have over 300 handsome, thrifty, growing trees, standing on an acre."

About the House.

Make a paste of soft soap and emery for polishing steel.

Dip candle-wicks into spirits of turpentine and then dry before using.

Old paint-pails and cans may be thoroughly cleaned with strong, hot lye.

A small quantity of turpentine added to stove-blacking will make the stove easier to polish.

To keep stoves from rusting during the summer, rub with kerosene and wrap well in papers.

Cream for Cake.—One cup of sweet milk; put one half on to boil, thicken the other half with a beaten egg and a little flour, and pour into the milk on the stove, stirring constantly; let it boil up, then remove from the fire, sweeten and flavor to taste.

A bottle of flaxseed oil, chalk and vinegar mixed to the consistency of cream, should be kept in every house for burns, scalds, etc.

Sponge Cake.—One cup of sugar; three eggs; one cup of flour; one half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in two table-spoonfuls of cream-of-tartar.

To Make Boots Water-Proof.—Four parts mutton tallow to one part resin—mutton tallow alone is excellent—put on the tallow after the boots are blackened with common blacking.

Jelly Cake.—Two eggs; one cup of sugar; butter, the size of a walnut; two-thirds of a cup of butter-milk; and one-half teaspoonful of soda; three cups of flour; flavor to taste. Bake in layers.

Ginger Bread.—One pint of molasses; one cup of sugar; one cup of butter; four eggs; six cups of flour; one pint of butter-milk; two table-spoonfuls of ginger; one table-spoonful of cinnamon; two teaspoonfuls of soda.

To Make Yeast.—Boil one handful of hops in two quarts water till strength is exhausted; in the meantime grate three good-sized potatoes; pour on the hop water, boiling hot, which forms a starch; add one-third cup of salt and two-thirds cup of sugar, one table-spoonful of ginger; when milk-warm stir in one cup or less good yeast; set in warm place to rise. This yeast will keep longer than any other I have ever used.

Relief for Burning Feet.—To relieve burning feet, first discard tight boots; then take one pint of bran and one ounce of bi-carbonate of soda, put in a pail, and add one gallon of hot water; when cool enough, soak your feet in this mixture for fifteen minutes. The relief is instantaneous. This must be repeated every night for a week, or perhaps more. The bran and bi-carbonate should be made fresh after a week's use. Bi-carbonate of soda can be purchased, for about 10 cents a pound, from wholesale druggists. The burning sensation is produced by the pores of the skin being closed, so that the feet do not perspire.

A Deadly Climate.

Erzeroum, in the recent war, seems to have been a vast charnel house. During the past three months 9,500 Turkish soldiers have died in the various hospitals there, and probably at least as many civilians, making a total mortality of nearly 20,000 in Erzeroum alone in about twelve weeks. In January, the weather being then very severe, a detachment of 800 troops was sent over the mountains to Erzingham. Only 300 reached their destination. They were overtaken by a fearful snow-storm. The Colonel had his wife and three children with him in a covered araba; he and they all perished. The hospitals at Erzeroum are full of cases of frostbite, some of them as severe as any cases on record. Twenty-seven soldiers without feet are under the charge of one surgeon alone; they had been all frostbitten, and their feet had to be amputated.

One Ahead.

A number of boys were yesterday playing in front of a Chinese wash-house on Woodward avenue, when John came out and ordered them away, and took hold of one who didn't want to go.

"You're a heathen!" yelled the boy.

"Me samee you—me have alle Melican holidays!" replied John.

"No you don't!" protested the boy. "You kin jine in with New Year's, hang up yer stocking on Christmas, and foller the purseshion on Fourth of July, but when it comes to April fool you've got to stand 'way back in the woods and not mix in! We're one ahead of you, old pig-tail, and I'll git even for this shaking up!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Brain.

The British Royal Society is gravely investigating the changes of temperature that occur in the human brain. Delicate experiments with the thermo-electric apparatus performed on six persons who have offered themselves for the purpose demonstrate, we are told, that mental work causes an increase of heat; even to attract a person's attention raises the temperature. To assist these investigations a chart has been laid out of the head, dividing it into sections; and it is asserted that in a normal state different parts of the head exhibit different degrees of heat.

A Child's Compliment.

At a supper-table night before last, a conversation had been carried on for quite a while on a marriage to take place soon, and the merits of the bride were discussed quite freely, and also the probabilities of her making a good wife. A little 7-year-old boy at the table had evidently been an attentive listener, though he had not been noticed. The company were surprised to hear him remark, as he leaned over to kiss his mother, "Ma, when I get big enough I'm going to marry a lady just like you. Wouldn't 'oo marry me, ma?" queried the little fellow.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Gambetta.

The great French statesman, Gambetta, was recently attacked with syncope after a session of the Chamber of Deputies. His body was distended, and the veins upon his forehead and temples were swollen to a point of apparent bursting. It is feared that the mode of life he leads will speedily kill him. He is incessantly reading and writing, except when receiving his numerous visitors. He eats heartily, but irregularly, and takes sleep at detached periods, as his conferences often last through the early morning hours. He takes no exercise beyond what his carriage furnishes in making business visits.

A Youthful Philosopher.

A little grandnephew of Prince Bismarck was sitting on the Prince's knee the other day, when he suddenly cried out, "Oh, uncle, I hope I shall be a great man like you when I grow up!" "Why, my child?" asked his uncle. "Because you are so great, and every one fears you." "Wouldn't you rather every one loved you?" The child thought a little, and then replied, "No, uncle; for when people love you they cheat you, but when they fear you they let you cheat them."

THE "HONEST" MONEY LEAGUE.

A National-Bank Swindle.

Half a dozen national-bank officers, and a few money-shavers at Milwaukee and Chicago, have organized what they call "The Hard-Money League," which is to be addressed as the "Honest-Money League of Chicago." This organization, like the Bankers' Association, is a fraud. Its object is to swindle the public. It has so little faith in its own honesty that it finds it necessary to herald itself as "honest," well knowing that the organization is created to deceive the people, cheat the public, and propagate the old lies by which hard money has so long enslaved labor, crippled industry and bankrupted nations.

I propose to take up each of the resolutions through which it appeals to the public, and dissect its fallacies, its cheats, its frauds and its lies, hanging the guilt of its purpose on the gibbet of public opinion, for men to stare at.

These wise Shylocks unanimously adopted as the platform of their principles:

"Opposition to all paper inflation and consequent depreciation. In favor of coin and paper of equal value and equal purchasing power, and convertible into each other at the will of the holder."

Here is concentrated, as the basis, as much bosh, utterly without meaning or definition, as hard-money impudence could well crowd into five lines. Opposition to all paper inflation and consequent depreciation! This, as applied to the present condition of affairs, is about the coolest piece of red-shield impudence ever undertaken to be designated as principles. For six years we have had nothing but contraction. Our own money, through foreign and Wall street influence, has been robbed from the people and burned, for the sole purpose of making money dear. Every man who has education enough to read, and brains enough to know that withdrawing circulation and burning it is contraction, knows that we have had the exact opposite of inflation. And that we have no depreciation is proved by the fact, printed and heralded every day from a thousand presses in every quarter of the nation, that our paper money has constantly appreciated from a point when, as compared with the fictitious value of gold, it stood as 100 to 247—that is, one dollar in gold would buy $2.47 in greenbacks—to where it stands to-day, but 1 per cent. below gold.

And those differences have always been based upon the fictitious value of gold, not its real value. For nothing but the absolute inability and impossibility of gold to perform the offices of money gave it a fictitious value. No man dare say that the Government of the United States, in the darkest hour of the Rebellion, was not sound in its credit, honest in its faith and reliable in its resources; and that in its entirety of property, honor, credit, and faith, it was not worth as much, as a measure of value, as one of its inferior products. To say so is to lie and cheat and defraud the people. Gold and silver were not to be had. Usurers had hid them to make tyrants of them, and we had to yield to these tyrants, or give up the ship, or find a better, a safer, or more reliable money. We found it in the greenback. There has never been an hour when its issue was inflated beyond our necessities; never a day it has not appreciated since the people knew that they were the money of the people; never a day that it has not been worth more than specie; and nothing but the repudiating halter hung round the neck and printed on the back of the greenback, "Not receivable for revenue duties or for interest on the public debt," has kept them from being at a premium above gold.

It is false, then, to say that we have had and have an inflated currency. It is equally false to say it was, by consequence of inflation, depreciated. A cause which is driven to announce a lie as the principle of its action needs to call its adherents "honest," for no one else will.

These honest-money men resolve:

"First.—The industrial interests of the country, and consequently the welfare and happiness of the people, require stability in the standard of value and uniformity in circulating mediums of exchange."

There is not a doubt but what the people require stability in the standard of value and uniformity in their circulating medium. It is for this reason they demand the greenback; for this reason they demand national resources, national stability, national responsibility, instead of individual liability, on a pretended gold basis, which has eternally failed whenever it has been called for. Gold and silver are held by the few. The few control them, and the few make them scarce or plenty, just as suits their greed. A pint measure can't fill the office of a hogshead, nor can gold and silver give us a stable currency. The quantity of coin is as inadequate as the pint measure.

Hard money resolves:

"Second.—The experience of all civilized and commercial nations proves that gold and silver possess stability of value in a greater degree than any other commodities, and are, therefore the best standard of value, and in connection with paper representatives convertible into them on demand, the only safe and uniform circulating medium."

This is a fallacy tyrants have lived on since the flood; but it is so mixed with truth as to readily deceive the unthinking. Admit gold and silver possess value. They are products of labor. So are wheat and corn and cotton, and all the endless products of our country. It is false that coin is stable in value. Nothing has varied so much; and its utter inadequacy in amount makes it the most dangerous, the most unreliable, and the most tyrannical measure of value that it is possible to adopt.

England had to discard it in 1694 or lose her liberties. She had to adopt her own credit in the notes of the Bank of England from 1796 to 1822, or be swept from the nations of the earth. In 1825, in 1848, and in 1857, the attempt to rely on gold cost her more than her present national debt. The paper of the Bank of England saved England.

France, in 1789, 1830, 1848, and 1871, and to this day, has had to discard coin or lose her national existence. She had to adopt her own credit, her own paper money, or lose her liberties. She trusted herself, and is to-day, financially, the most stable, reliable, and prosperous government in the civilized world.

The United States in the Revolution would have been crushed by the Hessians of George III. if we had been forced to rely on gold. From 1811 to 1816 we should have been crushed as a power if we had trusted to gold. In the Mexican war we conquered Mexico, liberated California, and established the vigor and energy of our arms on our treasury notes. They won the battles, they discovered California. From 1861 to 1865 there was not gold enough in the country to pay for our soldiers' boots. Silver there was none. We should have been enslaved by slavery, lampooned and derided by England, and whipped as a people and as a nation if we had been forced to fight our battles with gold. Gold was the tyrant to enslave us. It would have starved our armies; it would have allowed our army to have gone naked, unsheltered, without hospitals, into inhospitable graves, if it had had the power to control. It is a cheat; it is a fraud; it is a lie! It flies the moment it is demanded. It disappears the hour you require it. It is a cut-throat usurer. So much for its "stability" and "measure of values" in "the experience of all civilized nations." But these "honest-money" men resolve:

"Third.—It is the duty of the Government to establish and maintain a sound and uniform currency system. The establishment and maintenance of such a system was one of the ends contemplated by the founders of our Government in framing the constitution, and, to secure the advantages of such a system, requires only a firm adherence to the principles and spirit of the constitution."

For a resolution this is a good one. We agree with every word of it. The Government has established and maintained the greenback and the national currency system. They established it as a constitutional measure. Just such as the founders of the Government, in framing the constitution, contemplated; and we have only to adhere to the greenback to keep sacred the obligation of constitutional liberty. Let me prove what I say. Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, John Jay, Benjamin Franklin and George Washington sustained the treasury-credit system. Hamilton, with his clear head, his great brain, his comprehensive intellect, felt and saw at once that we must have a currency of our own—a currency which was free from the intrigues, interferences and impudence of foreign control. His report on the United States bank and on American coinage comprehended and expounded the philosophy and settled the principle. Madison and Jay, and Franklin, and Jefferson and Washington agreed with him.

Jefferson said: "Treasury bills, bottomed on taxes, bearing or not bearing interest, may be found necessary, and, when thrown into circulation, will take the place of so much gold and silver. Bank paper must be suppressed, and the circulation be restored to the nation, to whom it belongs."

Mr. Calhoun declared that the Government must establish a paper credit, totally separate from gold and silver, as a medium of circulation, based on its power of taxation, the resources of its people and their products.

Mr. Webster fully concurred with Mr. Calhoun. Mr. Clay was of the same opinion. Judge Story, Judge Kent, Chief Justice Jay, Marshall and Chase—commencing with our constitutional history and coming down to the Rebellion, when it was a question of national existence—have each and all settled the constitutional power. The exercise of the power was so essential that we could not exist without it. Public welfare demanded it. Public prosperity cannot exist without it. Labor is dependent upon it. Industry is its child. Independence cannot exist without it. It has saved our national life. The people created it. The people will sustain it. It is stability itself. "But," say these half-dozen Shylocks of the West (where they could not, to save their penurious souls, get a corporal's guard of the people to sustain them), by way of resolving:

"Fourth.—The constitution contemplates only the use of precious metals as a standard of value. These principles were strictly observed by the Government until a great national emergency compelled a temporary departure from them. That departure was solemnly and repeatedly declared to be only temporary and only justifiable on the ground of extreme necessity in time of national peril, and most positive assurances had been given by the legislative and executive departments of the Government that when the exigencies of the war should pass away the Government would as soon as practicable return to the constitutional and stable metallic standard and measure of value."

I have just shown that the first assumption of this fourth proposition is false. Our whole history is a lie, or it is a lie. We have never relied on coin. Five or six times we have tested it, but we always found it was wanting. It wasn't there. In 1816, 1825, 1837, 1842, 1857, 1861, and all the time since, it has been a minus quantity—a fraud, a delusion. Any basis that can not stand a test is a false basis. Gold and silver have never stood a test. They can't; there is not enough of them to do it. In '61 the Government would have been totally swamped if it had not bottomed its circulation on taxes and national credit. Balky horses won't work; they always stop at the foot of the hill. A basis that always fails is no basis. Currency bottomed on taxes and national credit in the United States can not fail. It is impossible. It is stable as government and as certain as time. These wise heads (honest hard-money Shylocks) resolve:

"Fifth.—The emergency that made it necessary for the Government to force upon the people an irredeemable paper currency having passed away, to now perpetuate that system as a permanent financial policy would be a violation of the spirit of the constitution and of the spirit of the laws under which our war currency was issued, and, as the experience of the world has proved, would necessarily be followed by still further depreciation, to the great injury of all legitimate business and to the suffering of the laboring classes upon whom the evils of depreciated currency inevitably fall most heavily."

The Government never forced a dollar on any man. Everybody but knaves and usurers welcomed the greenback as our savior. It came when the battle for life and death came. It fed our soldiers. It made our guns. It clothed and paid our army. It built our transports. It made our powder. It saved us from having our throats cut when gold and silver gave out. I stand by the currency that stood by us. I uphold the nation's money that saved the nation. If it was created by the emergencies of the war it was because gold and silver failed to answer the emergencies of the war. They deserted us in the time of need. They were tried and were found wanting. They were traitors to liberty. We will depend on the traitor coins no more. No; never more. We have national credit—the grandest in resources, the purest in faith and the most abiding in its stability the world ever knew. The greenback represents it. The nation gave it birth in its hour of trial. It cradled it in the blood of rebellion. It christened it with liberty. It sanctified it by victory. It will stand by it as long as the nation stands. The man or men (hard money, imperialist, honest or dishonest) who say that the greenback has or can depreciate know that they deliberately falsify the truth. Its basis is the $40,000,000,000—making $40 of resources for every dollar issued, even if we had what the necessities and prosperity of the people demand—but now $65 for every dollar issued. Indeed, the yearly accumulated profits of the nation, which go into the accumulated wealth of the nation, are larger by $500,000,000 yearly than all the currency demanded by the people.

The nation may die out, its population may diminish, but the national liability and property cannot be exported or dissipated or exhausted so as to endanger the absolute security of the greenback. To talk about depreciation is worse than false. It is wicked, it is infamous, and these "honest," hard-money bank monopolists know it. But they resolve:

"Sixth.—National honor and both national and individual prosperity demand a return to the standards of value recognized in the constitution, and, with our present paper currency almost at par with coin, to delay such return and authorize new issues of irredeemable paper would only add to further depreciation, until, as in all past experiments of the kind, paper will become worthless, leaving us without any reliable circulating medium, and entailing destruction on all industry and misery and poverty on the masses of the people."

This is the weakest delusion of red-shield twaddle, this appeal to national honor to create national dependence on usurers and money-gamblers, ever invented. It is like old Shylock with the scales in hand, sharpening his knife, impatient to cut out the pound of flesh—the very heart-blood of Antonio, when he says: "The pound of flesh is mine. I have bought it, and in honor you must give it me."

'Tis mine, and I will have it.
If you deny me, fie upon your law;
There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
I stand for judgment. Answer: Shall I have it?

This was the same kind of national honor Shylock demanded that his hard-money followers now demand. It was their honor to demonetize silver by a contemptible fraud, and so make resumption impossible; and then, by a baser fraud—a fraud which, if they could have succeeded, would have bankrupted one-half the nation, and, by forced sales and collections, have robbed the debtor class of their property at a quarter of its value—getting a forced law of resumption. They got it. And then these honest men feloniously went to work to make the bonds, payable in legal money, payable in gold. It was a swindle; but they were guilty of it. It was an attempt to steal hundreds of millions from the taxpayers to place it in the pockets of these honest usurers. This is the kind of honor they prate about. It is the thief crying "Stop thief!" And, thank Heaven, the people have made up their minds to stop the thieving felons from carrying out their games! They have been the chief ornaments in the train crying "Rag baby!" and "Contraction!" They have plunged the country in doubt, in misery, and in idleness, and now charge the crimes their own selfish greed has brought upon the land to the money which has saved it. They resolve:

"Seventh.—We have now an abundance of money to supply all the wants of trade. Our paper currency is rapidly approaching the uniformity and stability of the coin standards. If left free from further legislative change it will soon, by force of natural laws, go into general circulation, and general confidence and prosperity will be restored to the country."

They reiterate the cry of Wall street and Boston capitalists that "We have an abundance of money to supply the wants of trade." If they knew enough to be disgusted, they know this statement to be false. They know that contraction has been going on here (precisely as it went on in England in 1819, 1825, 1847-8 and 1858), under the alarm created by the approach of the time for "specie payment"—a cry which cost England at her four crises more than her national debt, and yet ended in the acknowledged incapacity of England to pay in specie. Centuries have proved the fact that specie cannot be relied upon as a basis, and that the moment it is understood that it is to be demanded contraction commences—just as it did in 1870, going on and on until the country has less than $6 per capita of circulation. France has $40 per capita. France is prosperous. We have $6, and 3,000,000 of our laboring population are without labor, homes—almost without bread. The Sheriff is the only man with more business than he can attend to. Money is plenty in the hands of the capitalists, but all faith is dead, all credit is gone, and one might as well undertake to stop the plunging waters of Niagara as to attempt to borrow unless he can give United States stocks, or their equivalent, as security. The fact is, capital is determined to bulldoze the people into doing as it bids. It says, "Become my slaves; and then, if you will give us security which suits us (like the pound of flesh), we will accommodate you, and not without." Money is the tyrant. All tyrants shall be put down. The people swear it. The people mean it. Finally, the "Honest-Money League" resolve:

"Eighth.—We invite all our fellow-citizens who concur in these views of the nature of money and the medium of exchange and the functions of the Government in relation thereto, to unite with us in an effort to maintain the honor and welfare of our common country, and in a protest against the adoption of an irredeemable paper-money policy, which would certainly, sooner or later, be followed by all the evils of fluctuation and depreciation, ending only in ultimate repudiation and general financial ruin."

That is they, like the spider, invite the fly into their parlor. They invite the 40,000,000 American people, with an accumulated capital of $40,000,000,000, and with an annual profit of $2,000,000,000, to admit that they are slaves to $200,000,000 of specie. They invite the American people to acknowledge that they are fools, and not competent to create a financial policy of their own. They invite them to become the subjects of the Rothschilds and German Jews, who hold our bonds; and to permit them to dictate to us what shall be money, and how much we shall have. It is enough to make an American's blood boil with indignation to hear these money-bags, and panderers to gold kings propose that the United States shall yield up its independence and walk into the Jew's parlor to be chained with usury, hungered by want, and be killed by the oppression of the money power. The American people will not do it. Revolution, anarchy, bloodshed—any disaster is better than financial slavery. The greenback is the money of the people. It redeems itself, precisely as the gold dollar or the silver dollar. It is the nation, and therefore not to be swapped off. It is sovereignty in money, and therefore has no superior. It is E Pluribus Unum—may God bless and protect it!

One word more: This Hard-Money League originated, as it appears, in the West, where it cannot, with drum and fife, get out 500 adherents in the States it pretends to represent. It is a mere blowing the wind to keep up courage. Its real origin can easily be traced to the Bank Association, that league of cormorants, who are stealing $30,000,000 of bounty annually from the overtaxed people; that league of monopolists which, with $135,000,000,000 of surplus profits now in reserve to battle liberty and defy government, proclaim through their Jay Gould organ, that "No act of Congress can overcome or resist the decision of the American Bankers' Association." They lie. They know they lie. Congress has just told them so. If Congress cannot resist them the people can. And if Congress does not cut off the last dollar of their stealing monopoly, the people will—fairly if they can, forcibly if they must.

STEPHEN D. DILLAYE.

IOWA NATIONALS.

Platform Adopted at the Des Moines Convention.

Whereas, Throughout our entire country the value of real estate is depreciated, industry paralyzed, trade depressed, business incomes and wages reduced, unparalleled distress inflicted upon the poorer and middle ranks of our people, the land filled with fraud, embezzlement, bankruptcy, crime, suffering, pauperism and starvation; and

Whereas, This state of things has been brought about by legislation in the interest of and dictated by money-lenders, bankers and bondholders; and

Whereas, The limiting of the legal-tender quality of greenbacks, the changing of currency bonds into coin bonds, the demonetizing of the silver dollar, the exempting of bonds from taxation, the contraction of the circulating medium, the proposed forced resumption of specie payments, and the prodigal waste of the public lands, were crimes against the people, and, so far as possible, the results of these criminal acts must be counteracted by judicious legislation:

1. We demand the unconditional repeal of the Specie-Resumption act of Jan. 14, 1875, and the abandonment of the present suicidal and destructive policy of contraction.
2. We demand the abolition of the national banks, and the issue of a full legal-tender paper money by the Government, and receivable for all dues, public and private.
3. We demand the remonetization of the silver dollar, making it a full legal-tender for the payment of all coin bonds of the Government, and for all other debts, public and private, and that the coinage of silver shall be placed on the same footing as that of gold.
4. Congress shall provide the said money adequate to a full employment, an equitable distribution of products, and the requirements of business.
5. We demand that Congress shall not, under any circumstances, authorize the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of any kind or class.
6. The adoption of an American monetary system as proposed herein will harmonize all difference in regard to tariff and Federal taxation, distribute equitably the joint earnings of capital and labor, secure to producers of wealth the results of their labor and skill, muster out of service a vast army of idlers, who, under the existing system, grow rich upon the earnings of others, that every man or woman may, by their own efforts, secure a competency, so that overgrown fortunes and extreme poverty will be seldom found within the limits of our republic.
7. The Government should, by general enactment, encourage the development of our agricultural, mineral, mechanical, manufacturing, and commercial resources, to the end that labor may be fully and profitably employed, but no monopolies should be legalized.
8. The public lands are the common property of the whole people, and should not be sold to speculators, nor granted to railroads or other corporations, but should be donated to actual settlers in limited quantities.
9. It is inconsistent with the genius and spirit of popular government that any species of private or corporative property should be exempt from bearing its just share of public burdens.
10. While the interests of labor and the producing classes throughout the nation are identical, North, South, East, and West, and while it is a historic fact that the war of the Rebellion was inaugurated in the interests of a class kindred to that which oppresses us, therefore, we declare that the Government of the United States shall never pay any part or portion of what is known as the Confederate or rebel debt.
11. We demand a constitutional amendment fixing the compensation of all State officers, including members and employes of the General Assembly. We demand a general reduction of county and court expenses, with a reduction of offices, to lessen oppressive taxes.
12. We demand that all just and legal means shall be used for the suppression of the evils of intemperance. We invite the considerate judgment of our fellow-citizens of all political parties upon these, our principles and purposes, and solicit the co-operation of all men in furtherance of them, as we do believe that upon their acceptance or rejection by the people the weal or woe of our beloved country depends.

Free use of quinine has made many young people of Memphis almost blind.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

Speech of Senator Voorhees, of Indiana.

Following is an extract from the remarks of Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, delivered recently at Terre Haute, Ind.:

I intend to consider the responsibility of parties somewhat, because I know how sore and restless becomes the heart of man under trial, and this soreness and restlessness afflicts Democrats sometimes as well as those of other parties. It has been seventeen years, gentlemen, since the Democratic party has had the power either to enact a law or defeat a bill in the American Congress. So that, without dwelling upon the calamities and miseries that have afflicted the land, and have brought bankruptcy, misery and want, I say every bit of it has arisen without your complicity or mine; every law on the statute books on the great paramount question now in the public mind, the finances, has been enacted by our Republican friends. Now not one was ever placed there by Democratic votes. The law of 1862 that founded the national debt, originating the bonded system; the law which changed the contract in 1869 from the well-known terms, by which the people could have paid this debt in the same money with which they paid the soldier for his life and blood, that law and all subsequent legislation that has brought paralysis, ruin, distress and misery upon the land, is to be charged not to you and myself, my Democratic friends, thank God. It would be a load I would not want to bear. It is to be charged to the Republican party. I am speaking of those who have been in power and have abused power, and against whom your wrath is turned to-night perhaps as strongly as mine. There is one party, and one party alone, that has brought affliction to the poor man in this country. Tell me where, tell me when, the Democratic party has had the power to shape the financial policy of the country. Tell me where and tell me when it has by any vote fastened any of these evils upon the country, and then I will be prepared to listen to men who are saying that our skirts are stained with wrong and crime as well as the Republican party. American history upon this subject is plain. The money-loving, money-getting power of the United States have changed the laws when they did not suit them. They have done this not by Democratic votes, but in spite of them, and I challenge a single instance in the record of the country to the contrary, so that I feel in standing as I stood in the Senate of the United States during the last winter I have been acting in harmony with the Democratic party in opposing from the beginning the financial policy of what has brought to your homes the misery with which you are afflicted. When men ask me whether, in taking the stand I have taken, I expect to remain in the Democratic party (and I have been written to on this point) I tell them that when this issue was first made in 1866, and made by a Democrat, Geo. H. Pendleton, I took my stand in that year and canvassed Indiana upon it, and again in 1868. I never made such a canvass in my life as I did of this district upon this subject, when I carried it by about 150 majority, overcoming a Republican majority of about 1,500. I have made my record inside the Democratic party. Do I need to go outside the Democratic party to sustain the record I have made within its ranks, upon this great question during the past twelve years, ever since it was inaugurated? I think not—but I think what I have built up as a Democrat I can stand by as a Democrat. But, my fellow-citizens, while it is sometimes said Indiana is all right, and while the humble speaker who is addressing you is all right, we do not know whether we can trust to the future; we do not know whether we can trust this public man or that, and sometimes I have heard it said they do not know whether they can trust me. This always comes from men who have been active upon what is called the greenback policy only about two years. I tell them I am a pioneer. I started out on that line when most of them were denouncing and battling the Democratic party. I reared aloft the banner in this district, when you who are now the loudest in saying you cannot trust me were battling to sustain the Republican party in all its enormous legislation that has now brought ruin and desolation to the country. I think, gentlemen, if I could trust them they could trust me. But, my fellow citizens, let us take a little broader view of this question. Democrats are appealed to and approached often in this way; while Indiana is all right and certain public men are all right, still the national Democratic party cannot be trusted on this question. The great national Democratic party is not in unison upon it. You must remember that the Democratic party is a very large party. It would be strange if there was not some variety of opinion. What is the vote of the United States? In 1876 the American people polled 8,400,000 votes. Of these votes the Democratic party polled four million two hundred and some odd thousand. They cast 150,000 more votes than the Republican party. They cast 75,000 more votes than for all the other candidates. Four millions and a quarter of men comprised the Democratic party at the last election. It will be over 5,000,000 next time. As I have said, we have not had power in the Federal Congress for seventeen years; but let us see what progress we have been making in opposing the Republican party which has brought the country to its present condition. Have we made progress, my Democratic brethren? Are you satisfied that we are approaching power, and that we will soon enter into the fruition of all our hopes, or are we so far from accomplishing anything that you must look in some other direction. Last October a year ago, we not only polled more votes than all other parties together? as I have said, but out of the thirty-seven States of the Union there were twenty-one in which there are Democratic Governors. But, say you, are you harmonious in principle? Reasonably so. I tell you here to-night, upon my personal responsibility, that, if it be true that Eastern influences have, in times gone by, shaped the policy of the Democratic party, the engine is now reversed, and the West and South will govern and shape the policy of the Democratic party as evinced by recent votes that I saw recorded this winter. The great agricultural valley of the Mississippi is united now, from the everlasting snows of its fountain to the everlasting summer of its mouth. When the votes came this winter I watched them closely, and saw the great valley States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Michigan, the Northwestern States, upon these great questions of domestic economy and the policy of our home affairs, casting their votes almost, if not entirely, solidly together, enough so to insure the future control of the Democratic party in the interests of the laboring people of the United States. But it is not sectional; no, gentlemen, in that respect even it will not be sectional. The Democratic party of Pennsylvania, in its heart, stands just where you do to-night. Aye, further—and I speak words that will go beyond your ears—seven-tenths of the voting population of New York, and more than half of New England this night, on these questions that are now paramount in the public mind—the questions of finance, the questions of taxation, the policy that should govern our relations to our public creditors—stand to-night as we do, and I have reason to know it. Instead of being a disunited party, the Democratic party is substantially a united party.

The majority has declared itself, and as we, when we were in the minority in the national conventions, have submitted and gone together for a common purpose, so will those that are outnumbered now, by the policy I speak of, governed by the West and the South, submit, and I predict such a movement of the people under the policy of the Democratic party, from this time forward, as has not been seen, my old friends, since Jackson made his war on the money power in the name of the people.

Democratic State Ticket.

For Secretary of State,
J. G. SHANKLIN, of Vanderburgh County.
For Auditor of State,
MARLON D. MANSON, of Montgomery Co.
For Treasurer of State,
WILLIAM FLEMING, of Allen County.
For Attorney General,
THOMAS W. WOOLLEN, of Johnson Co.
For Superintendent of Public Instruction,
J. H. SMART, of Allen County.

—Now make the greenback a full legal tender, reissuing the full amount of $400,000,000, retire the National bank currency, and substitute the greenback thereof, reduce the rate of interest and in one short year this country will again be on the road to prosperity.—Col. City Post.

That is the Democratic State platform in a condensed form.

—Wm. M. Tweed, the notorious "Boss" of New York, died in Ludlow prison last Friday at noon. Justice was pretty well meted out to him for his crimes of robbery, but there are others in high position upon whom no retribution has yet fallen, for similar crimes. Some have escaped through corrupt influences, and technicalities, and this one, out of a hundred others, has met the fate of human justice.

—Congressman Hamilton, of the Ft. Wayne District, made a dunce of himself by calling especial attention to his fearlessness in voting for Field for doorkeeper of the House. Little Hamilton will discover in due course the he chose a very poor way for seeking notoriety.—Ligonier Banner.

As Mr. Hamilton has signally failed as a legislator it don't make much difference what he does now. Money will scarcely get him a nomination for a third term.

—One of our exchanges says that three Democratic Doorkeepers of the House have been been bounced since the Democrats have had control. Besides Mr. Polk, Fitzhugh is the only one who has been discharged, and that for writing a silly letter. Even Ben Butler said Mr. Polk was innocent of any crime and voted against his being ousted. We are glad to know that it is does not take much to require an officer to step down and out in a Democratic body. Quite a change from the way Republicans were wont to do.

—In speaking of the campaign in Indiana, the Enquirer says it would be a balm to the soul to know that still waters run deep in the political world as well as the physical. The Democracy of Indiana could then retire to their couches with calm content, feeling that the stream that is gently bearing them along on its placid bosom was fathomless. May be it is. It is to be hoped so, and that its current will prove resistless in October. But a state ticket has been in the field for almost two months and the fact has almost been forgotten. True, the enemy will not show themselves before June, but that certainly ought not to relieve the Democracy form the duty of organizing and marshaling their forces and drilling them thoroughly and infusing a little enthusiasm now. It will be found to be of service when the day of battle comes.

—There has been some change in the situation of affairs abroad, since our last issue, and on the whole the aspect is perhaps less warlike. The dailies are filled with dispatches, confusing and contradictory in character, so that we do not copy any of them. England still maintains an attitude of menace, and Russia one of defiance, but neither makes any definite move. Germany under the control of Bismark, means to preserve the peace if possible, and her voice will be reasonably potent. Austria gives no positive signs as to which belligerent she will favor, if either. The little kingdom of Greece is perhaps as anxious for war as anybody, hoping with the aid of England to wipe off old scores against Turkey. So that although the outlook is possibly less warlike, it cannot reasonably be said to be any more pacific.

Beecher at Bay.

The following card was sent to the New York papers on Tuesday:

"To Mr. Ira B. Wheeler:

"MY DEAR SIR—A few weeks since, after long months of merited anguish, I sold, as you know, a few friends whom I had biterly deceived that the charge brought by my husband of adultery between myself and the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was true, and that the lie I had lived so well the last four years had become intolerable to me. That statement I now solemnly reaffirm, and leave the truth with God, to whom also I commit myself, my children and all who must suffer. I know full well the explanation that will be sought by many for the acknowledgement—a desire to return to my husband, insanity, malice, everything save the true and only one—my quickened conscience and sense of what is due to the cause of truth and justice. During all the complications of these years you have been my confidential friend, and therefore I address this letter to you, authorizing and requesting you to secure its publication.

"(Signed) ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

"Brooklyn, April 13, 1878.

To this Beecher responds with a denial. At this late date there is no good reason why Mrs. Tilton should make this avowel, except for those she assigns in her card.

—Wanted at the New York Store, 100,000 lbs. of wool, for which the highest market price will be paid.

Junction Items.

—Whit., who stole your bottles.

—F. W., J. & S. pay car Tuesday last. How the boys smile.

—W. Brown, of Columbia City, gave us a call Wednesday of last week.

—We had some mighty men at the Junction Saturday. We mean mighty full of whisky.

—We understand that Plumstead was flat when a boy. This accounts for the bend in his legs.

—Bill Britton was seen to pass the Junction with "pill bags." When did you commence practice, Bill?

—J. Whittington is glass slinger at Mathews' saloon. Geo. Clark has engaged Mr. Mathews for the season.

—The new siding at this point will be completed in a few days. Roadmaster Jordan knows how to rush things.

—The boys at the depot request the boys from Auburn who loaf around the office and among them, to please read the notice on the door.

—The heading factory of S. McNabb has been standing still for the past week on account of bad roads, making it impossible to get bolts.

—Mrs. J. J. Martin, who has been spending the past four or five weeks with friends at South Whitley, returned home last Saturday. J. J. is happy again.

—The F. W., J. & S. passenger train No. 3, was detained some time at this place Friday evening by a car which was thrown off the track while switching in the yard.

—Mr. F. ate, well we can't say positive, but think about sixteen griddle cakes Sunday morning, and said he could have ate more, but did not wish to make a pig of himself. Will some one please tell us how many it takes to make a hog.

—Those ladies from Auburn should not exercise so much partiality and bestow all their good gifts upon Mr. P., when they visit the Junction again for I like bouquets. The regardless order Swihart got undoubtedly accounts for it.

PERKINS.

St. John and New Era Items.

—School commenced last Monday. Ralph says he didn't see a stick.

—J. W. Murray, the young agent at Era wont go to Sunday school. Explain J. W.

—We noticed a good many farmers digging drains on their land, and several car loads of tile have arrived the past month.

—O. Broughton has been using his team and big boy, scraping the roads around here. If our farmers would only do the same, we would soon have a road to boast of.

—The Sunday school at the chapel had a large attendance last Sunday. We learn that there will be preaching by Rev. Meese, of Auburn, after Sunday school next Sunday. Turn out.

—Since Thomas Holmes, of Mansfield, Ohio, rented the grist mill that formerly belonged to the late John Stoner, the farmers here do not seem to be in a hurry to take their grain to Auburn, as Mr. Holmes is a firstclass miller and comes well recommended.

SOBIANAUX.

Spencerville Items.

—Cahill, the tanner, is full blast.

—M. T. Bishop has been improving his property.

—Miss M. Knight has a fine stock of millinery goods.

—J. R. Nichols is building a new fence in front of his property.

—W. S. Herrick superintends the M. E. Sunday School the coming year.

—Our new Trustee, Wm. Henderson, has resumed the duties of his office.

Services at the M. E. church Sunday April 28th. The first visit for the new pastor.

—J. R. Nichols has been appointed supervisor instead of G Barney, resigned.

—Sol. Barney desires to be Auditor of DeKalb county. Sol. is capable and deserving.

—John Farver, the painter, has moved to Jackson-tp., and exchanged the brush for the plow.

—Communion services will be held at the Lutheran church Sunday next, Rev. Erick officiating.

—Young men should not visit Leo just previous to going to see their girls They get too sleepy, you know.

—M. F. Bishop is to represent Spencerville I. O. O. F. at Grand Lodge in May. F. W. Herrick alternate.

—If you are dry go to Bishop's; Peter has repaired his pump and furnished a tin for the accommodation of the cold water army.

—The political items of the St. Joe correspondent, are not calculated to conciliate. Better temper your morter a little more.

Remember that a new stock has just been received at the Boot Up-Side Down. Great bargains on their new goods.

U can make money faster at work for us than at anything else. Capital not required; we will start you. $12 per day at home made by the industrious. Men, women, boys and girls wanted everywhere to work for us. Now is the time. Costly outfit and terms free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health. but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Attachment Notice.

Before Jacob Walborn, J. P., Union township, DeKalb county, Indiana.

Christopher Baker,
vs.
William A. Jones.

Whereas the plaintiff in this entitled cause has filed with me his affidavit and bond in attachment, and a summons having been issued and returned not found, a writ of attachment having also been issued thereon and returned, and a summons in garnishment has also been issued against the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad Company, and they having answered that they are indebted to the defendant in this entitled cause to a certain amount, and it also appears that said defendant is a non-resident of the state of Indiana.

Therefore the said defendant and all persons interested are hereby notified that said cause is set for trial on the 1st day of June, 1878, at 10 o'clock a. m., of said day, before me, the undersigned at my office, in the town of Auburn, Union township, DeKalb county, Indiana.

Our new house in a new part of the street. All our furniture was new; all our friends were new; our silverware was new; our carriage was new; harness gold-plated, was new; we were new; and we wanted a new baby but we had to wait a reasonable time. Our friends were new; our hall chairs with the new coat of arms, to the grand piano with the new action, and up-stairs, again, to the new fire escape, all things of high polish, in our new room, 8 Columbia-st. West, for cheap china, glass ware, silver plated ware. We warrant all our Meriden Britanna Company brand of Silver Plated Ware.

On and after May the 1st, we shall be at our new store, No. 8 Columbia street. Do not fail to look for the Big Iron Dog.

Respectfully, H. N. WARD.

—The members of the German Reformed church, north of Cedar Creek, near Union town, offer a reward of $20 for the apprehension of the party who took an organ from their church on the night of April 2nd, and the return of said instrument. Any persons who have taken an organ on trial since that time would do well to communicate with the officers of the church, if the instrument is a Jubilee organ, with six stops, with octave coupler, &c. In addition to the above the Sheriff has offered a reward of $10.

—While you are looking around for a new vehicle, now that the roads are getting better, do not fail to call and see the splendid buggies manufactured by Jas. Anderson, on Seventh-st. He has several on hand from which you can judge of his work. He puts in the best material, and they are not thrown together in order to sell them cheap. His prices are low for a good buggy, and he will give you a good bargain. He makes a splendid double seated buggy for family purposes, that everybody ought to have. Call at his shop and examine them.

—MR. EDITOR—In the name of common decency, when the gentlemen comprising the literary association of this place, get another lecturer to come here, especially if the party be a lady, let them see to it that she be met at the depot, and conducted to a hotel in a manner that will spare her the necessity of being carried back and forth upon the streets in a mail wagon, as an exhibition for vulgar mouthed street loafers and idle boys. It is no excuse for the Committee who should have seen to the matter that they did not know on what train Ann Eliza Young would come, that could easily have been ascertained had the committee been a little less stupid. ARGUS.

—The plodding, croaking tradesman will tell you that it does not pay to advertise, and consequently as he never makes his business known through the columns of the newspaper he is a mere cipher in the commercial world, and if the grass does not grow in front of his store, he is pretty effectually lost to view in the busy hum of life by the dust kicked up by his more succesful competors who advertise. Let it be borne in mind that the avenue to success in business is through the printing press, and those dealers that turn their backs upon the "great lever that upturns worlds" will discover when to late that they have been distanced in the race for wealth by those who patronized the printer.

—We regret to learn of the partial destruction of the neigboring town of Albion by fire on Sunday morning of last week. Ten business rooms, and a large amount of other property was consumed. The New Era estimates the loss at about $12,000, with no insurance. The fire originated in a barn, in which four horses were burned to death. Judge Clapp lost three frame buildings and R. L. Stone one. Of course the town was unprepared to fight the element and they contribute twelve thousand dollars to no purpose when half of that would have furnished them with good facilities. Auburn, in the light of this experience, will pass it by unheeding, knowing full well that a similiar visitation may fall upon us, with scarcely any better means of protection.

MR. EDITOR:—The law approved March 14, '77, provides that "in city and town elections, each ward shall constitute a precinct," and that the trustees shall appoint three qualified voters in each precinct to act as a board of electors, and must each have been freeholders and a resident house-holder for at least a year before such elections, shall be of different political parties and who are not candidates, &c. If any person shall vote or offer to vote in a ward or precinct, except in which he resides, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and be punished by imprisonment in the State's prison, not less than one year nor more than five.

Now, Mr. Editor, are we and all the rest of the little villages in the State to have an election in each ward in town? Have four more boards of electors than are necessary—twenty extra men when only five would do? all this at an extra expense to the tax-payers of at least a hundred dollars. If this is the law and it is printed in our statute books, wasn't the last legislature the simplest fools that ever enacted a law? What say our city fathers and the law officers of the town on this subject. Y.

—Wheat, $1.15.

—Town election next month.

—Cushion carom is the game at Sam's —Byron Rainier is working for Cook Ford.

—To-morrow, on the Nineth street grounds.

—Joe Hunter of Huntertown was in town yesterday.

—A pair of mares was stolen at Avilla Tuesday night.

—H. E. Little, wife and son spent Sabbath last in Corunna.

—Frank Griswold is at Gov. Casebeer's restaurant, Garrett.

—Mr. Baldock has torn down the old barn in the rear end of his lot.

—Frank Strebe caught two fish last week that weighed ten pounds.

—A good many shade trees have been planted along our streets lately.

—Miss Hattie Casebeer gave a party to her little friends Tuesday last.

—Rev. Ervin has moved into the Jones property in the south end of the city.

—A horse belonging to Dr. S. Stough, died on the streets at Waterloo, the other day.

—Smith & Parker, of Newville, made an assignment last week, in the dry goods trade.

—The shed on Rainier's store room opposite the Auburn House, fell down Tuesday night.

—The fine blooded horse brought from the east by Gust Leas, finds many admirers among horsmen.

—Mr. Cool, we understand, will convert the rooms in the third story of his building into a dancing hall.

—J. P. Widney, Esq., will remove to Mansfield in a few days, and James Draggoo will locate in Pensylvania.

—Clarksville, Tenn., was visited by a destructive fire last Saturday night, suffering a loss of about half a million dollars.

—Mr. W. H. McIntyre is improving the looks of his property on corner of VanBuren and Nineth streets, by planting shade trees.

—Jeff Meyers has been sent to the penitentiary again from Fort Wayne, for two years for stealing. There's no place like home.

—The Butler Nickel Steel Plows are now for sale at J. Beuret's Hardware store. Call and examine before purchasing elsewhere.

—Our young friend Wm. E. Dannells was married, April 14th, to Miss Eudora Pifer, at the residence of the bride's parents. Success go with you.

—The Garrett Herald now say the "County Supervisors" was an oversight. That's right Bro. Powell, fix it up and be more careful in the future.

—The little store on the corner is keeping a fine stock of raisins, English currants, pared peaches, prunes, maple sugar, dates and other good things.

—We are glad to learn that Rev. J. W. Welch, formerly pastor of the M. E. church here, has been promoted to an eldership. A deserved compliment.

—We have received a communication from some one about the conduct of one of our married citizens, but of course we cannot publish it, as the name of the author is not submitted.

—The old livery stable back of the Court House will be opened the first of May by Cook Ford, who will give every accommodation to the old patrons of that barn. 2t.

—Capt. Smurr, of Antwerp, was in town Monday. The Captain was formerly a resident of this county, and is now proprietor of the St. Cloud hotel at the above place.

—Our special correspondent, A. C. Dawson, Esq., left for the golden shores of the Pacific last Tuesday. He has promised us several interesting letters from that delightful clime.

—A fine new Court House, to cost $100,000, is being constructed at Wabash, and the laying of the corner stone will take place on the 8th of May, at which time a large attendance is expected.

—Patronize home when you can do as well as you can abroad. The Butler Nickel Steel Plow cannot be excelled and our farmers should try it. Call and see them at Beuret's Hardware store, Auburn.

—The old livery and feed stable east of the Court House, lately occupied by Mr. Cool, will be opened May 1st by Cook Ford, who will be pleased to accommodate all the old patrons of the place. 2t.

—Another meeting will be held by the citizens of South Auburn on the first Saturday evening in May, at the Baltimore Elevators, to further consider the matter of constructing a walk between the two railroads.

The Lecture by Mrs. Young.

The Presbyterian church was not densely packed last Friday evening, to hear Mrs. Ann Eliza Young, in her delightful lecture on "Mormonism." Personally she is a handsome, finely developed woman, above the average size, and makes a noble dignified appearance. Intellectually she possesses a power seldom attained by her sex, and is using it unselfishly in a brave and noble work. By her uncompromising hostilitys to the religion in which she was reared to womanhood, a religion "worse than all other religions invented by man," a religion that "dishonors, disgraces and brutalizes," basing "salvation on a system of concubinage," a "menace to the republic, and defiant treason," she stands in the forefront to-day dealing powerful blows in the cause of virtue and right. What a nation has been tardy at redressing, she attacks with all the vehemence of a strong, sensitive mind. While her lecture must naturally run in the channel of personal experience it was largely relieved by beautiful description, thrilling narration and masterly expression of firm convictions, the whole being delivered in clear pure English. It was a treat that more could have enjoyed had they been present.

—Mr. Markle, of the Central House, traded his fine Norman Stallion some time ago for some western land, receiving a deed and abstract of the same, all properly filled out and signed. A few weeks ago on sending the deed to be recorded, in the county where the land was, the Recorder notified him that the instrument was a base forgery, and the party did not own the land. Last Friday Mr. Markle ascertained the horse was still at Pierceton, and got out a writ of replevin and now he has the horse at home. He intends to have the fellow indicted for forgery.

—Dr. Yarnell's next regular mothly visit to DeKalb county will occur at Long's hotel at Waterloo, Friday April 26th. His practice in the treatment of chronic diseases, and the manufacture of surgical appliances, for the correction of physical deformities, has so largely increased that he will be unable hereafter to spend but one day each month in this county, and as Waterloo is more convenient for him than Auburn he will continue his visits there during the whole year upon the 26th of every month.

—Friend Weamer, formerly of the Auburn Republican, is now the proprietor of the neatest little fruit and confectionary store in DeKalb county. Success to him.—Ex.

So say we. And if about a half dozen others who are now engaged in the newspaper business in Northern Indiana were to follow Mr. Weamer's example they would be much more in their element and could render themselves far more serviceable than in their present avocation —Ligonier Banner.

Our idea exactly, but we never had the language to express it so well.

JUST RECEIVED.

We have been receiving this week a fine new lot of Boots and Shoes, which we have marked down very low. Come in and see them, at the Boot Up-side Down.

—Notice is hereby given that a meeting of all those interested in the Hamilton Cemetery, will be held at the church building in Hamilton, Steuben county, Ind., on the 1st day of May, 1878, at 1 o'clock, p. m., for the purpose of electing a board of trustees, and taking into consideration the repairs necessary thereto.

—As Gov. Williams was passing along the street in Indianapolis on April Fool's Day, he spied a pocket book lying on the sidewalk. He picked it up and found therein about twenty dollars. It had been passed by hundreds, who were to sharp to be caught that way. The Govenor has the laugh all on his own side.

—To-morrow is the proposed day for the first interesting game of base ball, and all interested should be present to witness the game and assist in selecting the standard nine for the season. With a little assistance on the part of the citizens, we can have the best club in the county.

—Mr. N. B. Nabor removed to North Manchester lost Tuesday. Mr. N. will still engage in the lumber trade. We regret to loose so good a citizen. Mr. Jacob Mitchel, at the lower saw mill, will act as Mr. Nabor's agent, and give all necessary information as to walnut timber and lumber.

—Ed. Kelhum, Esq., residing a few miles west of Garrett, raised the frame for a magnificent barn yesterday. The neighbors turned out to the number of about eighty, to assist and enjoy that rare old English hospitality of their host.

—What has become of the Ft. Wayne edition of the COURIER? Our stomachs have become sufficiently settled to swallow another thin dose —Press.

It strikes us that that is about the only kind of a dose the editor of that paper ever gives or takes.

—It is hinted that the election of Mr. Plum, as assessor was a ruse of the democracy to get Jerry off the legislative track this fall.—Press.

We have a suspicion that it was connived at by the Republicans to get Meese on that track.

Commissioners' Proceedings.

The Board of Commissioners met in special session april 8th and transacted the following business:

Richland Center Items.

—Farmers jubilant.

—Fruit prospects splendid.

—The Sabbath School, at this place, was re-organized last Sunday.

—Amos Crat, reported drowned in a pond near Sixteen recently, has recovered.

—John Hosler, our boss farmer, has recently plowed four acres in one day. John eats his breakfast by a tallow candle and his supper by moonlight.

—A grand serenade took place on the east bank of the little Cedar Creek last Wednesday night, for the purpose of clearing out a house of illrepute. It is hoped that the parties were successful

UNCLE JOE.

—Jim. Anderson sold several new buggies this week.

Garrett Items.

—It is reported that our park is to be fenced.

—John Paul started last week for Kansas to see the country.

—The new grist mill is doing a good business although the roads have been bad.

—Bicknell is going to enlarge his store room and make his building one story higher.

—Business on the B. & O. is slack at present, but considerable works ahead in the shops.

—Considerable work was done last week on Randolph and Quincy streets which greatly added to their appearance.

—Some of the persons who went to hear Ann Eliza, appear quite melancholy since, and try to cheer up by huming that sweet old air "Old Virginia."

—Dr. Norman returned last week to Miskingum county, Ohio. The Doctor located here last fall after a tour through the west. His family will follow him soon.

—Target shooting appears to be quite a sensation among some of the B. & O. engineers. They were practicing at a three hundred yard range last week, at which distance some excellent shots were made.

—Dr. Saber left last week for Cincinnati, it is said, to attend the medical college. He traded his property here for Michigan land. Dr. Saber was one of the first physicians in Garrett We only have two physicians left to heal all our ails, and one attorney to settle all our disputes.

—Our "Moral Spectator" is engaged in playing "Ten Nights in a Bar Room' He played two nights last week in Thienel's saloon, and has eight nights to play yet, after which he is going to write a "moral" essay on the spurious adulteration of liquors, and also explain the game known as "pedro"—was "pedroed" out of a few Saturday night. "Morality is a good subject to write on ain't it? Fill them up again. X.

LaOtto Items.

—Keep your eye on the patent right man.

—Give us a rest on temperance lectures.

—Jack Leighty started for Kansas last Monday.

—The drug store has moved across the way.

—The streets were crowded with teams last Saturday.

—A greenback ball will be given at Bruce's Hall Friday evening, the 19th.

George Berry and wife visited with Mr. B's. parents at this place last Sunday.

—The Dramatic troupe at Swan, is about prepared to give another exhibition.

—Wyatt of Churubusco, shipped a car load of hogs from this place last Saturday.

—The Sunday Schools of this place are in quite a prosperous condition. 50 scholars to each school.

—LaOtto Market: Wheat $110 @ 120 corn 40c, oats 28c, butter 15c, eggs 8c, lard 9c, hides 7c, tallow 8c.

—Last Sunday, while coming to church, John Hogue's horses ran away, upsetting the vehicle, in which were Mr. and Mrs. Hogue, throwing them out, but fortunately without injury to either.

—If there is a heaven on earth for grand frauds, LaOtto is that place. The viler the imposter, the more certain is his hold on the poor credulous dupes, who gobble him in as though an angel direct from the celestial throne.

—Bert Ricket, Swan correspondent, stated through the Standard, that LaOtto would stand in need of a lock-up, for the special benefit of some of the newly elected officers. Naughty Bert, if LaOtto had a lock-up, where would you be.

—LaOtto has a scandal, not a one horse scandal, but a whole team with a dog under the wagon scandal. We but begin to realize what we live for. We yearned for something to turn up, but in our wildest moment we never thought of such a thing, never. We sometimes fear tis but a dream, something not real, but we assure you it is a genuine old scandal. Look for full particulars next week.

DANIEL.

Corunna Items.

—Ed. Orr and John Stonebraker have built a board fence along their farms.

—Mr. Haub, a short distance east of town, is erecting a new dwelling house.

—James Finch left last week for Cincinnatti with a car load of horses. Jim will give up the livery business, we learn.

—The operators have change positions and Cade McMillen is now at Striker, and a young man from Ligonier is operating here.

—School was to commence Monday, but owing to there being no teacher to the primary department it was postponed until Monday next.

—Robbers entered the residence of Jesse Brumback and took therefrom clothing, watches, and various other things. It is stated that Mr. B. had received a large sum of money on the day previous to the burglary, but the party were unfortunate in finding it.

—A little girl named Mildred Kline met with a severe accident last week. She was playing in the field, at the residence of L. D. Britton, and reached through the fence and caught a small pig. The little girl did not notice the old sow, and was caught by the hand in the jaws of this monster, and in the struggle to free herself she lost a finger.

St. Joe Items.

—Weather fine and farmers happy.

—Farmers are busy plowing and sowing oats.

—Good fishing in the St. Joe, but few fish are being caught. A fisherman's luck, etc.

—Mrs. J. D. Leighty, of this place, should have the premium among the ladies on washing days. Her washings are always on the line by 7 o'clck Monday mornings and some people think she does not sleep at all Sunday nights.

—Pinte, who was your item gatherer at this place, caught a tartar when he itemized Mrs. G. Simonton, several weeks ago. Several of the ladies of that corner came down pretty severely. Go slow ladies, its always darkest just before day. We meant no harm in advertising where tramps could get a good square meal.

—A chap, calling himself a man (and he was big enough) called at the residence of Jimmy Ryan to serve a summons, claiming to be a constable, and learning that Jimmy was not at home used indecent language to the old lady, and for his impudence got the broom handle over his head. A warrant was issued by Justice Fales but the chap made himself scarce. Our advice to him is to keep clear of old Jimmy.

—Parties visiting Kansas can save money by calling on or addressing, T. H. SPROTT, Agent for the Mo. River, Ft. Scott & Gulf, and Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fee R. R. lands, at Auburn. Excursion on Mo. R., Ft. S. & G. R. R., April 23d, and on the A., T. & S. F. R. R. April 24.

FIVE.

"But a week is so long!" he said,
With a toss of his curly head.
"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven!—
Seven whole days! Why, in six, you know
(You said it yourself—you told me so),
The great God up in heaven
Made all the earth and the seas and skies,
The trees and the birds and the butterflies!
How can I wait for my seeds to grow?"

"But a month is so long!" he said,
With a droop of his boyish head.
"Hear me count—one, two, three, four—
Four whole weeks, and three days more;
Thirty-one days, and each will creep
As the shadows crawl over yonder steep;
Thirty-one nights, and I shall lie
Watching the stars climb up the sky!
How can I wait till a month is o'er?"

"But a year is so long!" he said,
Uplifting his bright young head.
"All the seasons must come and go
Over the hills with footsteps slow—
Autumn and winter, summer and spring;
Oh, for a bridge of gold to fling
Over the chasm deep and wide,
That I might cross to the other side,
Where she is waiting—my love, my bride!"

"Ten years may be long," he said,
Slow raising his stately head,
"But there's much to win, there is much to lose;
A man must labor, a man must choose,
And he must be strong to wait!
The years may be long, but who would wear
The crown of honor must do and dare!
No time has he to toy with fate
Who would climb to manhood's high estate!"

"Ah! life is not long!" he said,
Bowing his grand white head.
"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven!—
Seven times ten are seventy.
Seventy years! As swift their flight
As swallows cleaving the morning light,
Or golden gleams at even.
Life is short as a summer night—
How long, O God! is eternity?"

THE CAPTURE OF JEFF DAVIS.

Narrative of the Event by Col. Pritchard, of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry.

Col. D. B. Pritchard, of Allegan, Mich., has contributed to The Journal of that town a long account of the capture of Jefferson Davis by the Fouth Michigan cavalry in 1865. Col. Prichard says he does not make this statement from personal choice, but from a sense of justice, as it has been assumed in certain quarters that the story of Davis' disguise in woman's dress is no longer believed. He says:

The orders under which I acted were received from Col. R. H. G. Minty, commanding the Second division of the cavalry corps, Military Division of the Mississippi, and from whom, on the afternoon of Sunday, May 7, 1865, I received direct orders to report immediately to him in person for instructions. On my arrival he detailed to me the information received by Gen. Wilson from his forces in the direction of Augusta regarding the movements southward of the principal parties connected with the Confederate Government, and the desire to effect their capture if possible, directing me to proceed with my regiment, the Fourth Michigan cavalry, from its camp near Macon, Ga., down the southerly side of the Ocmulgee river a distance of seventy-five or one hundred miles, to take possession of all the fords and ferries below Hawkinsville, and to picket the river and scout the country north and south of the river as thoroughly as my command would permit. Certain places appearing upon the maps were thought to be desirable points for establishing the headquarters of my regiment, but that matter was left to my own discretion upon arriving upon the ground; and, if pursuit became necessary, I was authorized to disregard all points and communications, and pursue as far as might be deemed necessary, even to the Gulf or the ocean.

In obedience to the orders above stated, which were verbal and strictly secret, I moved with my command from camp at Macon, at 8 o'clock the same evening, pursuing the main highway leading down the south side of the Ocmulgee river, in the general direction therewith, leaving everything in camp which might in any way impede our free and rapid movement. As this article is not intended to describe in detail the incidents of the march, I will simply say that we pressed forward by rapid forced marches, night and day, only halting long enough to feed and rest our horses, until the 9th day of May, at 3 o'clock p. m., when we arrived at Abbyville, seventy-five miles from Macon, where we first struck the trail of what proved to be the train of the Davis party, and which had gone on in the direction of Irwinsville the night before. Here we also met Lieut. Col. Harnden, commanding a detachment of the First Wisconsin cavalry, with whom a brief consultation was held, when it was decided that we could not plan any concerted action for the two commands, and that each had better act independently; and then we separated. Col. Harnden with his command pursuing the train on the direct road to Irwinsville, with the announced intention on his part of pressing through to that place that night before going into camp, I continued my march down the river, after sending Company H of my regiment, under Lieut. Fisk, to take possession of Brown's ferry, one mile and a half above Abbyville. After moving three miles further we met persons who gave us additional information regarding the character of the train, and also of the roads. Learning that there was another road leading into Irwinsville, from a point known as Wilcox's mills, about fifteen miles below Abbyville, I decided to press forward by this road in the direction of Irwinsville, believing that, if Mr. Davis was traveling apart from the train, as he was reported as doing, communicating with it from time to time, he would be likely to be traveling on the road which I proposed to take; and, if Col. Harnden pressed through to Irwinsville as he expected to when we separated, we would place them between us, and thus greatly increase the chances of a capture.

I accordingly ordered a detail of 150 of the best-mounted men of my regiment, and seven officers besides myself; but the full detail of enlisted men was not filled, owing to the jaded condition of the horses. At 4 o'clock I put the column in motion, moving still down the river road, a distance of twelve miles, to Wilcox's mills, where a halt of one hour was made to feed and cool the horses. From thence we proceeded by a blind woods road through an almost unbroken pine forest for a distance of eighteen miles, to Irwinsville, where arrived at about 1 o'clock on the morning of May 10. The roads were first closely examined in all directions, but no traces could be discovered of the passage of a train or a mounted force, at which we were much surprised, as we had confidently expected to either meet Col. Harnden at that point, or fall in rear of his command, and concluded at first that the train must have taken some other course; but, upon inquiry, and passing ourselves as Confederates, we soon learned that a considerable party had gone into camp, just at dark the evening before, about a mile and a half out of town on the Abbyville road. I at first thought it must be the First Wisconsin, but, upon further inquiry, learned that they had tents and wagons, which I knew was not the case with Col. Harnden's command. I at once turned the head of the column in that direction, impressing a negro for a guide, moving my command up to within about a half-mile of the camp, where I halted under cover of a small eminence and dismounted twenty-five men and sent them, under command of Lieut. Purinton, with instructions to make the circuit of the camp and gain a position on the road in rear of the enemy to cut off escape in that direction; to gain the position designated undiscovered, if possible, but, if discovered and alarm was raised, I would charge the camp from the front, and he was to move upon the camp from any position he might then hold; but if no alarm was raised, I should take it for granted that he had successfully executed his orders, where he should remain quiet until I should assault the camp, as I had not then decided whether I should attack at once or delay until the appearance of daylight, but finally determined upon the latter course, as the moon was getting low and the deep shadows of the forest would render it easy for parties to elude us in the darkness. After waiting in our position for about an hour and a half, and until the appearance of early dawn, I put the column quietly in motion, and was enabled to approach within a very few rods of the tents before discovery, when a charge was ordered, and in an instant the camp, with its inmates, was wholly within our power, without the necessity of firing a shot. The surprise was so complete that not the slightest show of resistance was made, the men not even having time to grasp their weapons, which were lying at their sides. The camp was located in the thick pine forest, close by a small swamp. A chain of mounted sentries, composed of a force specially designated for that duty, swept rapidly around the camp on the instant when the main force dashed into it, thus barring all possibility of escape after the completion of the circuit. This chain of sentries, under the command of an officer, were to maintain their position until all the prisoners were gathered in and placed under guard. Immediately after taking possession of the camp my Adjutant, Lieut. Dickinson, notified me that there were ladies in the tents, when I directed him to station guards at each of the tents, and allow none of the men to enter. All of the men with the party, except Mr. Davis, I believe, were sleeping on their blankets outside of the tents in different parts of the camp, partially undressed, and, as soon as they were aroused, sprung from their beds and were immediately placed under guard and allowed time to put on the balance of their clothing, which consumed several minutes, after which the prisoners were gathered together and placed under a regular detailed guard.

But before this was fairly completed, and before any of the persons occupying the tents had completed their toilet and come out, or a list of the names of the captured party had been made up, a volley was fired down the road and across the swamp alluded to, and about eighty or one hundred rods north of the camp, where the force of twenty-five dismounted men under Lieut. Purinton were stationed. I at once ordered the men to resume their places in the column. Leaving Adjt. Dickinson with a sufficient force in camp to gather the rest of the prisoners in and guard them until my return, I in person pushed forward across the swamp with the balance of the command to the aid of Lieut. Purinton, whom I supposed to be engaging the force guarding the train, but which proved to be the First Wisconsin cavalry, under Col. Harnden, whose men had come upon the force under Lieut. Purinton, and, though a misunderstanding in the challenge and response, each had taken the other for the enemy, it still being so dark that they could not distinguish the uniform; and, as I came up the road in column, mounted, we received a raking fire from a dismounted force concealed behind trees and logs, which killed one man and severely wounded Lieut. Boutelle. This sad mistake was not discovered until two men were killed in the Fourth Michigan cavalry and eight or ten men wounded in the First Wisconsin cavalry.

As soon as the firing ceased I returned to the camp, and, as I recrossed the swamp, I was met by Lieut. Dickinson, who, in a hurried way, informed me that he had carried out my orders, and said we had captured an oldish man whom he believed was Jeff Davis, and that he came out of one of the tents dressed up in woman's clothes and attempted to escape as a woman. I got the impression that Mr. Davis had refused to reveal his name up to that time, but will not be positive on the point. I rode on up to the point where the prisoners were gathered under guard, and, as I approached them, I was accosted by this man, who proved to be Mr. Davis, with the inquiry if I was the officer in command. I replied that I was, and asked him in return whom I was to call him. He replied that I might "call him what, or whoever I pleased," when I replied that I would call him Davis; and, after a moment's hesitation, he said, "That is my name." He then drew himself up in a very dignified and imposing manner, and exclaimed: "I suppose you consider it bravery to charge a train of defenseless women and children, but it is theft, it is vandalism." Davis had thrown off the garments constituting his disguise, and was clad in a suit of Confederate gray at the time of my meeting him. I then proceeded to take an inventory of our capture, when I ascertained that we had captured Jefferson Davis, wife, and four children; John H. Reagan, his Postmaster General; Cols. Johnson and Lubbock, aids-de-camp on Davis' staff; Burton N. Harrison, his Private Secretary; Maj. Munraud, Capt. Moody, and Lieut. Hathaway; Jeff D. Howell, a brother of Mrs. Davis, and Midshipman in the rebel navy; thirteen private soldiers; Miss Maggie Howell, sister of Mrs. Davis, two waiting maids, and several servants. We also captured five wagons, three ambulances, about fifteen horses and twenty-five or thirty mules. The train was principally loaded with commissary stores and private baggage, with a few arms and a few boxes of fixed ammunition.

On the morning of the 11th we resumed our march in the direction of Macon, and, on the afternoon of that day, when a few miles below Hawkinsville, we met the rest of our brigade just coming out from Macon, and received from them the first knowledge we had of President Johnson's proclamation, accompanied by Gen. Wilson's order offering a reward for the capture of Davis and others.

Retaining my independent command, I continued my march toward Macon, halting for the night two or three miles above Hawkinsville. Moving on again early on the morning of the 12th, we arrived within fifteen or twenty miles of Macon, where we again encamped for the night. At this place occurred some incidents which I deem sufficiently important to warrant a full and specific statement. It will be remembered, by those acquainted with the fact, that the cavalry command, under Gen. Wilson, had drawn no regular Government supplies since leaving camp on the Tennessee river, March 22, and had been dependent wholly upon the resources of the country for subsistence, and my command was expected to subsist by foraging while on this expedition; but, as the country through which we passed was very sparsely settled, and a great portion of the land covered with pine forests, and unproductive, we found it very difficult to gather the necessary supplies for my men and horses, and my men were really in a suffering condition for food, and, as there was a surplus of provisions in the train, I decided to distribute that surplus among my men. After we had got settled in camp that evening I went to Mr. Davis and informed him of my purpose, requesting him to have his cook set apart from his supplies a sufficient quantity to fully supply his party for a certain number of hours, by which time we would reach Macon, when they could amply be provided for. Mr. and Mrs. Davis, who were both present during the conversation, strenuously objected to the course I proposed, arguing that all the supplies in their wagons were private property, and that I had no right to take them in the manner proposed, and Mrs. Davis said she felt certain that when we got to Gen. Wilson's headquarters all their property would be returned to them and they be permitted to proceed on their journey. Discussing the matter in rather a spirited manner for a little time, I told Mr. Davis if he did not feel disposed to have his servant set apart the necessary amount of supplies I would direct my commissary to do so, after which I would distribute the remainder. Mr. Davis became very angry at that, and said he had never expected to be compelled to suffer such indignities as that, and if he could have got possession of his arms at the time of his capture he would not have been compelled to. To which I replied (perhaps a little acrimoniously, for I had become somewhat irritated at his course) that I did not think the garments worn by him on that occasion were particularly adapted to rapid locomotion or to the use of firearms; to which Mrs. Davis retorted, very sharply, saying, "I want you to understand distinctly that Mr. Davis assumed that disguise at my instance." This admission of Mrs. Davis in regard to her husband's disguise was wholly voluntary and drawn out under the circumstances above stated, and was the first conversation I had with Mr. and Mrs. Davis in person in regard to the disguise worn by the husband at the time of the capture.

On the afternoon of May 23 I received orders from the War Department, through Gen. Miles, commanding at Fortress Monroe, directing me to procure the disguise worn by Davis at the time of his capture, and proceed to Washington and report in person to the Secretary of War. Accordingly, I went over to the steamer Clyde and informed Mrs. Davis of my instructions, and asked her if she had any objections to delivering to me the garments worn by Mr. Davis as a disguise at the time of his capture, and received this very sharp and pungent reply: "Certainly not, sir, for I do not think I ever had an opportunity to donate any clothing to Mrs. Stanton before; it is, perhaps, well that my mantle should fall on the shoulders of Mrs. Stanton." Mrs. Davis then delivered to me in person, with no further compulsion than a simple request, a lady's water-proof cloak or robe of dark color, trimmed with pearl buttons, which she admitted to be the one worn by her husband as a disguise at the time of his capture. On the morning of the 24th, Capt. Hudson went over to Clyde and procured the balance of the garments worn in the disguise, which consisted of a black woolen shawl with a border. The Captain informed me that Mrs. Davis at first did not like to give up the shawl, saying she needed it for her children. He then went back to shore and purchased another shawl for her, replacing the one Mrs. Davis delivered to him. These garments were taken by me to Washington and delivered to the Secretary of War, and were thoroughly identified by the three soldiers who arrested Mr. Davis at the time he came from the tent, to-wit: Corporal George Munger and privates James F. Bullard and Andrew Bee, each of whom made sworn statements at the War Department of the facts within their knowledge concerning the disguise, and which were filed in the office of the Secretary of War. I have not copies of those sworn statements in my possession, but I have a statement made by Corporal George Munger in response to a request by Col. Robert Burns, and which I here insert:

SCHOOLCRAFT, Oct. 29, 1877.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 20th, asking for a statement of my participation in the capture of Davis, is at hand. I have had a great many calls for a statement from almost every State in the Union. I just received one from the Tribune office last week. I thought I would not say anything about it. There has been a great deal said by different ones regarding the capture of Davis. They all seem to differ more or less. If I should make a statement it would not correspond with all.

Col. Pritchard's statement is as near right as any I have seen as regards Davis' disguise. Davis had on a lady's waterproof cloak or dress, and a red and black or black and white shawl thrown over his head and shoulders, over a suit of gray clothes and a pair of cavalry boots. I do not know if Dickinson ordered Bee to let the woman pass or not, only what I heard the morning of the capture. I believe Bee was on guard at the tent. I did not see Dickinson until after Davis was taken back to the tent, and had taken off his disguise. Dickinson might have halted Davis, but not in my hearing. He certainly did not stop. He was about four rods from the tent when I first saw him. Bullard and I were changing horses as we used to do sometimes when we found better ones. Bullard had just thrown his saddle on his horse, I was just buckling on my girth, when I saw the three women, as I supposed them to be, which afterward proved to be Davis, Mrs. Davis, and Miss Howell. I said to Bullard, "Those women ought not to be allowed to go out of camp; you go and stop them." Bullard said, "You go; you have your saddle on." I mounted my horse, rode around in front of the party, and said to them, "Where are you going?" Mrs. Davis said, "With my old mother after some water." Mrs. Davis had a pail on her arm. I said, "What is she doing with those boots on?" When I saw his boots I cocked my gun and laid it across my saddle. Mrs. Davis put her hand over Davis' face, and said, "Don't shoot! You may not admire Mr. Davis' principles, but he is a reverend man." That is all that was said there. As soon as Bullard buckled his saddle, he rode up to where we were. He heard the most of this conversation. We went back to the tent with them. There Davis took off his disguise, and said he thought our Government more magnanimous than to be chasing up women and children. This is as near right as I could state it at this time.

Yours,
GEORGE MUNGER.

Married in Haste—A Sad Suicide.

We copy the following from a Baltimore paper of a recent date: The fashionable neighborhood surrounding Harlem square, in this city, was very much excited to-day over the mysterious suicide of a young man named Charles L. Smith, who was privately married last month to a young and estimable lady named Miss Mary A. T. Ederkin, a boarder in the house where the suicide and his sister resided. About midnight last night, upon retiring, a boarder discovered the corpse of a young man who had shot himself lying on the floor of his bedroom. The fact of the marriage having been secret, and the parties never having lived together, no motive could be assigned for the deed. Upon the body of the suicide two letters were found. The first was addressed to the suicide's sister, and ran as follows:

DEAR SISTER: Forgive me for what I am about to do, but I am tired of life. I asked grandpa to help me, and told him my circumstances, but he refused to do anything for me, and I being without friends or home, and nothing to do, I think I had better die. Forgive your brother CHARLIE.

The second, which was inclosed to the lady of the house, with the request to send to Mamie (his supposed fiancee), was without signature:

DEAR WIFE: It is with a breaking heart that I write to tell you of my misfortune. I lost all I had ($95) on Tuesday evening, and I could not have the heart to tell you that to-night. Forgive me, darling, if you can, and be happy, but remember, darling, that my love for you was true till death. Don't grieve for me, darling, for I am not worth a tear from those two eyes. Good-by, darling; farewell. By the time that this reaches you I will be no more.

To-day the fact of the marriage became known; also that the deceased was making preparations to go to housekeeping. The cause of the rash deed is unaccounted for, except in the loss of the money mentioned. In what manner it was lost remains a mystery.

A Dog's Application of Money.

The Quincy (Ill.) Whig tells this story: "A few evenings since, while a number of persons were chatting in a drug store, a gentleman came in, followed by a small dog. While the master was procuring some medicine, the dog walked around the store-room, and finally picked up something and ran to one of the gentlemen and attracted attention by scratching his clothing. The man looked down and noticed that the dog had a piece of paper in his mouth, but thought nothing more of it. The dog, not satisfied, repeated his apparent appeal, but not with success, and then went to his owner, who took the paper and saw it was a $10 bank-note. The dog had found it on the floor, and evidently knew it was valuable. It subsequently transpired that the money belonged to Dr. J. T. Wilson, and it was returned to him. The dog was rewarded for his sagacity by the present of a handsome new collar."

Influencing Legislation.

I have seen that, in respect of these very (Pacific railroad) companies, when danger to public interests, and danger to the credit of these companies in respect of all their creditors, including the United States, was first brought to the attention of this body, and a bill was about to be considered taking some first and mere initial step about it—I have seen officers of the companies in this very Senate Chamber on the day such a bill was to be up distributing their passes with an ostentatious impudence that was amazing. I hope it did not affect any Senator. I suppose it did not. I have seen 50 cents a line paid to affect legislation in editorials of newspapers. That is a very small price now. That was in old times. I suppose present editorials are paid for at the highest rate.—Speech of Senator Edmunds.

O'LEARY.

The Opening of the Great Pedestrian Contest in London.

[London Cor. New York Times.]

At a few minutes to 1 o'clock a. m. we entered the Agricultural Hall together. Only the press and a few friends of Sir John D. Astley were invited to be present, in addition to the trainers and servants of the competitors. The vast building, lighted by only two or three chandeliers, looked anything but festive.

Presently the clock struck an hour after midnight, the scorers were in their places, the judges in theirs. The competitors were called in front of the starting-place, where Sir John D. Ashley, a typical English nobleman, broad of chest, stalwart of limb, addressed the pedestrians:

"You are about to enter on a trying match," he said, "in which running, and walking, and physical pluck and endurance are to compete. Every possible arrangement has been made to have a fair, straight fight, and I hope the best man will win. And now, lads, are you ready? ['All right, Sir John,' said several voices.] A fair, honest, manly race, and the best man wins. Ready? Then away you go." And so the great walking match began.

It was a strange sight as they settled down to their work, the eighteen men, in their varied costumes, some walking steadily, some trotting, some running, some in groups, other individuals alone. Two carried short sticks; W. H. Smythe was dressed in blue serge, and, like O'Leary, he walked bareheaded. This competitor had fought hard for the right of walking on the foreigners' track, but it was proved that he was an English subject. Mr. Martyn was rather foppishly dressed. He is an amateur, and was waited upon by his own man-servant in a "white choker." As the men went round and round something like a school of herrings in the Brighton Aquarium, round and round, in groups, in twos and threes, in ones and twos, in threes and fours, round and round and round until one began to get giddy with watching them, I noted their peculiarities.

Another runner was I. Smith, a short, compact man, with goatee beard. He ran like a bloodhound. As the other men and groups revolved, he was a sort of outer force, passing and repassing with marvelous regularity. Harry Vaughan, of Chester, a fine, stalwart young fellow, headed the group of walkers, including the Johnsons, McCarty, and Bailey, and no man looked more fit than Vaughan. He was not tempted to run or trot as O'Leary was. He kept a steady pace, a long, striding, giant-like pace that was the admiration of everybody present. W. Lewis, of Islington, was another favorite. A tall, well-built young fellow of 21, he had done wonders as a pedestrian.

As time wore on it was plain to be seen that O'Leary was getting his Irish blood up at the somewhat insolent competition of George Hazel, of London, who, through his own ill-conditioned ambition, or being "put up" to do it, matched himself against O'Leary, and kept level with him, haunting him on the English track like his shadow. Hazel is not a person of reputation, even among English pedestrians, and his hang-dog, crouching style was in striking contrast to the straight, upright, graceful form of O'Leary. At every turn Hazel passed O'Leary, once or twice challenging him in words. When Hazel got ahead by dint of running as well as walking, O'Leary became worried and began to run, much to the dismay of his friends, who argued that he was thus bringing into play a set of muscles which would punish him by-and-by. "I'll kill this wonderful man before I've done with him," said Hazel, passing him at one of the turns. "What did he say?" exclaimed Mr. Russell, a famous sporting Queen's Counsel; "did he use bad language?" "Well, no; not exactly," we replied. "I'll report him if he does."

During a pause, when O'Leary left the track for a few moments, his friends begged him to desist from running. "Let me alone," he replied, with obstinate firmness; "I know what I'm about." An hour and a half had passed away, and still Hazel headed him by a mile or two. This fidgeted O'Leary. It did not matter that others headed both of them. He couldn't stand this bitter, slouching, personal competitor. Therefore, he laid himself down to beat him. Hazel was warned that any infringement of the rules would disqualify him. This, and the fact that he began to find that he wanted his breath to walk with rather than to waste upon words, kept him quiet, and the race went on, O'Leary running and walking with a steady persistence that presently began to tell on his adversary, who, gradually, after the second hour, began to show signs of punishment, and to drop in the rear. At the end of three hours O'Leary had walked and run him down, and he was to be seen slouching in the rear of the Vaughan group, without a friend.

Mrs. Tennyson's Wedding Present.

When Grandfather Lickshingle heard that Queen Victoria gave an Indian shawl to Mrs. Lionel Tennyson as a wedding present, his indignation knew no bounds.

"An' is that all the penurious old creature gave her?" he demanded.

He was informed it was all the newspapers reported.

"I have always said that she was a close-fisted old snoozer," exclaimed grandfather, stabbing the floor with his cane, "an' it's my opinion that any one who would give a poor, innocent girl an Indian shawl on her wedding day would not hesitate to steal chick"—

"Tut, tut," said father, "you should not utter such sentiments."

"T-t-t-tut, tut yourself," stammered grandfather in his anger. "I've been among the Indians enough to know that the best Indian shawl that ever hung from the shoulders of a greasy red man never cost more than 75 cents, an' is nothin' nohow but a red hoss-blanket, with natural bugs for ornaments. So help me gracious, I wouldn't give a dog one for a wedding present."—Oil City Derrick.

LINES TO A PHILOSOPHER.

A little child might well confound,
With almost perfect ease,
The wisest man, though quite profound,
By questions such as these:

First, tell across what river lies
That famous work, the Bridge of Sighs?

Then answer, the hardest of things,
From whence descends the reign of Kings?

Pray give the weight, and from what stack,
The straw that broke the camel's back?"

How large a broom ought there to be
To sweep a storm across the sea?

Now name the tree, and tell how high,
That bore "the apple of the eye?"

Who has ever wished or sought
To ride upon a train of thought?

Upon what sea, and at what rate
Sails that proud, haughty Ship of State?

Upon whose tender face appears
Wrapped this weary vale of tears?

So what course and through what clime
Flows that non-ending river, Time?

Wonder Upon Wonder!

An electrician of this city has invented an improvement on the telephone, which he calls the "kissograph." It works on the principle of a magnetic attraction, and by its means an absent husband can kiss his own wife at a distance of 1,000 miles. To make use of it for kissing another man's wife disarranges the instrument and creates a current which sets the steam-whistles to blowing and the fire-bells to ringing.—Austin (Nev.) Reveille.

A TRIP ABROAD.

How It Can Be Made in Good Style for $340—Items of Expenditure.

(From the Providence Journal.)

Since my return from Europe a large number of persons who contemplate a visit to the Paris Exhibition during the present year have desired me to give them some idea of the probable cost of the journey. To each one a uniform reply has been given, and the first words were, "You can make it cost just what, in reason, you like." And it is so. A man can spend $1,000 in a month's travel, and another can suit himself just as well for one-fifth of the money. My own experience, based on a ten days' visit to Paris during the Exposition of 1867, is that you can live remarkably cheap in that delightful city. During my visit in January last to the capital of France I was careful to inquire as to the probability of an increase in hotel rates. The answer was there will be none. The Grand Hotel Bristol is a magnificent house in every respect, and for such a place the charges are remarkably reasonable. At that place a handsomely furnished, well-lighted room cost me 6 francs ($1.20) per day, and a dinner, including vin ordinaire, a similar amount. But, as in London, the better plan is to take your meals out, as the French people generally do. For 10 francs ($2) per day a man can live well. But to give a clearer idea of the total cost of such a journey, it may be as well to start out with the theory that we propose to be absent two months or sixty days. Eighteen days of this will be upon the ocean, and for the round trip the cost need not be more than $120. On arrival at Liverpool, the docks and other places of interest have to be seen, which will occupy two days, the cost of living per day being 10 shillings, with 4 shillings added for omnibus and cab fares, $7; from Liverpool to Manchester, where two more days are spent at the same rate; then directly to London, the fare being $5, occupying a portion of one day. In London there is a multitude of sights of interest to be looked up. There is the Crystal Palace, British Museum, Alexandra Park, Zoological Gardens, National Gallery, House of Parliament, the Tower of London, etc. Here, to do the thing up in any kind of way, a sojourn of at least ten days should be made. This involves an expense of $30 for living (it can be done for less, and well done, too) and an additional $7.50 for omnibus hire. Then comes the trip to Paris. The return ticket from London to Paris will be, in American money, $18.75, which is available for one month. The journey to Paris usually occupies from ten to eleven hours, so that one full day may be allowed in going and coming. Then a stay of fifteen days should be made in Paris, and the visitor, if he be prudent, can do admirably, as far as lodging and living, upon $2.75 per day, or $41.25; and, adding to this ten days to the Exhibition, one franc each time, brings $43.25; with $10 added for conveyances, brings Paris to cost $53.25. During this time, if disposed, a trip can be made to Geneva lake at a cost of $15. This brings us back to London, with eleven days to spare. A trip to the Isle of Wight, a run to Scotland, and thence down through Ireland, joining the steamer at Queenstown, can be hastily done at an average cost of $7 per day—a total of $77—and then we find ourselves on board the steamer again, without anything further to pay than the stewards. This brings a total of $340, and, allowing the extravagant sum of $60 for waiters, etc., the grand result is $400 for a sixty days' journey. This estimate is put at top figures, so that there shall be nothing ridiculous in its appearance; but your readers may rest perfectly satisfied that a trip to Paris, properly managed, and an absence from home of sixty days, need not cost any single individual more than $340.

Smugglers' Devices.

The custom-house officers at Neuville aux Jontes, on the Belgian frontier, lately discovered a development of the formerly well-known mortuary style of smuggling. A wagoner having applied for a pass for his horse, the revenue officers proceeded to examine the animal. While performing this duty, their noses were assailed with a most offensive odor arising from the contents of the wagon. The driver stated that the smell proceeded from the carcasses of two dead horses, which were the only contents of the vehicle. The officials insisted on a rigid investigation of the matter. The dead horses were literally stuffed with tobacco. The affair has created some sensation in the district, and a gloom has fallen over the local purchasers of cheap tobacco, who fancy they have for some time past detected a horsy flavor in their pipes.

Sitting Bull.

Lieut. Col. Smith, of the Northwest Mounted Police, who has arrived here on a furlough, says in regard to Sitting Bull, that there is no doubt that he has a large number of Indians with him, and that, as soon as his ponies are in condition, he will probably make a sweep down on American territory convenient to his rendezvous, for the purpose of raiding and annoying the American Government. The Mounted Police, although a very efficient body of men, are not numerous enough, and too much scattered to prevent the intended movements of Sitting Bull and his followers. A few horses may be stolen from Canadians, but he does not anticipate further annoyance to the Canadian authorities.—Ottawa (Canada) telegram.

Slaughtering Alligators.

Three persons residing in the parish of Assumption, La., last year killed 9,000 alligators, saved the oil and sold the hides. The price of hides is 75 cents apiece. The trio, besides, gather moss, and are making money fast. Alligator hides make a good shoe or boot; and, as alligators are not protected by the Game law, hunters who go in for "leather and prunella" and money can keep up the game all the year round.

Cost of Ocean Transportation.

Improvements in the capacity of steamships and in the construction of their machinery have diminished the cost of carrying cargoes to a greater extent than is commonly supposed. A comparison has been recently made between two Atlantic steamers, one of the year 1840, the other of to-day. The modern steamship carries fifteen times as much freight as the old one did, at nearly twice the speed; the consumption of coal per ton of cargo transported was in 1840 nearly eleven times as great as at present. The reduction in the price of freight and passage across the Atlantic is scarcely so great as the diminution of cost would seem to justify.

THE BATTLE OF SEDAN.

Victor Hugo's Description of the Great Battle.

The Courrier des Etats Unis, of New York city, publishes the second volume of Victor Hugo's "Historie d'un Crime." The Courrier has allowed the account of the battle of Sedan to be translated, and the following description of the surrender of the French army is eminently characteristic of the author:

Bayeilles takes fire, Givonne takes fire, Floing takes fire; the thing begins by a furnace. The whole horizon is aflame. The French camp is in this crater—stupefied, scared, startled—in a funereal swarm. A ring of thunderbolts encircles the army. Extermination hems it in.

This immense murder is carried on on all sides at once. The French resist, and they are terrible, for they have nothing left them but despair. Our guns—almost all old-fashioned, and carrying badly—are immediately dismounted by the terrible and precise aim of the Prussians. The density of the rain of shells upon the valley is such that "the earth is ruled," says a witness, "as by a rake." How many guns? Eleven hundred, at least. Twelve German batteries on the Moncelle only; the third and fourth abtheilung, a frightful artillery, on the crests of Givonne, with the Second Horse Battery in reserve; opposite Doigny, ten Saxon and two Wurtemberg batteries; the curtain of trees in the wood north of Villers-Cernay conceals the mounted abtheilung, with the Third Heavy Artillery as a reserve, and from this gloomy thicket is poured a formidable fire; the twenty-four pieces of heavy artillery form a battery in the clearing near the road from La Moncelle to La Chapelle; the battery of the Royal Guard sets fire to the woods de la Garenne; the bombs and the bullets riddle Suchy, Francheval, Fauru-Saint Remy, and the valley between Heibes and Givonne, and the triple and quadruple row of guns extends, without a break, to the cavalry of Illy, the most remote point of the horizon.

The German soldiers, seated or recumbent, before the batteries, look upon the artillery doing its work. The French soldiers fall and die. Among the corpses which cover the plain is one, that of an officer, upon which they will find, after the battle, a sealed paper containing this order, signed by Napoleon: "This September 1 rest for the whole army." The valiant Thirty-fifth Regiment of the line disappears almost entirely under the crushing mass of shells; the brave marines hold the Saxons and Bavarians in check for an instant, but being overflowed on all sides fall back; the whole admirable cavalry of Margueritte's division, hurled against the German infantry, stops and breaks down when half way on its road, exterminated, says the Prussian report, "by well-directed and quiet fire." This field of carnage has three issues, all of which are closed; the Bouillon road by the Prussian guard, the Carignan road by the Bavarians, and the Mezieres road by the Wurtembergers. The French have not thought of barricading the viaduct of the railroad; three German battalions have occupied it all night; two isolated houses on the Balan road might have been the pivot of prolonged resistance, but the Germans hold them; the Montvilleas park, at Bayeilles, deep and full of thick foliage, might have prevented the Saxons, who are masters of La Moncelle, and the Bavarians, who are masters of Bazeilles, from effecting a junction, but the French have been forestalled, and the Bavarians are seen there, cutting away the hedges with their sickles.

The German army moves all of a piece with absolute unity; the Prince of Saxony is on the hill of Malry, whence he commands the scene. In the French army the command oscillates; at the outset of the battle, at 5:45, MacMahon is wounded by the fragment of a shell; at 7 o'clock, Ducrot takes his place; at 10 o'clock Wimpfen takes Ducrot's.

From minute to minute the wall of fire approaches, the thunder roll is continuous, a sinister pulverizing of 90,000 men. Nothing like it was ever witnessed; never did an army sink under such a falling mass of grape. At 1 o'clock all is lost. The regiments take refuge, pell mell, in Sedan. But Sedan begins to burn; Le Disjonval burns; the ambulances burn; nothing but a dash through the lines is possible. Wimpfen, brave and firm, suggests it to the Emperor. The Thirty-eighth Zouaves, maddened, have set the example; being parted from the remainder of the army, they have made their way through the foe and reached Belgium. A plight of lions.

Suddenly, above the disaster, above the enormous heap of slain and dying men, above all this hapless heroism appears shame. The white flag is hoisted.

There were there Turenne and Vauban—both present, one in his statue, the other in his citadel.

The statue and the citadel assisted at the horrible capitulation. The two virgins, one of bronze, the other of granite, felt themselves prostituted. O, august brow of our country! O, eternal blush of shame!

New York Journalism.

The New York journals appear to be in a bad way. Said a "managing editor" at a recent meeting of the New York Press Club: "There is not a man here that can call his soul his own. You are a pack of hirelings. You represent the great metropolitan press. There is not one of you that dare write a line of his honest convictions. There is not one of you that dare write a line of what he believes. If you were to write it, it wouldn't be published. The soul would be taken out of it. It would be suppressed. I would suppress it if it were brought to me. I get $125 a week for suppressing the truth; for cutting out the soul of every sentence which comes before me."

EDISON's phonograph has been on exhibition among the scientists of Paris. When the instrument was placed on the table, and vociferated, "The phonograph presents its compliments to the Academy of Sciences," there was a roar of laughter from the audience, which could with difficulty be persuaded that the sound did not proceed from some concealed ventriloquist.

A Cubic Mile of Humanity.

A fanciful genius suggests that it is now time to celebrate the completion of the first cubic mile of humanity, and gives a calculation to show that the bodies of all mankind, from the first Adam down to the Adams just born, if closely packed without diminution of volume, would exactly fill that space. Here are his figures, which our young mathematicians who have nothing else to do may verify if they can.

According to the orthodox chronology the world has been inhabited 6,000 years, or 170 generations. Its present population is about 1,500,000,000; but this density of population must have been slowly reached, since all are descended from an original pair. Consequently he takes half the number of the present, 750,000,000, as the average population of the world from the beginning until now, making the aggregate of human bodies during the 170 generations, 127,500,000,000. Since many die in infancy, and half are women, the average weight of each body is taken as 74 pounds. The aggregate weight of all mankind to date must accordingly be 4,212,000,000 tons, or a little more than the weight of a cubic mile of sea water. Since the human body, with the lungs not inflated, is a trifle heavier than sea water, our calculator assumes that his estimated 4,212,000,000 tons of humanity would fill the same space as 4,205,000,000 tons of sea water, or precisely one cubic mile.

Taking the same figures and exercising the same freedom in striking averages, the mathematically inclined may deduce any number of amusing results. For instance, assuming the average length of humanity to be a little under four feet, the bodies of all mankind, living and dead, placed end to end, would just make a bridge from the earth to the sun.—Scientific American.

The Reconstructed Balkan Peninsula.

The Deutsche Zeitung guarantees the accuracy of the following particulars respecting the new situation in the Balkan peninsula: Servia is to get 164 geographical square miles, containing 216,000 inhabitants, of whom 92,000 are Mussulmans. Montenegro is increased by fifty-eight square miles, containing 45,000 inhabitants, including 15,000 Mussulmans. The Dobrudscha, comprising 199 square miles and 194,000 inhabitants, of whom 100,000 are Mussulmans, is destined for Roumania. The new Bulgarian state extends over 2,562 square miles, with 3,822,000 inhabitants, of whom 1,430,000 are Mussulmans. Turkey thus loses 2,938,000 square miles and 4,457,000 inhabitants.

A Contented People.

The Asiatic race loves monotony. The London Spectator says that there are artisan families in India and in Damascus who have worked at the same work day by day for 1,000 years, peasant families who have not only tilled the same fields, but have gone into them and left them at the same hour, according to the season, from a period before the birth of Christ. They have no wish for change, no ambition to do better, no inclination to roam, no sense of failure, because they are as their forefathers were and as their sons will be.

THE General Conference of the Methodist Church South will be held in Atlanta on the first Wednesday in May. The relations to each other of the two great branches of American Methodism will form the chief subject of discussion.

DURING the last decade $106,000,000 derived from confiscated church property, sold at auction, have been paid into the treasury of Italy.

Jewels of the Crown of Scotland

At Edinburg, Scotland, some years since, the Jewels of the Crown were locked in a box, that box in another, and so on, until they were supposed to be burglar-proof. They were then locked up in the vault of the castle, there to remain for one hundred years, the keys being placed in a mortar and fired into the sea. Scarce fifty years passed by, and the modern lock-picker opens the vault and boxes without trouble. So the science of medicine, when studied with the aid of chemistry and the microscope, becomes plain and simple, and diseases that were regarded incurable a generation ago now readily yield to remedies employed by the modern and progressive physician. A decade of years since, and women were taught to believe that their peculiar diseases and weaknesses were incurable; but now hundreds and thousands of once-bedridden women in the United States will testify to the fact that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has effected their perfect and permanent cure.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1876.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—About five years since my wife was taken sick, and, though we employed the best physicians in our city, yet she gradually grew worse, so that she was confined to the bed. Every remedy I had tried, or could find, failed to cure or even give relief. At last I procured a bottle of your Favorite Prescription, and, to my surprise, it gave almost instant relief, and, with a little perseverance, an entire cure was effected. Ever gratefully yours,

GEO. BODENMILLER.

WE are skeptics to a greater or less extent, but when we have the truth before us how can we but believe?

It is claimed Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR will cure Heart Disease in all its forms. F. E. Banger, of Wilton, Me., says:

"A few weeks ago I sent for a bottle of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR. It has helped me more than I expected. I consider it a great cure for heart disease. I inclose, you will find, one dollar, for which you will please send me another bottle and oblige,

"F. E. BANGER."

If you don't believe this write to him and see for yourself.

Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits.

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc. The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

CAUTION.—We caution all persons not to buy the extra large packages of dust and ashes now put up by certain parties and called Condition Powders. They are utterly worthless. Buy Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders if you buy any; they are absolutely pure and are immensely valuable.

Household Economy.

The housekeeper or cook who studies economy in the kitchen can do so in one direction by always using DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. It will be found a truly economical and valuable assistant in baking biscuits, rolls, bread, cake of all kinds, waffles, muffins, and most all articles prepared from flour; and why? Because, in using the Dooley Powder, you save in eggs, in shortening, in patience, in everything; and, when the baking is done, it is turned out light, palatable and wholesome, so that every morsel is eaten up and no waste.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe billious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS
REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded, from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

The Reason why they Don't Like it.

THE COST OF ADVERTISING IN AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS IS TOO HIGH.

ASKING PRICES HAVE NOT BEEN REDUCED BY THE BIG PAPERS SINCE THE WAR.

THE AMERICAN NEWSPAPER UNION GIVES ADVERTISERS MORE CIRCULATION FOR THE PRICE THAN PAPERS PRINTED ON ANY OTHER PLAN CAN AFFORD.

The above facts explain the unfriendly attacks made upon the American Newspaper Union by the New York Times, Post, Commercial, Boston Post, Advertiser, Utica Herald, and other journals.

COMPARISONS:

The weekly edition of the New York Times is 25,000 copies, and advertisements are charged at 50 cents a line. The American Newspaper Union gives an advertisement 25,000 circulation for 20 cents a line. The Times thinks the American Newspaper Union List a humbug.

The weekly edition of the New York Post is 3,450 copies, and advertisements are charged at 10 cents a line. The American Newspaper Union gives an advertisement 3,450 circulation for less than 3 cents a line. The Post don't think very well of the American Newspaper Union.

The New York Commercial Advertiser prints a weekly edition of 3,500 copies and charges advertisers 10 cents a line. The Advertiser has a poor opinion also of the American Newspaper Union.

The Boston Post weekly issues 3,500 copies, charges advertisers 12½ cents a line, and expresses doubts of the honesty of the American Newspaper Union, which gives that circulation for less than one-fourth the price which the Post demands.

The Boston Advertiser charges 12½ cents a line for advertising in a weekly having 2,500 circulation, and warns its readers to beware of an institution which gives 2,500 circulation for 2 cents a line.

The Toronto Globe prints the best weekly in Canada, has 30,000 circulation and charges 25 cents a line. The Globe has contempt for the American Newspaper Union, which gives 30,000 circulation for 16 cents a line.

The Utica Herald prints 6,402 copies of a weekly edition which advertisers are allowed to use at 10 cents a line. It joins in a crusade against the American Newspaper Union, which gives 6,402 circulation for 5 cents a line.

The Warsaw, N. Y., Democrat prints 1,[illegible] copies, and charges advertisers 5 cents a line. When it was a cooperative paper only ¼ a cent a line was demanded for its columns, and it is no better now than it was then.

The St. Louis weekly Post sells 11,912 copies weekly to Germans in and around St. Louis. Its advertising rates are 10 cents a line, and are very low, but because the American Newspaper Union gives 11,912 weekly circulation to an advertisement for 9 cents a line the Post despises and speaks unkindly of it.

The Lockport, N. Y., weekly Times prints 720 copies, and charges advertisers 6¼ cents a line. When the Lockport weekly Times becomes a co-operative paper advertisers can use its columns at ¼ cent a line, which is all the American Newspaper Union demands for papers of like circulation and influence.

VEGETINE
FOR DROPSY.

CENTRAL FALLS, R. I., Oct. 19, 1877.

DR. H. R. STEVENS:

It is a pleasure to give my testimony for your valuable medicine. I was sick for a long time with Dropsy, under the doctor's care. He said it was Water between the Heart and Liver. I received no benefit until I commenced taking the VEGETINE—in fact, I was growing worse. I have tried many remedies; they did not help me. VEGETINE is the medicine for Dropsy. I began to feel better after taking a few bottles. I have taken thirty bottles in all. I am perfectly well—never felt better. No one can feel more thankful than I do.

I am, dear sir, gratefully yours,
A. D. WHEELER.

VEGETINE. When the blood becomes lifeless and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause the VEGETINE will renew the blood, carry off the putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

VEGETINE
For Kidney Complaint and Nervous Debility.

ISLESBORO, ME., Dec. 28, 1877.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I had had a Cough for eighteen years, when I commenced taking the VEGETINE. I was very low, my system was debilitated by disease. I had the Kidney Complaint, and was very nervous—Cough bad, and Lungs sore. When I had taken one bottle I found it was helping me; it has helped my cough, and it strengthens me. I am now able to do my work. Never have found anything like the VEGETINE. I know it is everything it is recommended to be.

MRS. A. J. PENDLETON.

VEGETINE is nourishing and strengthening; purifies the blood; regulates the bowels; quiets the nervous system; acts directly upon the secretions, and arouses the whole system to action.

VEGETINE
FOR SICK HEADACHE.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 1, 1878.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have used your VEGETINE for Sick Headache, and been greatly benefited thereby. I have every reason to believe it to be a good medicine.

Yours, very respectfully,
MRS. JAMES CONNOR, 411 Third Street.

HEADACHE. VEGETINE can be said to be a sure remedy for the many kinds of headache, as it acts directly upon the various causes of this complaint—Nervousness, Indigestion, Costiveness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Biliousness, etc. Try the VEGETINE. You will never regret it.

VEGETINE.
DOCTOR'S REPORT.

DR. CHARLES M. DUDDENHAUSEN, Apothecary, Evansville, Ind.

The Doctor writes:

I have a large number of good customers who take VEGETINE. They all speak well of it. I know it is a good medicine for the complaints for which it is recommended.

Dec. 27, 1877.

VEGETINE is a great panacea for our aged fathers and mothers, for it gives them strength, quiets their nerves, and gives them Nature's sweet sleep.

VEGETINE.
DOCTOR'S REPORT.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—We have been selling your valuable VEGETINE for three years, and we find that it gives perfect satisfaction. We believe it to be the best Blood Purifier now sold.

Very respectfully,
DR. J. E. BROWN & CO., Druggists, Uniontown, Ky.

VEGETINE has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

VEGETINE.

THE PROPOSED CAPITOL.

An Outline of Mr. May's Plan as Adopted by the Commissioners—A Handsome, Convenient, and Well Arranged Building.

Above will be found an excellent illustration of the proposed new state house, prepared from a line engraving of the drawing of Edwin May, of this city, the architect to whom the award was made by the commissioners last Friday. The view is in perspective from the northeast corner of Washington and Tennessee streets, embracing the principal Washington street facade and every part of the dome, showing in bold relief all the central portion of the east wing or Tennessee street front. The building, which will be in the Corinthian style of architecture, will present a massive yet elegant appearance, and will take rank with the finest structures in the west. The grounds will be doubled in extent by the vacation of Market street and the addition of the square on the north, and will be bounded by Washington, Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee streets. The center of the building will cover the ground now occupied by Market street.

A look at the cut will give a better idea of what will be the appearance of the building than the perusal of columns of detailed description of the plans. It is an accurate copy of the diagram of perspective made by the architect. The plan was adopted by the unanimous vote of the commissioners on the first ballot, though before it was cast there had been an open expression of opinion among the commissioners, during which four of them favored Mr. May's plan and one that entitled "Phœnix," prepared by Charles Eppinghausen, of Terre Haute. When the secret ballots were cast, however, all of them were for Mr. May's plan.

In the afternoon the commissioners held a conference with the successful architect, to determine various matters in connection with the great enterprise. They informed Mr. May that it was their intention to begin the work immediately and carry it as far as the tax lexy of one cent on the one hundred dollars would permit. The question of compensation was also discussed, but decision deferred until an adjourned meeting to be held next Monday. Section 10 of the act for erecting a new state house thus defines the duties of the architect:

> The architect whose plans are selected shall be the supervising architect of the building, and shall give bond in the sum of $100,000, conditioned that he shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office, and he shall be liable on his bond for all losses or damages that may be incurred on account of his violating any of the provisions of this act, or on account of his neglect or incapacity for the duties of his office. He shall receive such compensation as may be agreed upon in advance: Provided, No contract with an architect shall be made allowing more than three per cent commission, as full compensation for plans and specifications, and the supervision of the erection of such building, as the architect thereof.

THE COST OF THE PLANS.

The act provides that the cost of the new capitol shall not exceed $2,000,000, but in their instructions to architects the commissioners recommended them to keep their estimates inside of $1,800,000, so as to be certain of not going beyond the specified sum. In order to prevent suspicion of collusion the architects were instructed to submit their plans under titles and inclose their own names in sealed envelopes with the titles written thereon. A number of plans were cast aside in the early stage of the examinations as not coming up to the requirements of the law or the instructions of the commissioners. The estimates of the experts are on the principal plans under consideration, and the estimates of the architects are given below:

THE MAN OF SUCCESS.

The successful competitor, Mr. Edwin May, is so well known through his fame as an architect and an inventor that he scarcely needs any introduction. He has lived in this city for more than 25 years, and has been closely identified with building improvements in the city and state. He has been the architect of many public works, including the state's prison north, the addition to the hospital for the insane, the Knox county court house, several school houses in this city, and in short public and private buildings all over the state. Among the most valuable of his inventions is May's patent iron jail. He is in every way fitted for the task he has undertaken, and will doubtless perform it to the satisfaction of the public.

The Building As It Is To Be.

From the "General Description of Plans," prepared by Mr. May and published in pamphlet form, the following summary and extracts have been made:

Mr. May starts out by saying that he will depend on the plans showing the style adopted in classic architecture, with such memorial ornamentation as the early history of Indiana presents, these being made distinguishing features of the design, and will be found better adapted to the requirements of a capitol than the usual florid, grotesque and surplus ornamentation possessing no utility, but extremely expensive in construction. In selecting the classic style, the architect has been actuated by a determination to make the cost of the building come within the specified amount.

Appropriate proportion and solidity of design have been secured in this structure, modeled after the finest classical order of architecture, the Corinthian, presenting all the beauty, strength and harmony required to produce an edifice of architectural symmetry, adding historic adornments, with figures representing justice, peace, science, mechanics, agriculture, commerce, law and liberty, together with the state coat of arms, as in harmony with the structure serving to indicate the character and wealth of the state.

THE BASEMENT AND SUB-BASEMENT.

The total length from south to north is 482 feet; from east to west 292 feet, south and north fronts 184 feet in width, center wings on the east and west fronts 112 feet in width. The sub-basement 6 feet 6 inches in hight, basement 13 feet high, to be used for heating and ventilating, the storage of heavy articles and fuel.

The basement will be arranged conveniently for the respective offices as follows:

Governor's department, five storerooms and vault; secretary of state, two storerooms and vault; treasurer of state, three storerooms and vault; auditor of state, five storerooms and vault; adjutant general, armory, two storerooms and vault; state board of agriculture, two storerooms, storeroom for geologist, hoist for geologist, two boiler rooms, engine room, two engine rooms for elevator, fuel room, fuel hoist.

The sub-basement will be six feet six inches in height, affording ample space for all heating and return pipes, ventilation, sewer and drain pipes. One of the most important features of this sub basement are the large fresh air ducts extending the entire length and breadth of the building on two sides, receiving the fresh, pure air from the warm and sunny side of the southeast and southwest centers of the building. The boiler, engine and fuel rooms are arranged to take sub-basement and basement in one height of story, taking advantage of the extra depth required for foundations at the north end of the building. The basement will have a carriage drive from east to west, with an inside drive from center to north and south extremes, communicating with each storeroom, armory and geological department. The building on the exterior shows the purpose and use of the various departments. The hall of representatives, senate chamber and supreme court room are clearly indicated. The principal front steps to the first floor and main flights to second floor on Washington street front must form an attractive feature, architecturally and for convenience. The access to the first floor east and west fronts, the steps being within the building, will be duly appreciated in inclement weather. The north front steps are the same as the south to first floor.

Each hall and room is lighted direct from the outside, all roof and ceiling lights being carefully avoided. The ceilings of senate chamber, hall of representatives, library and supreme court room are constructed with galvanized iron, designed with panel work and such ornaments as will best receive fresco painting. This iron work will be secured to the wrought iron trusses of the roof. The roof will be covered with slate, copper and zinc, over a galvanized corrugated sheet iron sheathing, filled in with cement.

FIRST STORY.

The next story above the sub-basement is designated the first story. The approaches to each of the four fronts of the building are direct, with a rise of only seven feet to this floor. The convenience and utility of this arrangement, not only for the public, but for those who have to occupy and fill the official positions of the different departments, will not be questioned. This first floor plan will show one of the leading features of the design—a grand corridor of such proportions as the business departments of the state capital demand—affording both light, ventilation and ready communication with each office on this floor, and by means of eight grand staircases, with each department on second and third floors. Each staircase is arranged to start on the first floor near the entrance to each business office of the several departments, affording easy communication with the supreme court room, senate, house, library, etc., located on the second floor, and galleries, committee rooms, etc., on third floor.

The entire business departments of the state are on the first floor. This feature in a state capitol will be duly appreciated by the business public, who always condemn and object to upper stories.

The following is the arrangement of the offices and business rooms on the first floor:

Governor's department—Business office, private office, secretary's office, reception room, private room, vault, wash rooms, closet, ante room to governor's private room, access to basement.

Secretary of state—Business office, first office, second office, third office, private room, wash room, record vault, closet, access to basement.

Auditor of state—Business office, warrant clerk, private office, clerk's room, land department, insurance department, vaults, wash rooms, closets, access to basement.

Treasurer of state—Business office, private office, private room, watchman's bedroom, vaults, wash room, closet.

Attorney general—Business office, private room, closet, wash room.

Superintendent of public instruction—Office and library room, private office, private room, closet, wash room, fire proof vaults.

State board of agriculture—Main office, private office, horticultural room, geologist's private office, geologist's laboratory, geologist's museum, closets, wash room, store room, access to basement, hoist.

Clerk of supreme court—Business office, two rooms, closet, stairway to court room, ante and wash room.

Adjutant general—Business office, private room, quartermaster's room, closet, armory, access to basement wash room.

SECOND STORY.

On the second floor are the following accommodations:

Representatives' hall—70x70 feet, 44 feet in height.

Senate chamber—63x64 feet, 44 feet in height.

Court room—50 feet 6 inches x 57 feet 6 inches, 36 feet in height.

Law library—50 feet 6 inches x 56 feet 8 inches, 19 feet in height.

Library 44 feet by 56 feet 8 inches, 36 feet in height. Library museum and reading room the same size as library. This makes up the two stories, equal in height to the three. On this floor, in addition to the above, there is the speaker's reception room, speaker's private room, chief clerk's room, assistant clerk's room, engrossing clerk's room, enrolling clerk's room, post office and folding rooms, two committee rooms, two cloak rooms for members of the house, wash room for members of the house, two water closets for members of the house, wash room and closet for speaker, wash room and water closet for chief and assistant clerk, wash room and water closet for enrolling and engrossing clerks, lieutenant governor's reception room, lieutenant governor's private room, four rooms for secretaries, two committee rooms, post office and folding room, two cloak rooms, wash room, two water closets for senators, water closet for lieutenant governor's department, wash room for lieutenant governor's department.

The quarters of the supreme court are on the second floor, and embrace seven private rooms, main court room, consultation room, attorneys' room, law library, law librarian's room, two reporters' rooms, sheriff's room, janitor's room, wash room, three water closets, private stairway.

State librarian—Private room, janitor's room, library, museum and reading room, wash room, cloak room, two stairways to gallery, two water closets, two galleries of library, three store rooms for library.

THE THIRD STORY

contains 18 committee rooms, two joint committee rooms; public gallery to house—seating capacity 296, standing room 150; ladies' toilet room, two public water closets, public gallery to senate chamber—seating capacity 408, standing room 120.

As the building is intended to be a first class fire proof structure, all wood work is reduced in the construction to its smallest capacity; the doors and frames, sash, wood floors and seating of halls and galleries, with the necessary shelving of offices and library, being all the wood work required, and this may be reduced by using iron doors, frames and sash, should the commissioners desire to incur the expense.

THE DOME.

As in all state capitols the dome has been accepted as adding dignity to the structure, I have in my plans made it a distinguishing feature, and most useful internally, considering the one or single dome to be the most grand and dignified form of construction, and any small or minor domes, towers or campaniles as only detracting from the dignity of the structure.

The dome construction is one of the best, and is planned to be built in accordance with the designs of the oldest and best architectural examples extant. The comingling of iron girders, trusses, columns and brick arches has not developed any very satisfactory results. This dome, from the foundation to the springing line of the roof, is constructed of Indiana stone, built up in a direct plumb line, "solids over solids and voids over voids," cut and dressed to such exact dimensions that you may, with a small stretch of imagination, consider it as one large block of stone, perforated for passages and window openings. No plastering, stucco work or iron work is required to finish and ornament this dome, outside or within, as all such ornamentation is cut on and in the solid stone work of the structure. This will make the dome a useful monument, or memorial dome, as on the face of the inside walls, rotunda and corridor sides there can be niches for statuary and panel work for inscriptions and relief work. Within the thickness of the walls are two staircases and passenger elevators, accessible from each floor and gallery. The access to the lantern above the dome and gallery within is by easy staircases from the third floor. The gallery within the dome will afford a sheltered lookout for the public, and relieves the dome from unsafe and leaky arrangements, so often characteristic of this class of buildings.

LIGHT AND HEAT.

For convenient arrangement of the interior the architect has called into requisition all the modern improvements in heating and ventilating, elevators for passengers and fuel, dust flues from each department, electric and telephone combination, plumbing, soft water for lavatories, electric clocks, electric lighting of gas, geological department located for light in the best place; the galleries arranged for the public to look directly toward the members; galleries supported by solid walls, with direct light and air from the outside; no skylight or hot house arrangements so often introduced in our public buildings. Every room in the building will secure the cheerful sunlight during some portion of the day. The heating will be perfected by using indirect radiation in all the offices, halls and corridors, both direct and indirect. This system, combined with ventilating by exhausting the vitiated air from the floor line by means of the exhaust ducts, which are helped or forced by the steam heating pipes within, is most effectual, and the only safe and certain method of securing pure, fresh air, and will commend itself for its simplicity and economical arrangement.

THE SELECTION OF THE PLAN.

As is well known to most of our readers, 24 plans were submitted for the consideration of the commissioners. The members of the board are Governor Williams; I. D. G. Nelson, of Allen county, Josephus Collett, of Vermilion county, and General Thomas A. Morris and General John Love, of this city—all gentlemen of integrity and character. They have had a great deal of experience in the line of their duties since their appointment last May, having thoroughly examined two sets of plans. They, with the assistance of the experts, spent the entire month of August last in the inspection of the four plans first submitted—those of Eppinghausen, Myers, Cooper and Johnson. This arduous labor sufficed to make them familiar with architectural designs and drawings, and secured them much valuable information, so that they brought riper judgments to bear upon the second series of plans submitted. In many of these by the aid of their experience they were enabled to perceive irremediable effects almost at first glance, and thus quite a number of the 24 were speedily cast aside as unworthy of consideration. For over three months they have been engaged in the close and careful examination of the remaining plans. Their decision was arrived at only after each plan had been examined and re-examined, and after they had thoroughly satisfied themselves of the accuracy of the estimates on each. It is therefore evident that in the award just made they were guided by sound convictions and ripe judgments. The commissioners deserve the highest praise for the faithful manner in which they have performed their duties, and they certainly possess the confidence of the general public.

The architect's estimate of the cost of the new capitol is $1,721,911.61, and the experts' estimate is $1,792 791.71. The cost of construction is limited to $2,000,000 by the state house act, and the commissioners requested architects to keep their estimates inside of $1,800,000. It is safe to say that the new capitol will be in every way a credit, convenience and ornament to the state. The public from the illustration can judge of its exterior appearance and the description of the plan will give them an insight into the interior arrangement. It is safe to say that it will equal any state house in the west in every particular.

The Old State House.

The first legislature of the state met at Corydon November 4, 1816, but no steps were taken for the erection of permanent state buildings there. The general government, by act of March 3, 1819, donated two miles square on which to locate the capital [illegible] years a state house was talked of, and in 1831 the legislature appointed a committee which reported February 10, 1832, and it was resolved to build it. To James Blake was delegated the duty of selecting a plan, which was approved by the legislature the next year. Ithiel Town contracted to build the house for $58,000, and in 1835 the work was completed for $60,000. The elevation on which it was built was partly artificial, the dirt having been scraped up from the surrounding property. The appearance of the old house was familiar to the greater part of the men of central Indiana, a larger part of whom had seen it at some period of its existence. When completed in 1835 it was generally thought to be an unusually fine building. The stone of which it was built in part scaled off, the plaster fell off, and for many years it was an eye sore, hidden somewhat latterly by the friendly foliage of the trees. Its senate chamber and hall of representatives, rendered as dark as possible by pillars and surrounding rooms cutting off the light, will never be forgotten by any who visited them. When the old state house was built Noah Noble was governor, Morris Morris auditor and Samuel Merrill treasurer, and they constituted a board to superintend the work. James Morrison was secretary of state when the work was begun, and William Sheets when it was completed. David Wallace was lieutenant governor. That the old house with all its imperfections and built so economically answered the purpose of its erection 41 years speaks well for the methods of that day. The legislature met in its halls, and for years the most of the state's business was transacted within its walls. Of late years however the most of the state officers have had quarters elsewhere. It was occupied by the library, the state board of agriculture and the state's geological museum up to last year, while during all the period of its existence it was a meeting place for all kinds and classes of assemblies.

JURORS.

The Necessity for Good Men and the Arbitrary Power of Courts.

[Chicago Times.]

A little variation from the usual routine of picking up jurors for service in the criminal court was indulged in on yesterday. Some time ago a railroad employe was summoned by a bailiff to serve as a juror, and was excused on producing a note from the chief of the office setting forth that the business was so pressing that the man's place would have to be filled if he should be detained. Jurors were needed again, yesterday, and the presiding judge sent for the author of the note, and insisted that he himself should serve. The invitation was too pressing to be disregarded. Perhaps there was a degree of "even handed justice" in it. Perhaps, again, there may be a legal question as to the right of a judge to command the service of particular persons as jurors. If the power exists, it is certainly one which is capable of outrageous abuse; for if the court may single out one person for jury service, it may choose the whole panel, and organize a jury to acquit or to convict, at pleasure. There is another thing fairly suggested by this peculiar proceeding. It is that there is urgent need of reform in the law and the practice which makes jury service no better than a sentence of imprisonment, often for a protracted term. If the managers of business like railroading, upon which the public interest and convenience is largely dependent, may be arbitrarily selected for jurymen, an effort should at least be made to render the interruption of their regular employment as brief as possible. It is undoubtedly desirable that the average character of juries should be greatly improved; and it will not be denied that the substitution of reputable and responsible business men for the class who are commonly picked up by court bailiffs would supply the needed improvement. But as trials are now commonly conducted, service upon juries would be simply ruinous to the majority of business men. Nothing is more common than the stretching out of trials through two or three weeks, and for all of this time the juror is a close prisoner, unable to attend to business of his own, or to render any service to his employer. The hardship of jury service in such cases fully explains the unwillingness of persons who have any regular occupation to be sworn as jurors. Much, indeed most, of this hardship might be abated by the imposition of proper restraints upon the garrulity of lawyers and the absurd latitude allowed in the examination of witnesses. The law is perhaps mainly responsible for these abuses, but the laxity of court discipline aggravates what has grown to be nothing less than a nuisance. Under a rational code of practice any question of the admissibility of evidence should be settled in five minutes. A lawyer's argument upon the merits of a case, in summing up, that exceeds an hour in length, is simply a demonstration of the maker's inability to use language with directness and precision, and to arrange ideas methodically. Trials occupying more than one day should be rare, and in no case should jurors be compelled to lose more than two days in listening to the evidence of witnesses or the wrangling of lawyers. A case the essential points of which can not be exhaustively presented in that time, will never be understood by a jury at all. If the courts will exert themselves to abate the oppressions of jury service, it will not be difficult to find intelligent and capable men willing to serve. Most persons in active business may spare a day for the public service without serious inconvenience. To imprison a business man for a week or a month, listening to the verbal rubbish which consumes most of the time of courts, is nothing less than a legal outrage.

Pope Leo's Thrift.

Pope Leo's advice is the best. It has always been the custom to distribute alms to the poor people on the accession of a pope. It was intended as a boon to real paupers, but crowds of tricky, well to do artisans have, in disguise as mendicants, profited by the pontiff's generosity. When they assembled not long ago at the doors of the vatican, indulging in antics befitting a carnival, Pope Leo asked the meaning of that unseemly assemblage at his doors, and on being told, sent down word that "it was God's will that man should earn his daily bread in the sweat of his brow," and had the ground cleared of those noisy claimants to improvident pontifical largess.

Flower bonnets will be worn all summer, but the large flowers will be superseded by fine ones, such as heather, buttercups, daisy buds and various others.

[illegible] a very [illegible] that the west is rapidly becoming a manufacturing section, and that the empire of manufacturing industries is rapidly departing from New England, and is being assumed by the people of the Mississippi valley. The following are some of the

SOME IMPORTANT OF MR. STORROW'S POINTS:

I do not believe that the gentlemen of this committee are aware of the importance of the manufacturing industries of this country. We sometimes speak of ours as an agricultural nation, raising raw products with great advantage. I do not know the figures that exist to-day, but by the census of 1870 the mechanical and manufacturing products of this country were almost twice the agricultural products. By the census of 1870, the agricultural products of the country were $2,447,538,658, and the manufactured products $4,232,325,442; wages of farm laborers, including board, $310,286,285; wages of operatives, $775,584,343. The growth has been altogether out of proportion to the population. Between 1850 and 1870 our population increased 65 per cent., while our manufacturing industries increased in value 322 per cent. Part of this is owing to general rise in values; but, after making all the allowances suggested by the able discussion in the quarto volume of the census, our manufactures have increased three times as fast as our population in the last 20 years; so that we are not only growing in manufactures as we grow as a nation, but we are growing to become a great manufacturing nation, and the manufactures of the country are throwing the agricultural interests into the shade. Take the single article of cotton: Since 1830 our population has increased between threefold and fourfold: the amount of cotton manufactured in this country has increased thirteenfold.

I think you will be surprised to see

at the present time. Taking the census of 1850, 1860 and 1870 as a basis—and I take these three because, although I have not entire faith in all the results set forth in or directly obtained from the census table, without allowing for other elements not shown therein, yet as the census for these three years were taken under the same law (that of 1850,) upon the same schedules, and by the same organization—the results which those three years present will be a tolerably fair basis for comparison.

In 1850 the mechanical industries of the six great western states were considerably less than half that of the New England states, 45 per cent. of the New England industries; $135,000,000 for the western states and $283,000,000 for New England. In 1870 it was 91 per cent., or $914,000,000 for those states against $1,000,000,000 for New England; and at the present time there is every reason to believe that they exceed the industries of the New England states, although I have not been able to get at any figures to show exactly what they are at the present time. The last report of the board of trade of Chicago says that, in spite of the present depression of business, there are to-day 1,664 more workmen employed in the manufacturing establishments of Chicago alone than a year ago.

In 1870 the manufacturing industries of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota, gave

A PRODUCT OF $937,000,000,

while the agricultural industries of the same states brought only $861,000,000.

In Illinois, which has been looked on as a great agricultural state, the agricultural product was $210,860,000, and the manufactured product $205,600,000. In Missouri, the agricultural product was $103,000,000, and the manufactured $206,200,000. Even in Wisconsin, the manufactured product was $77,200,000, while the agricultural was only $78,000,000; and in Ohio, the manufactures were far ahead, and so through those states.

Mr. Hurlbut—In that $77,000,000 manufactured product of Wisconsin, do they not include the lumber?

Mr. Storrow—Yes, sir, I think they do, and I think they should; its value consists in the labor upon it. I think they also include flour; but in the export tables I shall refer to presently, neither flour nor lumber is included.

Mr. Eldridge—The grain would be included in the agricultural product?

Mr. Storrow—Certainly wheat would be included in the agricultural products; and the timber would be, I suppose. There is another way to get at the relative importance of the two, which I think is better still, and that is in

THE WAGES PAID.

These states show as follows:

AGRICULTURE.

	Products.	Wages.
Ohio	$198,256,907	$16,480,778
Indiana	122,914,302	9,675,348
Illinois	210,860,585	22,338,767
Missouri	103,035,759	8,797,487
Iowa	114,386,441	9,277,878
Wisconsin	78,027,032	8,186,110
Minnesota	33,446,400	4,459,201
Total of states	$810,927,426	$79,315,569
Whole of U. S.	$2,447,538,658	$310,286,285

MANUFACTURES.

	Products.	Wages.
Ohio	$269,713,610	$49,066,488
Indiana	108,617,278	18,366,780
Illinois	205,620,672	31,100,244
Missouri	206,213,429	31,055,445
Iowa	46,534,322	6,893,292
Wisconsin	77,214,326	13,575,642
Minnesota	23,110,700	4,052,837
Total of states	$937,124,387	$153,110,728
Whole of U. S.	$4,232,325,442	$775,584,342

In these census tables the value of the board of the farm hands is added ot the cash wages paid, and included in the tables as a part of the wages stated; and the sum given for agricultural products includes not merely saleable products, but the value of all farm improvements. Whatever allowance be made for mechanics and small manufacturers working themselves, and for farmers working on their own farms, it is clear that, within the last 25 years, manufactures, and not agriculture, have come to be the great interest of the nation. Indeed, the census of 1870 shows that the net value added to the raw material by the process of manufacture—that is, the difference between cost of raw material and value of product—is undoubtedly more than the gross value of saleable agricultural products.

Now, I find, by comparing industries given in the census tables with the business of the patent office, in the growth of the two. In 1850 the manufactured product was $1,000,000,000; in 1860 it was $1,800,000,000; while in 1870 it was $4,200,000,000. The growth in the patent office took place chiefly at two stages. One great jump was in 1854. For the four years [illegible] but, as I said [illegible] other day, the patents taken out in the western states have run up. In 1850 about one half as many patents were taken out in these six western states (125) as in New England (251), and a great many less than in New York (286.) In 1870, for the first time, these six western states took out more than New England (2,369 for those states, against 2,188 for New England), and at the present time they take out 50 per cent. more (in 1877, 3,677 for those six states, against 2,479 for New England.) Now, you can not help seeing that the industries of the whole country have grown with the patent system; and, if you take different localities, or compare different localities, you will find that those places have grown most rapidly in resources which have grown most rapidly in the number of patents they have taken out.

A REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE

ROCKFORD STOCKINGS.

C. C. Coffin, an enterprising Yankee literary man, who traversed the west to study the industries of that section, gave the patent committee the information which follows as to some Illinois industries:

Of our clothing, Mr. Chairman, stockings are considered essential. The time was when all hosiery was knit by hand, but that day has passed. I very much doubt if any considerable number of women of the next generation will know how to knit. Machines have almost wholly superseded knitting needles. Till within a few months, however, the stocking machines in use did not wholly complete a stocking; there was still a seam to be sewed at the heel or toe, or at the side or bottom of the foot; but invention has conquered the last difficulty, and now, if you will go into a chamber in an unpretending establishment in the town of Rockford, Illinois, you will see 12 automatic stocking machines at work—the invention of a hard working, modest mechanic. It is the Nelson machine. There are only 12 machines in existance, and they are knitting a total of 5,000 pairs a week. The 12 machines are tended by a boy 15 years old, who is paid $4 per week—making the cost of knitting a stocking one-sixth of a mill. And, that you may see what the machine is doing, I have a pair of the stockings which I lay before the committee.

The Chairman—I am afraid you are going to deprive the old ladies of a great deal of pleasure which they have in knitting in the evening.

Mr. Coffin—Now, sir, a machine commences at the top, and it knits down, widening and narrowing, changes the stitches as it goes on to the heel, where it shapes the heel, and finishes at the end of the toe with one thread; and then it goes on the next one, and so on to another and another. It knits fancy stockings, and I saw some being knit with three or four colors; and it will go on, sir, and knit a mile of stockings if your yarn will hold out, and no person need touch it. I exhibited that stocking to some of our eastern manufacturers, and they acknowledged it was far ahead of anything that had ever been before produced.

Mr. Briggs—What did you say was the cost of knitting these stockings,—less than a cent?

Mr. Coffin—One sixth of a mill.

Mr. Briggs—What does the whole machine cost?

Mr. Coffin—I do not remember the price, but I think they are held at $200. They are patented machines. I don't know the name under which the patent was issued, but the firm is Burson & Nelson,—Mr. Burson furnishing the capital, I presume, and Mr. Nelson inventing the machine.

ADAMS & WESTLAKE.

When in Chicago, Mr. Chairman, I visited the large manufactory of Adams & Westlake, who manufacture a great variety of articles, and where I discovered that the invention of what we call little things is sometimes of great moment. For instance, they manufacture a sieve, the rim of which is tin. By a machine which they have invented they have so cheapened the price that a sieve can now be purchased for 25 or 30 cents, far better than those formerly retailed for 40 or 50 cents. The old sieves had wooden rims, and a nest occupied considerable space in a railroad car in transportation. It has been discovered that a nest of tin sieves occupies so much less space that the reduction of freight alone is almost a sufficient margin for profit. While in that establishment I saw some dozen of barrels filled with tin baby rattles about to be shipped to England. It is a point worthy of notice that labor is cheaper in England than in the United States; that our tin comes from England; and yet this manufacturing company, by this patented machinery, is able to send these baby rattles to that country. So these gentlemen of Chicago are amusing the infantile community of England and putting money in their pockets by the operation.

San Stefano.

San Stefano, where the peace negotiations between Russia and the porte were conducted, is under the shadow of the old walls, which have not been besieged for 400 years. Close by are the seven towers, within whose massive keep a Russian ambassador has often been imprisoned, and the walled-up gate through which the Moslems expect the Christians will re-enter Constantinople when they recapture it. Here, too, according to a Standard correspondent, is the chapel, in whose devoutly worshiped wells live the miraculous fish which jumped out of the frying pan on the day of the taking of Constantinople, and have lived on until now with one side cooked, and the other waiting until, in the fullness of things, it can in its turn be submitted to the fire. During the massacre of Chio, a number of Greek children who had been carried off by the Turks were ransomed, and afterward educated by a philanthropic society. One of these boys, who was ransomed and educated by Americans, has become a wealthy householder at San Stefano. It was under the roof of this Chiote exile, who has been trained by American missionaries, that the conqueror of Turkey, the Grand Duke Nicholas, received shelter while the diplomatists were chattering over the conditions of peace.

Why Women Should Read.

[Scribner for April.]

Laying aside the thought of our own rest and comfort, let us look a little higher. For the children's sake we must make the most of ourselves. Many an unselfish mother has said, "Oh, I can not take all this time; there are so many things to do for the children." She does not realize that she may do more for them in the end by cultivating herself than if she spends all her time on clothes and cooking. A generosity which makes the recipient weak or selfish is not a blessing but a curse. Have you not seen grown up sons who snubbed their mother's opinions in the same breath with which they called her to bring their slippers? The meek little woman has "trotted around" to wait on [illegible] with hard work that their might be kept soft and white for the piano, and that she has denied herself books and leisure that they might have both. And there are other children too noble for such base ingratitude, who feel a keen though secret sense of loss as they kiss the dear withered cheek and think how much more of a woman "mother" might have been if she had not shut herself away from the culture and sweet companionship of books.

The Closing Scene.

The closing scene of the war is described with great spirit by a correspondent in the Daily News. In a house by the seaside at San Stefano, shaken by the increasing gale that tore across the sea of Marmora, were busy all night long the secretaries of both diplomatic bodies, copying and arranging for the signatures to the treaty of peace, the result of the now concluded negotiations. All night long Prince Tzeteleff dictated the treaty to his colleague, Chebschoff, who wrote and wrote through the long hours, until the document was finished. Abou 4 o'clock the grand duke mounted the rode up to the diplomatic chancery, where he asked at the door, "Is it ready?" and then galloped toward the hill where the army was drawn up. Finally a carriage came whirling out of the village toward us. General Ignatieff was in it, and when he approached he rose and said, "I have the honor to congratulate your highness on the signature of peace." There was a long, loud shout. After riding between the lines the grand duke halted on a little eminence, whence all the troops could be seen, and formally made the announcement of the peace: "I have the honor to inform the army that, with the help of God, we have concluded a treaty of peace." Then another shout burst forth from 20,000 throats, rising, swelling and dying away. After the review, gathering his officers about him where the priests stood ready for the Te Deum, the grand duke spoke briefly and emphatically, saying: "To an army which has accomplished what you have, my friends, nothing is impossible." Then all dismounted, uncovered, and a solemn service was conducted, the soldiers all kneeling. Never was a peace concluded under more impressive surroundings; the two armies face to face, the clearing storm, the waning light of day, the rush of the wind and the near wash of the wave mingling with the chant of the priests, and the responses of the soldiers and the roar of the sea of Marmora swelling and falling. Across the fretting, chafing waters of the sea the dome and slender minarets of St. Sophia came up sharply against the sky, the dominant points in the interesting silhouette of the distant Stamboul. Away to the south the Princes islands rose like great mounds, dark and massive, against the distant Asiatic shore, and behind them was hidden the English fleet. Above and far beyond the white peak of Mount Olympus, unveiled for the moment its majestic summit, as the rays of the ruddy sunset were reflected from the snow colored flanks.

Talked to Death.

A man has nearly talked himself to death in Kern county, California. A loquacious loafer known as Murphue offered to wager $50 that he could keep on talking for 24 consecutive hours, without interruption, and with no other stimulant than Delano whisky, which was to be furnished in unstinted quantity at the loser's expense. The wager was taken by another loafer, and the orator, mounting the stump, began a harangue on the subject of Kearney and the sons of toil. The start was made at 8:30 a. m. By 10:30 p. m. the demijohn had gone down cellar three times to catch breath, with no visible decrease in Murphue's stock of words. At 2:30 the next morning Kearney had been disposed of together with the contents of another demijohn. An argument in favor of the Chinese was then taken up. Murphue's articulation at 7 a. m. became rather husky, and the thread of his argument rather difficult to follow, but he kept at it. One bet of $70 was offered and accepted that he would not hold out, as he had swallowed, during the time of delivery, four gallons of whisky. When time was at last called, and the wager declared fairly won, Murphue's powers of endurance were exhausted. He fell from his cramped position on the chair and rolled over under the billiard table, a spongy mass of flesh and whisky; but, strange to say, his lips in this comatose condition still moved.

An Amiable King.

Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, is one of the most amiable monarchs in Europe, and is well beloved by the people whom he governs. It is claimed for him that he has none of the ordinary vices of despotic rulers he is neither impatient, idle nor dissolute. Married to a beautiful and genial princess, he lives with her a life of great simplicity, superintending the education of his children, reading, studying and taking hardly any other recreation than shooting. Many a tourist has met him strolling unattended in the park of Schonbrunn; and it always pleased him when such persons, mistaking him, from his Tyrolese hat and green collared gray jacket, for some upper keeper, asked him to show them their way about. It is said that an English family whom he once led over his palace and grounds wound up by presenting him with two florins, which he pocketed with becoming gravity, remarking afterward that it was the first money he had ever earned.

An Early York Cabbage in the Senate.

[Washington Post.]

Mr. George E. Spencer, formerly a sutler of volunteers but now acting in lieu of a senator from Alabama, recently opened the chief cavity in the exaggerated Early York cabbage which serves him for an intellectual repository, to eject certain things which he would probably define as opinions. Mr. Spencer thinks there is going to be the greatest Indian war next summer that we have ever had. This is not strange. Mr. Spencer recently announced his intention of settling in the Black Hills as soon as his present contract to obstruct the senatorial representation of Alabama expires, and it is very natural that the Indians should resent the indignity. If we were an Indian and Mr. Spencer threatened to deposit his carpetbag anywhere in our vicinity we would most certainly fight until the last armed foe expired.

A Saratoga tramp 13 years old, returned to his native village last week after an extended tour. He left his father's house about the middle of February, without a cent in his pocket, and went to Albany on the cars. Thence he made his way to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo and Syracuse. He begged his way from place to place.

The Sentinel is [illegible] the most [illegible] of any paper in the city. It is especially valuable in this season of the year for its reports of markets.

[Winamac Democrat.]

The Sentinel is one of the very best papers published in the west, and outside of the discussion of political principles, contains full market reports from all the great centers of trade.

[Rochester Sentinel.]

The Indianapolis Weekly Sentinel is a large and ably conducted democratic paper, full of state news and correct in its market reports. Every family in the country ought to have it this year.

[Tipton Times.]

The Sentinel, both daily and weekly, is an excellent paper. When our citizens send out of the state for their news they not only commit a blunder, but work against the interests of the democracy.

[Saturday Mercury.]

We call the attention of our numerous readers to the prospectus of the Indianapolis Sentinel. No one should be without it. Its bold advocacy of the rights of the people commend it to every friends in the country.

[Bedford Journal (Rep.)]

If any of our democratic friends would like a paper that walks square up to the mark of democracy, they ought to take the Sentinel, for surely it is the leader of the party in the state. The Sentinel and Journal will be furnished together for two dollars.

[Rockport Gazette.]

We kindly ask every reader of our paper to examine the inducements offered by the Indianapolis Sentinel company in another column—their large, well edited, newsy weekly and a map of Indiana for only $1.30 for one year. We found a Spencer county man last Monday who says he takes it, and that it is to-day the best democratic and most newsy paper he takes. It contains news of all kinds, besides its gentle firmness for the party. If you have any idea of taking it, let the Gazette know, and we will have a sample copy sent you. Take it at once.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

One dollar and thirty cents will secure the Indiana State Sentinel from now until March 1, 1879, and also the Sentinel map of Indiana, the latest and most complete map of the state yet issued, postage paid on both.

Send your subscription at once and secure the Weekly Sentinel and map of Indiana.

Only $1.30 will pay for the Weekly Sentinel and the Sentinel's new Map of Indiana, both postage paid, or Ropp's Easy Calculator, a work that no farmer, mechanic or business man should be without, sent in place of map, if desired.

The Sentinel is in every sense the PAPER OF THE PEOPLE.

It advocates justice and fair living opportunities for industry and labor.

That there be no more class legislation.

A reduction of the present ruinous rate of interest.

An immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption law.

The remonetization of silver.

Withdrawal of national bank notes—greenbacks and silver to be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, without limit.

The bondholder to be paid no more than the contract and to share equally the burdens of government with industry and labor.

ON TRIAL.

We are confident the Sentinel will not be stopped where once tried, and therefore submit the above extraordinary offer.

The Woman's Hotel—Wm. M. Tweed—A Ride on Long Island, &c.

NEW YORK, April 17, '78.

Stewart's hotel for working women is at last complete, and open for all those women who choose to pay from six to ten dollars a week for enjoying the luxury of a first class hotel, a hotel that cost the builder over two million. The objects of the late Mr. A. S. Stewart, in planning this hotel have been generally understood by the public. From the first publication there was an impression that he meant to found a "home," in which poor girls and women who were obliged to work in shops, or sew could obtain comfortable lodging and wholesome food for a very small sum of money. But this it seems, was not Mr. Stewart's intention. The woman's hotel is not for this class at all, but for those who are able to earn from ten to fifteen dollars a week. The hotel is undoubtedly a good institution for the class of inmates who will be able to pay the rates demanded, and willing to submit to the rules and regulations framed for their government. Most of these are excellent, while others meet with strong opposition. They remind us at once of our boarding school days. The gas in the parlors, library, and public rooms, will be turned off at eleven o'clock in the evening, and the gas in the rooms at half past eleven. No extra furniture, dogs, cats, birds, or pets of any kind will be allowed. The inmates must have their washing done in the hotel laundry, for which an extra price is to be paid, a small extra price is to be paid for the use of the bath room. The arrangement of the building leaves nothing to be desired in the shape of comfort, security or elegance. There is five hundred sleeping rooms, and accommodations for one thousand boarders. One excellent feature of the hotel is the setting apart of a limited number of rooms for the use of ladies visiting the city on business. In such cases the manager must have notice, and the rooms engaged in advance. When the hotel is filled nearly two hundred waiters will be required to serve the guests, and the hotel working staff will number about four hundred persons.

Wm. M. Tweed is no more. To-day he is to be buried. After some dispute his body will be allowed a resting place in Greenwood Cemetry. His funeral was preached by several ministers on Sunday, hardly in the same spirit that we generally hear a funeral sermon, but according to Tweed's presentiments before he died, his life was made the subject and illustration of the text, "The way of the Transgressor is hard," drawing a moral to warn this generation.

But let's leave this funeral talk, follow at my suggestion, and we will take a ride out of this labyrinth of streets, alleys, elevated railroads, and street-car tracks, and see something of Long Island. Just imagine one of the days of which the poet speaks, seated in a cozy buggy, drawn by a fast horse, a cheerful companion by your side, one of Long Island's own, and therefore very enthusiastic, and ready to point out all the beauty spots, embellishing each with some pleasing incident. But my memory is growing so treacherous I dare not inflict you with disjointed accounts, notwithstanding their was an interesting story of a "haunted house" we passed, and we could imagine our hat raise as we saw (?) the long talked of ghost, flit from window to window, peering forth with blood shot eyes, and reaching out with long bony fingers, reminding us of all the ghost stories heard of in infancy, read of in childhood, and disbelieved in after cutting our wisdom teeth. Here we are at Jamaica, a beautiful village about the size of Auburn, with many handsome residences, which are used mostly by persons having business in the city, and like a quiet home and plenty of fresh air. After breaking bread with our esteemed friends, Dr. H. and lady, we continue our ride in an easterly direction, crossing what is called the back bone of Long Island, a beautiful ridge of hills. We pass to villages on our way to Creedmore, the far famed shooting field. We were fortunate enough to find some amateurs on the ground, shooting at the target at a distance of 1,000 yards. 'Twas really interesting to notice the different attitudes they take for shooting. First one tall man lays back on his elbows, with the gun resting on his toes. Another lays on his side, with the gun resting on his knee, while a third lays flat on his back with head elevated, but they hit the the mark, that is the most remarkable feature of it all. Your imagination will have to be very acute to see all the novelty and beauty of Creedmore from my discription. 'Tis one vast beautiful plain with a hill on the south where the targets are placed, just in front of which is a deep ditch, in which a man stands with brushes of different colors, which he uses to erase the bullet marks, and at the same time the color of the brush denotes the value of the shot, and leaves a clean surface for the next shot. In the warm weather the grounds round about are covered with tents, for the accommodation of those who practice. From Creedmore we drive to Flushing, the most beautiful town on the Island, and I can say with a clear conscience, the most beautiful town I ever saw. The scenery is beautiful, the residences are elegant and home like, and being on the Sound, is cool in summer. You can get to New York in a few minutes ride, either by rail or water Altogether 'tis so pleasant we should love to tarry a life time, but must away, and from here to Westbury, where we expected to find a town, but were agreeably disappointed in finding it only a pleasant country place, consisting of a few nice residences, the only public buildings being a depot and two meeting houses, one built almost a century ago, and the other has stood the storms ever since the days of Elias Hicks. Two miles further to the north west we ascended Roslyn Hill, the highest point on the island, and here we alight and climb the tower, about seventy-five feet high. After taking a good breath of fresh air we looked about us with genuine delight, first to the north west, where the cities of New York and Brooklyn are plainly seen eighteen miles away, and I don't think it was imagination when I said I saw the Brooklyn bridge connecting the two cities. Turning to the north we could see "over the hill" and sound to the State of New York, on the east we had a beautiful landscape view, worthy of a painter's notice. On the south a glimpse of the ocean, and on the west—yes I think it was all imagination when I said I saw a base ball match in Auburn, between the Doctors and Lawyers. You see I am getting light headed up here, so we will decend, and continue our ride. And here we are at the residence of Wm. Cullan Bryant, just east of Roslyn village, a very picturesque situation on the side of a hill and near the water's edge. We notice a beautiful artificial lake, with a fountain in the center, and near it a cozy summer house where we imagine he oftime courts his muse, or when spreading his wings for a loftier flight, we see him on a high hill near by where stands an easy chair, shaded by a full grown tree. Here we leave him and follow a winding road along the beach four miles, every turn bringing to our view something new and interesting, and before we are through with out exclamation points we are at Glen Cove and Sea Cliff, two places of summer resort, the principal feature of one being a large camp ground, with cottages and tabernacle for camp meeting, and of the other an extensive starch factory.

We choose an inland road on our return, which gave us a view of nice farming country, with here and there a magnificent country house. Altogether we are favorably impressed with Long Island, and especially the people we met there. THILDIC.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Humorous Stories Told of the Actress Who Has Played "Topsy" Thirty-five Hundred Times.

[From the New York Graphic.]

During the thirty-five hundred times that Mrs. G. C. Howard has played Topsy she has met with many laughable adventures. It was necessary on one occasion to leave on the midnight train, after the performance, for a distant city in which to play the following Monday night. Hurry as they did, the curtain fell very late, only giving her time to seize her traveling cloak and baggage and reach this outgoing train. With the Eva of this tour by the hand, and her anxious Howard, loaded with satchels, the party boarded the cars while in motion out of the depot.

Mrs. Howard, who had no time to wash up, attracted little attention, being accepted, as the nurse of the lovely little Eva, but once ensconsed in their "section," the original Topsy seized a toilet satchel and made for the dressing-room. A young colored girl, considering this a good opportunity to get acquainted with the other darkey nurse, followed her in and then she beheld her supposed country-woman undergoing a transition—the inky fluids poured over Topsy's face each time leaving it a lighter shade.

The colored stopped not upon the order of leaving, but left at once, shouting through the car, "She's done come white; fo' de Lord dat nigger is all washin' off! Run, boss, an' I never will forgin ye. Only get me some of dat ar soap!"

Thus the excited darkey whooped up and down the car till every passenger was on end with curiosity and anxiety to know if a collision had taken place, and many a hearty laugh was had with the quiet little lady who had 'done come white" the night before.

"LOVE, JOY, PEACE."

During a long run of "Uncle Tom" in an eastern city, the family of the gentle Eva went to house-keeping, and during the occupation of the elder forces a small boy—brother to Eva (the Eva on this occasion being Miss Lulu Prior)—strayed away and was lost in the strange city. Moving was suspended and hunting commenced; but the child was not found. Audiences must not be disappointed, however, and so the poor little sister was forced to array herself for the part, wash off the tears, and try and forget that her little brother was lost. But during the evening the runaway was found, and the parents, to relieve their little daughter's mind, took him directly to the theater.

The death scene of Eva was on; Topsy with her apron over her head, crouched on the floor. Seeing out of a corner the recovered youth, Topsy said in a whisper: "Hold young Nebuchodnezzer up."

Eva lay upon the couch—St. Clair bent over her with the question.

"What do you see, Eva, darling?" To which she was only to reply.

"Love—joy—peace,' and then fall back dead upon the pillow.

Just as Eva raised her head feebly, lifted her hand, and commenced the broken sentence, she spied her refound brother. With a cry of joy, she extended her little arms to ward him, and broke out:

"Oh, see—see, he's found! he's there, and I never thought to see my little brother again;' then recollecting her part, she gave a great gulp of fright, fell back spasmodically to the studied words, and cried out, 'Love!—joy!—peace!" and dropped her head upon the pillow

The scene was never more affecting—sobs were heard on all sides. The speech was so heartfelt that the audience felt sure it was a part of the play—that the dying Eva was supposed to have a vision of a lost brother, waiting on the mystic shore for the launching of the little life leaving this—and many of them, no doubt feel cheated to this day of a clever point by the cutting down of Eva's death speech to the words, "Love!—joy!—peace!"

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health. but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

THE OLD STONE MILL.

BY [illegible] J. HALL.

Down at the foot of the village hill,
Mossy and gray, stands the old Stone Mill,

With its sagging roof, its rotten frame,
Its creaking wheel and its dusty room.

Groff, the miller, was old and gray:
He'd a heart of flint, and a surly way.

His eyes were sunken, his nose was red,
And the hair like bristles upon his head.

His furrowed features were dark and grim,
And he hated the world as it hated him.

The one fair hope, in his darksome way,
Was his blue-eyed grandchild, little May;

And a love for her, sincere and true,
Was the only virtue the old man knew.

The fairest flowers the world has known
In the rudest places have often grown.

The sweetest blossoms [illegible] the year
May soonest wither and disappear.

The days went by with their toil and care—
The summer roses bloomed fresh and fair—

And the winds of autumn tossed and whirled
The leaves of the woodland about the world;

And the river ran by the old Stone Mill—
But the gate was down, and the wheel stood still,

While the village children sadly said:
"The miller is gone, and the child is dead."

* * * *

The waving willows again are green,
And the summer evenings once more serene.

Down at the foot of the village hill,
Mossy and gray, stands the old Stone Mill.

But the miller sits in the doorway there
With a kinder look than he used to wear.

Grief has melted his heart of stone,
And brought him nearer Our Father's Throne;

And he tells the children who come that way
Of the wondrous beauty of little May.

A WORD IN SEASON.

The day accommodation on the Shore Line was making its deliberate way eastward, curving with every curve of the Connecticut shore, and clinging to the water-side as though actuated by a sentiment for coast scenery. On one side of the track lay the blue, white-capped sea; on the other, low rolling hills with foregrounds of brown meadow and golden sedge; over all, a superb arch of sun and sky. It was a delicious late autumn day, and Miss Mallows found "That Husband of Mine" so little engrossing—perhaps because of her maidenly unacquaintance with the possessive case of that article—that she flung it down and betook herself to gazing from the window. She was growing dreamy, as gazers at a rapidly-changing scene are apt to do, when a word reached her ear, and aroused curiosity enough to make her turn her head. It was a woman's name, and an uncommon one—"Arethusa."

The person who uttered it was a man. His seat was on the opposite side of the car, and a little in advance of that which Miss Mallows herself occupied, and she now observed that there was something odd about his appearance. His head and shoulders were massive and finely formed; his face seen in profile was a good one, with kindly eyes and a striking forehead, broad and benevolent. But there was something dwarfish in his attitude, and when presently he half rose to shut the window it became apparent that he was a dwarf. There was no deformity, but the large head and broad shoulders were balanced by a miserable pair of little legs not longer than those of a child of ten. He was not young, for there were grizzled hairs about his temples and in his full beard, and altogether his appearance was half repulsive and half attractive, and awoke a feeling compounded of good-will and pity so strangely mingled that it was hard to tell which predominated.

His companion—evidently the "Arethusa" addressed—was a girl not over 20, of that delicate type of prettiness known as "American," which fades so early, but is charming in its brief flower-time. Her new gray suit, crepe lisse ruffles at the throat and wrist, the crisp feather in her hat, even the shining red leather of her red traveling-bag, and the perfectly fresh, carefully-put-on glove, bespoke the bride, but there was something very unbridal in the face which these fineries surrounded. The eyes, blue in tint and beautifully shaped and set, were swollen with crying, the lips quivered nervously, every vestige of color had fled from the round, childish cheeks, and the hands in the new gloves were pinched together with a tightness like terror. Once or twice as Miss Mallows watched she fought with emotion, and called up a wan little smile in answer to something said to her, but she never spoke. Her companion, on the contrary, talked incessantly, in a low-voiced, steady strain. Miss Mallows could catch only a word now and then, and her curiosity about the couple grew so strong that she felt that she would pay any price to know their story. There could be no doubt as to their relation, she thought; they were husband and wife, and just married. The little man evidently had no thought except for his bride. Mile after mile he talked and talked, devouring her with his eyes the while, and she sat with half-averted head, never meeting his gaze or replying by a word to anything he said. Once she turned and looked full at Miss Mallows with a wild appeal in her face which was startling, but she instantly looked away, and presently laid her arm on the window-sill and her head on her arm, and began to cry in a still, dreadful manner, not sobbing aloud, but trembling all over with a pent-up feeling which was worse than outbreak. The man tried in vain to soothe her; she repelled him gently but decidedly, and at last he gave up the attempt, and silently sat beside her with a grave, troubled face.

"I shall die if I can't find out about those people," thought the excited observer on the other side of the car. But she didn't die, neither could she find out. One can not walk up to perfect strangers and demand, "Your story or your life!"—it is impossible. So Miss Mallows sat still, her conjecture aflame and her fingers fairly twitching with impatience, till at last the train stopped at a small way-station, and the little man, rising from his seat—and, alas! looking even shorter than when he sat—said, in a gentle, deprecatory tone, "Now, Arethusa."

With that they vanished. Miss Mallows had one more glimpse of them, getting into a brand-new carry-all, which looked as though it might be a part of the wedding outfit, and then the train bore her away. Her thoughts remained behind with the people in whom she had taken so sudden and violent an interest.

"I wonder, wonder, who they are, and why on earth she married him!" ran her reflections. "So young and pretty, and so evidently unhappy! And, for all her prettiness, it wasn't an educated face, or a lady's—he looked far nicer than she. I feel exactly as though I had dipped into the middle chapter of an exciting novel, and then somebody had taken away the book. What wouldn't I give to read the beginning and end of it! 'That Husband of Mine,' indeed! Stupid wretch!" And she gave the volume a vicious little knock. "How is one to endure such twaddle, when really interesting things like this are happening in real life all the time! Let me see—where was it that those people got out?" consulting her ticket. "Upham Corners—that is only ten, eleven, thirteen miles from Patunxet. Perhaps Margaret Lenox may know something of them. I'll ask her."

Felicia—I am tired of calling her Miss Mallows, which name, besides, seems to belie her frank, impulsive nature—had her desire gratified sooner than she had dared to hope.

Mr. Lenox was late to tea that night, and explained the fact by saying, "I went four miles out of my road to see David Dalrymple's new steam-thresher, and, behold, when I got there, it was locked up, and he away with the key in his pocket. And what do you think, Margaret?—he had gone to be married!"

"Not really!"

"Really. I tried to pump old Sally as to the age and antecedents of the bride, but she was taken deaf at once, and not a word could I extract. Master David had told her to have a good fire and boil a ham—that was all; and she wasn't one to ask questions about things as didn't consarn her. Then she pinched her lips tight and began to poke the fire; and, as it struck me that the remark about things which didn't 'consarn' people was meant to be personal, I gave it up and came away."

"Oh dear! What dreadful woman do you suppose has pounced on that poor little David? An old maid, of course, or some harpy of a widow."

"I can't say as to that, but I imagine she's good-looking, and that David is in love with her."

"Dear, what makes you think that?"

"Oh, because of the pains he has taken about the house. Lots of new furniture, and everything redded up. He's bought a carry-all, Sally said."

"Who is this person that you are talking about?" asked Felicia.

"A neighbor of ours—seven miles off, to be sure, but that counts as neighborhood in the country. Such a nice, clever man, Felicia, a good farmer too, and thoroughly respectable in every way; but, poor fellow! so unfortunate in his appearance—a dwarf almost, with the had and shoulders of a grown person, and stunted legs no bigger than a child's."

"Oh!" almost shrieked Miss Mallows, "that must be my little man in the car. I came all the way from New Haven with him and his bride;" and she plunged into a description which left Mrs. Lenox as much excited as her friend.

"I must see her!" she cried. "We'll drive over in a day or two."

Weather was unpropitious, however, and the day or two proved nearly a fortnight. Mrs. Lenox had a double errand, being provided with a basketful of Zonale geraniums to be exchanged for cuttings from old Sally's famous chrysanthemums; but when, after knocking a long time at the seldom-used front-door of the farm-house, they made their way round to the kitchen, and from thence to the family sitting-room, no one was visible, and the fireless hearth and neatly-piled books and papers on the table made it evident that the appartment had not been used of late. While they lingered and wondered, a creaking step came down the stairs, and old Sally, with a tea-cup in her hand, entered the room. She saluted the ladies grimly.

"Thank ye, Miss Lenox. I'd like the geraniums well enough if I'd time tew round with 'em, but just now my hands is full, without taking care of plants, a nussing Miss Dalrymple?"

"Mr. Dalrymple's wife? Is she ill?"

"Yes, she is and she ain't. 'Tain't no pertikilar kind of sickness as I can see; but she's weak as water, and looks bad. I give her pennyroyal when she fust come, thinkin' it might be she'd ketched an inside cold on the journey; but it didn't do no good, and she kep' on not eatin' nothin' and gettin' more and more peakin', till finally she took to her bed, and to-day Mr. David's gone over for the doctor. He set up with her last night. She didn't want him to, but he said he shouldn't sleep anyhow, and he'd ruther. It don't seem as if it need take up any time a-waitin' on her, for she don't ask for anything from day's end to day's end; but sickness takes steps any way you fix it, and I hain't done much except go up stairs and down agin these four days."

"Dear me!" began Mrs. Lenox. But Felicia, moved by an impulse, broke in:

"I think I must have come on in the same train with Mrs. Dalrymple. I wonder if I might go up and see her?"

Rather to her surprise Sally made no objection.

"She hain't said she wouldn't see nobody, and mebbe it'll rouse her up a bit," was her ultimatum, and Miss Mallows ran lightly up. A door stood half open; she tapped, and, in answer to a faint "Come in," entered the bedroom, where, covered with a resplendent star-patterned patch-work quilt, lay her late fellow-traveler.

The pale cheeks, from which much of the childish roundness had wasted, flushed at sight of her.

"I hope you will forgive me for coming up so unceremoniously," began Felicia, speaking rapidly to hide her own nervousness. "Your old housekeeper gave me leave, and—well, I felt so sorry for you, sick and alone in a strange place, that I wanted to come. If it tires you, you must send me away."

The girl looked at her a moment in silence. Then she said: "Won't you sit down? There's a chair."

Miss Mallows sat down. She was a pleasant object to look at in her olive greens and pheasant browns, with cheeks and eyes brightened by frosty air, and the invalid felt it.

"You was in the car the day I came, wasn't you?" she said. "I recollect your hat. I've been sick 'most ever since. It seems a long time."

"The first few weeks in a new place are apt to seem long," replied Felicia, kindly; "and I dare say you miss your home."

"I haven't any home to miss"—sadly.

"Indeed!"

"No. I don't remember my folks at all, or scarcely. My father he died when I was born, and my mother when I wasn't but 2. I hadn't anybody else, so they sent me to the Orphan Asylum, and I lived there fifteen years."

"Poor child! Did you? And what then?"

"Then I was took by Mr. Parker over to Cheshire. I was their help, but they was very good to me, and it was most of a home I'd ever had. Miss Parker she liked to have me call her 'aunt' and I did."

"And then you married Mr. Dalrymple."

"Yes." The blue eyes clouded over, and the lips closed tightly over the one word.

"And now I hope you'll have a real home of your own at last. What a pleasant old place this is! Even at this season one can see that. And my friends tell me that Mr. Dalrymple is so kind and good and clever, and so much respected in the neighborhood. I am sure you cannot fail to be happy with him, though just at first the farm may seem a little lonely and strange."

The reply to these well-meant remarks was unexpected, for the bride burst into a violent fit of crying, which no soothing on the part of her dismayed guest availed to check.

"I'll tell you all about it," she sobbed at last, quieting a little, and won to confidence, as it were, by the tears in Felicia's own eyes. "I haven't had any one to tell before, and I'm so unhappy. I didn't ever think I should feel so when I got married. They all said I should be a fool if I didn't take Mr. Dalrymple, because he was so well off, and he wanted me so much; even Miss Parker she said she couldn't countenance no such a thing as my sayin' no, and I'd never have such another chance the longest day I lived. Then I'd never had no one to do for me before, and he gave me such a lot of things, and I did so like to look nice and pretty like ladies do, and so—I did. And then, somehow, when it was all over, and I had to go off with him, it come to me all of a sudden what I'd done, and how my whole life was a-going to be just the same thing always, and he was always going to be there, and I know the girls laughed at us behind our backs, and Louisa Brooks called him 'Spindle-toes,' and yet I'd got to stay by him and never go anywhere else, or be anything else. And it all came over me, and it was awful! I hadn't even realized it before." And she looked with piteous eyes into Miss Mallows' face, who stroked her hand gently, but wisely made no answer as yet.

"I s'pose folks do call this a pleasant place," she went on, after a little pause, "but it don't look pleasant to me. I ain't used to the country, or to being alone all day. There was 200 of us at the asylum, and at Miss Parker's we was close to the town, and could see folks a-passing and hear wagons. It's so still here I can hear myself think almost, and the wind makes noises in the chimney, and I lie awake at night and listen. It's like a voice, and it says, 'Alone! alone! alone!' and groans, and frightens me awfully."

"I don't think it says that," exclaimed Miss Mallows, with a sudden inspiration. "It says, 'A home! a home! a home!' That's what the wind always seems to me to say in homely old chimneys like these." Then she thought to herself, Shall I? or shan't I? I hate preaching, and I hate meddling; but there's a chance to do a bit of good, maybe, and—yes, I'll risk it.

"Now listen to me, dear," she went on, aloud, softening her voice as if to a child. "This is what I think about your position. It seems to me that you are just at the point when you must decide for yourself whether you'll be a happy woman or an unhappy one for the rest of your life."

"How? What do you mean?"

"Why, you were a lonely girl, you know, with no real home of your own, and here a good man has come along and taken you into his. He loves you dearly now, and you have a great deal of influence over him, and can do pretty much as you like now; but how long will that last if you go on crying and being unhappy and showing how little you care for him?"

"I don't know," whispered the bride, faintly.

"Then you are married, you know. You have given a promise, and must keep it, even if it makes you sorry. Promises are solemn things. But I think you can keep it and be happy, too. And it strikes me you have a chance to do a most beautiful thing."

"What is that?" wonderingly.

"To make up to a good man who loves you for a hard, hard thing in his life. Think how dreadful it must always have been for your husband, with his clever mind and fine face, to feel himself in one respect inferior to the stupidest laborer who works in his fields. It must have hurt him cruelly always, and, if he were not a sweet-hearted person by nature, it must have made him hard and sour. Now, for the first time, something delightful has come into his life. He has married you, and it seems to me such a chance as few women have to be able to be so much to any one as you can be to him. And—don't think I want to preach; but God always blesses those who try to do right, and, if you make your husband happy, I think He will bless you and make you happy, too."

Her eyes ran over as she ended her little speech.

"Felicia!" sounded from below—"Felicia, we ought to be going."

"Must you go?" cried Mrs. Dalrymple, sitting up in bed. "Thank you ever so. You've done me a heap of good. I'll never forget you—never. Oh—what's your name?"

"Felicia—Felicia Mallows. Good-by, dear; and don't forget that the wind in the chimney never says 'alone' when two people who care for each other are together." Then they said good-by. "I shall come again if I can before I leave," declared Miss Mallows. Old Sally, coming up to hasten her movements, was astonished to see the two exchange a kiss.

"Why, whatever has she done to the cretur?" she muttered, as the pony-wagon rolled away. "She looks twice as alive as she did afore they came."

We drop a tiny seed into the ground, or we watch a winged messenger detach itself from the parent plant and float away on its separate errand, and we are scarcely conscious that with the act a new sequence of energies and possibilities began, and the world is the richer for a fresh point of growth. Felicia Mallows had no chance for another visit to the Dalrymple farm that autumn, and it was two years before she saw it again, during which time the image of the oddly-circumstanced little bride faded into dim distance, as images will in this overcrowded world. Another visit to Patunxet revived it into sudden life.

"Whatever became of that little neighbor of yours who married a young girl?" she asked Mrs. Lenox. "It was when I was last here. She was sick. Don't you recollect our going there?"

"Yes, now that you recall it, I do; and the unconscionable time you staid up-stairs in her bedroom. I believe she is well. Her baby was baptized a few Sundays ago."

"Have they a baby?"

"Yes; a little girl. By-the-way—" Mrs. Lenox was called off, and did not finish her sentence. Next day Miss Mallows borrowed the pony-wagon for a solitary drive.

"I want to see my little friend, Mrs. Dalrymple," she explained; "and, supposing her to be up-stairs, you might get tired of old Sally."

"Thank you, my dear, I should. You are welcome to the pony."

It was a September as mild as June; and, when Miss Mallows drove through the farm gate, she saw its mistress sitting in the porch, her sleeping baby in its wagon beside her, and her sewing in her hands. She dropped it with a start of joy when she caught sight of her guest.

"It is you!" she cried. "Oh, I am so glad!"

Is there any flattery equal to that "you?"

"You haven't forgotten me, then?" said Felicia.

"Oh, no; how could I forget? You came when I was all sick and miserable and lifted me right out of it. There's never been a day since when I haven't thought of you."

"Then you are sick and miserable no longer?" said Miss Mallows, with a second kiss. "That is happy news."

"Oh, no; I am quite contented now. David is ever so good to me, and I think more of him every day. And then there's my baby."

"Let me see her. What a sweet little face!"

"Isn't it?" with an exultant smile. "And she's much prettier with her eyes open. They're not blue; they're dark gray, like her father's, and just lovely. And I named her after you. Felicia Davida! that's her name. How I wish he was here! I've told him heaps about you. He's over in the field yonder with the hay-cutters. They do twice as well if he sits by and looks after them."

"Dear Mrs. Dalrymple, how glad I am to see you again! And to think of naming your baby after me!"

"Oh, I wanted to. You were so good to me that day. All you said to me came true. I couldn't think more of David than I do now if he was as tall as Goliath. He's little, but he's got the biggest heart.—That's right, baby; wake up, and tell the lady that papa is the best man in the world. He is, isn't he?—Do you hear her? She says yes?"—Harper's Bazar.

Idiosyncrasies of Men of Genius.

Most geniuses and men of great talent nave been known for some peculiar habit or striking idiosyncrasy. Napoleon would tremble with fear at the sight of a cat; Gen. Elliott, of Gibraltar fame, was always accompanied by a number of them. Johnson liked to imbibe floods of tea or wine, and yet "be none the worse for it." Porson drank everything that came in his way. Visiting once a friend's house, when evening came they desired to feed the lamp, but the bottle was empty; Porson had drank the spirits on the sly, not knowing it was intended for the lamp. Douglas Jerrold could not bear the smell of apples. Cavendish hated women. If he met one of his own female servants by accident in any part of the house, she was instantly dismissed. Garrick was vain almost to the degree of insanity. Rousseau was vain, and could not write except when dressed as a fop. Bulwer Lytton, it is said, could write best when dressed in a court suit. Marlborough was a miser, mended his own stockings to save paying for it, and would walk home ever so late at night rather than pay for a chair. Napoleon did his "thinking" and formed his plans for conquest while pacing in a garden, shrugging his shoulders now and then as if to help and "compress" thought. When Thiers was engaged in his long oratorical displays, he always had beside him a supply of rum and coffee. The coffee he got direct from Mecca. Gibson dictated walking in his room, like Scott and many others. Moliere wrote with his knees near the fire, and Bacon liked to study in a small room, which, he said, helped him to condense his thoughts. George Stephenson used to lie in bed for two or three days, the better to "think out" his plans. It would be better if many people would do this who have much thinking to do, as rest favors abstraction and thought and those who have not a vigorous circulation find the supply of blood to the brain assisted by a recumbent position.

Diamond Found in Alabama.

Prof. J. E. Bassett, of French Broad, N. C., who is now in Wetumpka, Ala., has a diamond not only of enormous size, but remarkable purity. It was found by his wife, Mrs. A. H. Bassett, on the bank of the Coosa river, just below the falls, within the corporate limits of Wetumpka. As soon as the professor exhibited the stone he was offered $10,000 for it. He had the stone examined by W. J. Preston, a watchmaker and jeweler, who pronounced it intrinsically worth $75,000.—Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer.

FUNNY MARK TWAIN.

His Speech at the Bayard Taylor Banquet, in New York.

I have been warned—as, no doubt, have all among you that are inexperienced—that a dinner to our Ambassador is an occasion which demands, and even requires, a peculiar caution and delicacy in the handling of the dangerous weapon of speech. I have been warned to avoid all mention of international politics, and all criticisms, however mild, of countries with which we are at peace, lest such utterances embarrass our Minister and our Government in their dealings with foreign states. In a word, I have been cautioned to talk, but be careful not to say anything. I do not consider this a difficult task.

Now, it has often occurred to me, the conditions under which we live at the present day. With the revelations of theology all about us, viewing, upon the one hand, the majestic configurations of the Silurian, Oolitic—old red sandstone periods, and, upon the other, the affiliations, and stratifications, and ramifications of the pre-historic, post-pliocene, ante-penultimate epochs, we are stricken dumb with amazed surprise, and can only lift up our hands and say with that wise but odious Frenchman—it was a slip of the tongue, sir, and wholly unintentional—entirely unintentional. It would ill-become me, upon an occasion like this, purposely to speak slightingly of a citizen of a country with which we are at peace, and especially great and gracious France, whom God preserve! The subject, however, is a delicate one, and I will not pursue it.

But—as I am about to remark—cast your eye abroad, sir, for one pregnant moment over the vista which looms up before you in the mighty domain of intellectual progression, and contemplate the awe-compelling theory of the descent of man! Development, sir! Development! Natural selection! Correlation of the sexes! Spontaneous combustion! what gulfs and whirlwinds of intellectual stimulus these magic words fling upon the burning canvas of the material universe of soul! Across the chasm of the ages we take the oyster by the hand and call him brother; and back, and still further back, we go, and breathe the germ we cannot see, and know in him our truer Adam! And, as we stand dazed, transfixed, exalted, and gaze down the long procession of life, marking how steadily, how symmetrically, we have ascended, step by step, to our sublime estate and dignity of humanity—out of one lowly form into a little higher, and a little higher form—adding grace after grace, and function after function, with each and every change—developing from tadpoles into frogs, frogs into fishes, fishes into birds, birds into reptiles, reptiles into Russians——I beg a million pardons, sir, and gentlemen; it was a wholly innocent slip of the tongue, and due only to the excitement of debate, for far be it from me, upon such an occasion as this, to cast a seeming slur upon a great nation with which we are at peace—a great and noble Christian nation—whom God expand!

But, as I was about to remark, I maintain—and nothing can ever drive me from that position—that the contributions of the nineteenth century to science and the industrial arts are—are—but of course they are. There is no need to dwell upon that. You look at it yourself. Look at steam! Look at the steamboat, look at the railway, look at the steamship! Look at the telegraph, which enables you to flash your thoughts from world to world, ignoring intervening seas. Look at the telephone, which enables you to speak into affection's remote ear the word that cheers, and into the ear of the foe the opinion which you ought not to risk at shorter range. Look at the sewing machine, look at the fog-horn, look at the bell-punch, look at the book-agent. And, more than all, a thousand times, look at the last and greatest, the aerophone, which will enable Moody and Sankey to stand on the tallest of the Rocky mountains and deliver their message to listening America—and necessarily it will annul and do away with the pernicious custom of taking up a collection. Look at these things, sir, and say if it is not a far prouder and more precious boon to have been born in the nineteenth century than in any century that went before it. Ah, sir, clothed with the all-sufficient grandeur of citizenship in the nineteenth century, even the wild and arid New Jerseyman might—a mistake, sir, a mistake, and entirely unintentional. Of all the kingdoms, principalities, and countries with which it is our privilege to hold peaceful relations, I regard New Jersey as dearest to our admiration, dearest to our heart, the wisest and the purest among the nations. I retire the undiplomatic language, and beg your sympathy and indulgence.

But, as I was about to remark, it has always seemed to me—that is, of course, since I reached a reasoning age—that this much agitated question of future rewards and punishments was one upon which honest and sincere differences of opinion might exist; one individual, with apparently equal justice, but with infinitely more common sense, more intelligence, more justification, leans to a bitter and remorseless detestation of the pitiless Prince of Perdition—a slip of the tongue, I do sincerely assure you—I beg you to let me withdraw that unintentional slur upon the character of that great and excellent personage with whom and whose country we are upon the closest and warmest terms, and who—it is no use, so I will sit down; I don't seem to have any knack at a diplomatic speech. I have probably compromised the country enough for the present.

American Potatoes in England.

Steadily our industries are pressing on English products. The London Times asserts that even American potatoes threaten to drive out the home-bred article. It is not so many years ago but the proposition that an American potato was equal to an English one would have been ridiculed. Our seed-growers introduced the choicer American varieties to public notice, and they soon won their way to public favor. The Times now notes that American potatoes no longer come into their market as "seed," but have, during the last year, taken the higher ground of "wares," being imported in large quantities for direct consumption.

And he moved with a tender grace;
And a smile like the sweep of an angel's wing
Played over his fair young face.

"I bring," he said, and the editor bowed,
For he loved the fair young thing—
"I bring," he murmured, "a poet's song,
A lay of the balmy spring."

Then the editor gathered his cross-cut saw,
And the nail-grab, all the same;
The big sledge-hammer, the long crow-bar,
And the club with the terrible name.

CATASTROPHE.

He tore out each quivering lung;
He pinned him up to the sanctum wall;
So scattered, and yet so young.

MAMMY DOWNEY'S PIES.

One of Bret Harte's Good Stories.

[From Scribner's Monthly.]

The pies and cakes made by the old woman were, I think, remarkable rather for their inducing the same loyal and generous spirit than for their intrinsic excellence, and it may be said appealed more strongly to the noble aspirations of humanity than its vulgar appetite. Howbeit everybody ate Mammy Downey's pies and thought of his childhood. "Take 'em, dear boys," the old lady would say; "it does me good to see you eat 'em; reminds me kinder of my poor Sammy, that, ef he'd lived, would hev been ez strong and big ez you be, but was taken down with lung fever at Sweetwater. I kin see him yet; that's forty years ago, dear! comin' out o' the lot to the bake-house, and smilin' such a beautiful smile, like yours, dear boy, as I handed him a mince or lemming turnover. Dear, dear, how I do run on! and those days is past! but I seem to live in you again!" The wife of the hotel-keeper, actuated by a low jealousy, had suggested that she "seemed to live off them," but as that person tried to demonstrate the truth of her statement by reference to the cost of the raw material used by the old lady it was considered by the camp as too practical and economical for consideration. "Besides," added Cy Perkins, "ef old Mammy wants to turn an honest penny in her old age let her do it. How would you like your old mother to make pies on grub wages? eh!" A suggestion that so affected his hearer (who had no mother) that he bought three on the spot. The quality of these pies had never been discussed but once. It is related that a young lawyer from San Francisco, dining at the Palmetto restaurant, pushed away one of Mammy Downey's pies with every expression of disgust and dissatisfaction. At this juncture, Whisky Dick, considerably affected by his favorite stimulant, approached the stranger's table, and, drawing up a chair, sat uninvited before him.

"Mebbe, young man," he began gravely, "ye don't like Mammy Downey's pies?"

The stranger replied curtly, and in some astonishment, that he did not, as a rule, "eat pie."

"Young man," continued Dick, with drunken gravity, "mebbe you're accustomed to Charlotte rusks and blue mange; mebbe ye can't eat unless your grub is got up by one of them French cooks? Yet we—us boys yar in this camp—calls that pie—a good—a competent pie!"

The stranger again disclaimed anything but a general dislike of that form of pastry.

"Young man," continued Dick, utterly unheeding the explanation—"young man, mebbe you onct had an ole—very ole—mother, who, tottering down the vale o' years, made pies. Mebbe—and it's like your blank epicurean soul—ye turned up your nose on the old woman, and went back on the pies and on her! She that daddled ye wile ye wos a baby—a little baby! Mebbe ye went back on her, and shook her, and played off on her, and gave her away—dead away! And now, mebbe, young man—I wouldn't hurt ye for the world, but mebbe, afore ye leave this yar table, YE'LL EAT THAT PIE!"

The stranger rose to his feet, but the muzzle of a dragoon revolver in the unsteady hand of Whisky Dick caused him to sit down again. He ate the pie, and lost his case likewise, before a rough-and-ready jury.

The Wonders of Electricity.

About two years ago Mr. J. B. Fuller invented and exhibited an electric machine for telegraphic purposes. It then occurred to him that the same apparatus might, with some changes, be made to produce an electric light, and, after considerable labor, he perfected his invention. It was in operation on Saturday evening in the rear of Maltby's oyster depot, at 11 Greenwich avenue. A small steam engine furnishes the motive power for the machine, which is very simple, consisting of an armature revolving between the poles of a powerful electro magnet. A strong current of electricity is thus generated. Two electric wires are attached to the machine, and they convey the electricity to the various burners. Each of these burners consists of two sticks of carbon, separated by a piece of glass, which are attached in an upright position to the wires. The electricity is ignited by the application of an ordinary piece of metal to the burners. The light thus produced is dazzlingly brilliant and very beautiful, so far surpassing the ordinary gas-light that the latter looks yellow and dirty beside it. Any number of lights may be supplied by the same wires, and Mr. Fuller has succeeded in so subdividing the current of electricity that any one of the lights can be extinguished without affecting in the slightest degree the other lights on the same circuit. This had not been accomplished before. Mr. Fuller says he can light buildings in any part of the city by extending his wires to them through the streets. He also says he can light the streets with electricity, and to prove this he has stretched his wire to a post on the sidewalk in front of the building, where he keeps a light burning every evening. This light is far more brilliant than any calcium light, and illuminates the street for a block. One of these lights would illuminate a whole block, and far better, too, than a dozen or more of street lamps. In lighting up a house, porcelain or ground-glass shades are used for softening the glare of the light. The cost of production is very slight, much less than that of the ordinary gas.—New York Sun.

A Beggar's Bank Account.

Barbara Allen, an aged beggar, fell down and died in a fit beside her basket, half filled with cold food, at the Fulton ferry-house, last night. She has been known for many years by all the down-town habitues of New York, and everybody, even the landlord of whom she hired the room, thought her one of the most wretched and abject of her class. In the pocket of her ragged dress was found a bank-book, showing that she had $1,095 to her credit in the Brooklyn Savings Bank. On further investigation the bank-books of five other savings institutions were found sewed into the bosom of her dress, the aggregate amount of her deposits being over $20,000. Her first deposit was made in 1860, and she has never withdrawn a cent. She has always represented herself to be on the verge of starvation, and her nearest neighbors have never dreamed that she was other than bitterly poor.—New York Sun.

Catching the Train.

I was in Franklin but a very short time, and, as I have already been recalled to that happy little city, I shall defer what I have to say until I know more about it. I only know now that its first name is Benjamin, but they always call it Franklin for short. It gets up early and goes to bed early, except on lecture nights, and is, consequently, "healthy, wealthy and wise." You should have seen me chase the train out of Franklin. Heard the whistle just in time to collar a valise that weighs a ton (carry stove-legs in it to keep it from flying up over the housetops, like a balloon, when I set it down), tear myself away from a pleasant little circle of friends, and perhaps I didn't pick up my feet about 800 times a minute. Started the wrong way, and would have been in Cincinnati in twenty minutes if a committee man hadn't caught me and turned me around. Dashed down an alley, to make a short cut to the depot, and fell over a two-horse wagon, collided with a cow, and at last fell into a retired horse-power. Agonized committeemen shouting after me, trying to catch me and endeavoring to keep me headed straight. Every time that valise hit my legs I thought the train had run into me. Fell down twice, and got up with a general impression of having corraled an earthquake, and wished that I hadn't. Ran down the middle of the street, at length, got to the depot clear out of breath, and, in one final, magnificent burst of speed, headed off the train.

Freight; going the wrong way. Man at the depot told me to go in and sit down; my train was late, and would be along in about an hour and a half. I went in, but there were too many people in there, and it was too light. I went out in the dark and sat down on the loneliest trunk I could find. I felt reflective and sad like.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Three Reasons for Dress.

Human clothing has three raisons d'etre, which, in order of precedence, are these:

I. Health.

II. Decency.

III. Beauty.

Health demands:

1. Maintenance of proper temperature of the body by exclusion of excessive heat and cold.

2. Protection from injury by rain, snow, dust, dirt, stones to the feet, insects, etc.

3. Preservation of liberty of action to all the organs of the body, and freedom from pressure.

Decency demands:

4. Concealment of some portions of the human frame.

5. Distinction between the habiliments of men and women sufficient to avert mistake.

6. Fitness to the age and character of the wearer.

7. Concealment, when possible, of any disgusting personal defect.

Beauty demands:

8. Truthfulness. The dress must be genuine throughout, without any false pads, false hair, or false anything.

9. Graceful forms of drapery.

10. Harmonious colors.

11. Such moderate consistency with prevailing modes of dress as shall produce the impression of sociability and suavity, and avoid that of self assertion.

12. Individuality; the dress suiting the wearer as if it were an outer body belonging to the same soul.—Cotemporary Review.

An Old Bank-Deposit.

Twenty-seven years ago a lady, now living in this city, deposited $100 in a Philadelphia bank, and had that amount entered in a bank pass-book. She subsequently lost the pass-book, and, believing that she could not draw the money, in consequence of the absence of this evidence of her deposit, never again went to the bank. In looking over some old papers in Philadelphia, not long since, the book was found, and efforts were made to find out whether any of her kinspeople were yet living, but this proved unsuccessful. At last she was traced to Nashville. Letters were accordingly written to her, and she was informed that, if she would send a power of attorney to the bank, she would receive in return the $100 principal and the accumulated interest—$227. She did as directed, and was the happy recipient of an order for $327 and a few cents. The lady is now verging on 70 years of age.—Nashville (Tenn.) American.

Patti and Nilsson.

Patti's recent singing tour of five months through the principal Italian cities yielded in gross receipts $199,000; and Nilsson, having taken the former's place as a favorite with the elite of St. Petersburg, received more pay and diamonds, jewelry and flowers during the recent operatic season than she ever received before in her life, and has been appointed Cantatrice to the Court of Rome. In the long rivalry between these two starring songstresses it is now conceded that Nilsson has carried the day, owing to her uninterrupted course of good behavior both as wife and mother. Patti was enthusiastically appreciated in Italy, although she had her favorite, Nicolini, tacked on her; but she has decidedly lost caste in all the great capitals, where her cast-off husband, Marquis de Caux, has organized some very effective rings against her.

Wheat-Raising in China.

Chinamen who have returned to their native country, after a residence in the United States, have introduced the growing of wheat to take the place of rice as a food staple. It is claimed that, with the close care given to agriculture in that country, the yield seldom falls below forty bushels to the acre, and that labor is so low that 25 cents a bushel returns an average profit.

DON'T FORGET IT—That you ought to read the advertisement so headed in another column of this paper.

USEFUL RECIPES.

TO KEEP polished iron-work from rusting—Use tallow mixed with a little white lead.

TO CEMENT silver or nickel ornaments to hard wood—Melt together equal parts of pitch and gutta-percha; apply hot.

TO MAKE cotton cloth water-proof and sun-proof for photographers' tents.—Boil the fabric in a solution of one ounce aluminum acetate and one quart of water; then for twenty minutes or more in an aqueous solution of four ounces quercitron and two ounces copper sulphate; wash, and pass first through a solution of five ounces of potassium bichromate, then through the aluminum acetate bath, and finally through boiling soapsuds.

A POISON of any conceivable description and degree of potency, which has been intentionally or accidentally swallowed, may, it is said, be rendered almost instantly harmless by simply swallowing two gills of sweet-oil. A person with a very strong constitution should take nearly twice the quantity. The oil, it is alleged will most positively neutralize every form of vegetable, animal, or mineral poison with which physicians and chemists are acquainted.

TO CURE DANDRUFF.—Dandruff (Pityriasis) is a chronic inflammation of the skin, characterized by the production of minute white scales or scurf in excessive quantity. The affection is often very rebellious to treatment. Various preparations are sold which are claimed to be beneficial, and physicians sometimes prescribe tonic infusions, purgatives and the application of sedative lotions. In obstinate cases an internal dose in which arsenic is the essential element is sometimes prescribed. The efficacy and safety of such measures are to be doubted. Probably the best plan is to keep the hair short and shampoo it frequently with a solution of borax in warm water, avoiding rough treatment, which has a tendency to increase the irritation.

Washington's Laugh.

It is pleasant to learn that once upon a time Washington not only laughed, but "fairly roared." The biographers have so swathed him with dignity that the man seemed lost in the hero. A writer in Lippincott's Magazine tells the following story, which she heard when a little girl from Mrs. Madison:

"One day, in Philadelphia," said Mistress Dolly Madison, "I was sitting in my parlor with a very dear friend, Mrs. R. B. Lee, when in walked Payne Todd (her son) dressed in my calico bed-gown. While we were laughing at the figure he cut, the servant threw open the door and announced General and Mrs. Washington. What to do with that dreadful boy I didn't know. He could not face the President in that garb. Neither could he leave the room without meeting them, for the door they were entering was the only one. I made him crawl quickly under a low, broad settee on which I was sitting. I had just time to arrange the drapery when the Washingtons entered. After the courtly greetings and the usual compliments of the season, there came from under the settee a heavy sigh, which evidently attracted the General's notice. However, I only talked and laughed a little louder, hoping to divert his attention, when—oh, me!—there came an outcry and a kick that could not be ignored. So I stooped down and dragged Payne out by the leg. General Washington's dignity left him for once. Laugh! Why he fairly roared! He nearly went into convulsions. The sight of that boy in that gown, all so unexpected, coming wrong end first from under my seat—it was too much."

Herding in Texas.

The outfit of a Texan herder consists of two donkeys for carrying supplies, a tent, cooking utensils, a canteen made of tin, and with a capacity for holding five gallons of water, a small Mexican pony, two or three dogs, and tobacco. Two men and three dogs can readily take care of 5,000 sheep. Thousands of these animals roam at will over the vast plains, feeding as they go along, and never stopping two nights in the same spot. When the evening comes these immense herds gather closely around the shepherd's camp and sleep peacefully, guarded by the well-trained Scotch dogs. An area of from ten to twenty miles will be grazed by an ordinary herd in a single day.

The Good Boy.

A well-dressed boy, about 10 years old, stood on the walk in front of the City Hall, the other day, eating an apple. A ragged urchin, having a rag-bag over his shoulder, stood close by and looked as if he would give his hat and boots for one bite of the fruit. An attache of the City Hall noted the situation, and was greatly pleased to see the lad suddenly hand over the apple to the envious rag-picker.

"That's a good boy—that was real charity!" exclaimed the gentleman, as he patted the boy on the head.

"Yes, I felt sorry for him," replied the boy—"and I'd got down to a big worm-hole, too!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE accidental explosion of dynamite a few days ago in the Baltimore waterworks made the number of men killed in that undertaking to date thirty. A tunnel, seven miles in length, is being made for the purpose of conveying water to the city. The work has been two years in progress, and, if the loss of life continues proportionately, 100 men will be killed in the tunnel before its completion.

THERE are said to be still eleven or twelve survivors of the men who defended Stonington from the British attack in 1814. Nearly all of them are living there, the two oldest being John Bennett, aged 93, and Col. J. W. Hull, aged 84. Another, Henry Lewis, died last Friday, in the town he defended, and in which he was of late the oldest person; his age being 97, lacking three months.

MAINE had 500 divorces last year—an increase of 100 since 1874, and about one to every twelve marriages.

Inciting Competition.

Whenever a New York newspaper publisher has a note to meet, he puts in free a column advertisement of a piano manufacturer who took a prize at the Centennial, and goes home with a sweet smile. By 8:15 next morning the advertising clerk has taken in $10,000 worth of replies to the decoy advertisement, each fairly bristling with libels, malice, envy, and all uncharitableness.

Why Is It?

The truths of science and progressive thought have always been compelled to batter down the bulwarks of prejudice and disbelief, or remain forever unknown. Why is it that people are so reluctant to receive facts that relate directly to the phenomena of their own existence? Astronomers, upon discovering a star, assign it a place at once, and it is forever fixed. The rule by which a mathematical problem, is once solved becomes forever an axiom; but no matter how clearly the principles which govern health and sickness be demonstrated, some refuse to believe. Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, which are now so generally used, and deservedly popular, were, in their early days, very reluctantly received by the people. To-day Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has outrivaled the old-time sarsaparillas, his Pellets are in general use in place of the coarse, huge, drastic pills formerly so much employed, while the sales of his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and his Favorite Prescription are enormous. Where the skin is sallow and covered with blotches and pimples, or where there are scrofulous swellings and affections, a few bottles of his Golden Medical Discovery will effect an entire cure. If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alternated with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from Torpid Liver or "Biliousness." In many cases of "Liver Complaint" only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal, as its effects perfect cures, leaving the liver strengthened and healthy. Debilitated females who have undergone all the tortures of caustic and the knife, and yet suffer with those peculiar dragging-down sensations and weaknesses, can have guaranteed to them prompt and positive relief by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; while constipation and torpid liver or "biliousness" are promptly relieved by the Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Sold by all druggists.

DON'T FORGET that the country is full of tramps and thieves, and that you ought to be provided with a weapon of defense. See advertisement in another column headed "DON'T FORGET IT."

Boston Tea Bread.

To one quart of flour add two teaspoonfuls DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER, a little salt, butter the size of an egg rubbed in the flour, one pint sweet milk, and the yolks of two eggs beaten very light. Add last, stirring in lightly, the whites of the eggs well beaten, and bake in a square pan in a quick oven. Break in squares for the table.

A Stir Among the Doctors.

No little excitement is created among the Chicago physicians by the wonderful effects of DR. HERNDON'S GYPSY'S GIFT as a positive specific for Rheumatism. It has cured S. H. Gill, Esq., proprietor of the Merchants' Hotel, and A. B. Mallory, at Messinger Bros., 151 Michigan av., of old and bad cases when nothing else would.

HAVE you Heart Disease? If so do not neglect it. Large trees from small seeds grow, and so the germ of disease once planted will in time assert its strength. Heart Disease is more difficult to subdue than most diseases, consequently, you hear it said, the physicians have done all they can; but have they tried Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR? This has done wonders when all other remedies have failed, and we are led to pronounce it a decided cure. To substantiate it, we have the testimonials of many who have almost been snatched from death. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

Democratic State Ticket.

For Secretary of State,
J. G. SHANKLIN, of Vanderburgh County.
For Auditor of State,
MAHLON D. MANSON, of Montgomery Co.
For Treasurer of State,
WILLIAM FLEMING, of Allen County.
For Attorney General,
THOMAS W. WOOLLEN, of Johnson Co.
For Superintendent of Public Instruction,
J. H. SMART, of Allen County.

—A Democratic House is in favor of placing the gallant old soldier General Shields on the retired list as a Brigadier General, a position for life, and passed an act for that purpose, but a Republican Senate refuses to concur. This shows who are the soldiers' true friend.

—We said the other week that we did not like the selection of Gen. Fields as door-keeper, and that a mistake had been made in not electing Gen. Shields. The Press says we were particularly subservient in the matter. Charly ought to know as he has been in that line long enough.

—The greatest patent nostrum venders have grown immensely rich, run into extravagant living and died poor. Among these are mentioned the familiar names of Dr. Helmbold, Dr. Moffit, S. P. Townsend, Dr. Ayer, Dr. Schenck, Dr. Brandreth and Demas Barnes. Dr. Jayne, of Philadelphia, is the only surviving wealthy patent nostrum vender out of the whole number.

—The utter hollowness of the Republican vote for General Shields is seen in the fact that for years he has by the Republican party been kept out of a deserved pension, and that as soon as he was put on the retired list, the radicals raise a howl. It was not because they love Shields that he was brought forward for a pension which he didn't want, but merely because the radicals thought they could use him to create a feeling against the Democracy

—Senator Conkling gave expression to his feelings in regard to the President and several Senators, one day last week, in a private interview with a reporter, and the reporter published the whole thing in the New York World. Coming from that side it makes interesting reading. At one point he says: "Putting this and that together, I was pretty well convinced there was rottenness in Louisiana, and that an effort was making to stifle all inquiry." This was during the organization of the electoral Commission. It throws a great deal of light upon the way Hayes was made President.

—General James Shields, of Missouri, was a brave soldier of the Mexican war. He was as brave as the bravest in the war of the rebellion. He is a Democrat, covered with scars and wound from the conflict with the enemies of this adopted country. He is an Irishman by birth. Where are the Irish soldiers who wore the blue that will not resent this insult of kicking aside the old hero, in order that a man without a claim may come in and fill an office of honor and trust in the Democratic party? "Ah," say the leaders, "but we will whip them all into the ranks." Well, we will see. Crack your whip, and see how many jump.—Warsaw Indianian.

And where now is the voice of the brave General Williams, after a Republican Senate has refused to pass the bill passed by the House, to retire General Shields, with a salary as Brigadier General. Now, crack your whip and see how many you can blind by such demagoguery as the above.

Property Insurance.

The plan of insuring property against loss by fire has long been held a good one, and the wise, prudent man will avail himself of its advantages. Among the various systems of insurance now inaugurated, we think the mutual plan is placed upon the most enduring basis and gives greater satisfaction than any other yet established. It is a system by which all those insured, under its provisions, become participators in its benefits; or in other words its object is not the enrichment of a few stock holders at the expense of the insured, as is being daily demonstrated by other companies now in operation. There are several insurance corporations that have become immensely rich, while they have done a large business. Our great cities contain mammoth buildings of iron and marble, erected from the earnings made out of the people. Their officers have been paid in the past, almost fabulous sums as salaries, and their patrons foot the bill. This state of things must necessarily require a high rate of insurance to meet their average losses and their heavy expenses The mutual plan does away with all this. One salaried officer is all that is needed and instead of buying real estate and erecting gorgeous buildings, they lower their rates and thus give all who insure with them its benefits. An association of this kind has just been organized in this county, with headquarters at Auburn, under the name of The Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of DeKalb County. Connected with this organization are some of the very best citizens of our county, men well known for their highly standing and general responsibility. The company starts out with a flattering show of success, and hundreds are making application for membership in the same. None but farm property will be insured, and no farmer should delay to take advantage of its provisions.

MENE, MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN.

The story is told of Belshazzar's impious feast when the baccahanalian king with a thousand of his lords concluded to have a big drunk, and to give eclat to their debaucheries ordered the golden and silver vessels taken from the temple to be brought into the banqueting hall and filled to the brim. Just at this juncture, when the revel was at its highth, the impious king and his followers saw the skeleton hand on the wall and their doom was fixed beyond the power of revocation. The Radical party vaulted into power in the days of the country's gloom. It drew its sustenance from widespread calamities. It demoralized public opinion, massed all the hates of frail human nature, and taking advantage of circumstances which it had created, deluged the country with blood red waves of fanaticism that scorched and withered like lava tides. For years the mad revel went on. Washington became the foulest city in the world. From the White House, where Grant received bribes, to every department transformed into dens of thieves who plundered under his protection there went forth streams of corruption that filled the land with their demoralizing stench. The people became alarmed. The audacity of the Radical scoundrels, and the magnitude of the crimes committed, betokened the destruction of the very foundations of the government. The most sacred guarantees of liberty were trampled upon, and the temple itself became more abominable in the eyes of the patriots than a cage of unclean birds. To rescue the Government from the grasp of Radicals became the supreme demand—the great work of the times—the one thing absolutely essential. It was commenced in earnest, and results inspire confidence. The Radicals have recently held a caucus; they have read the handwriting on the wall; the doom of their party is sealed. The New York Herald in referring to the caucus, says: "In 1866 they had in the Senate 27 majority; in 1869, the year in which Gen. Grant became President, this had increased to 49; in 1871, in a full Senate they had 50 majority; in 1873 they had but 30; in 1876 it had fallen to 10, and at present they have but two majority, counting Judge Davis as a Democrat, but including Senator Sharon, who is permanently absent. In the House they have been running down hill in the same way, only more rapidly. In 1866 they had 105 majority in the House; in 1868 it had arisen to 126; in 1869 it fell to 86; in 1870 they had but 67; in 1871 the Republican majority was only 30; in 1873 it fell to 17, and in 1876 the tables were turned and the Democrats came in on what was called the "ground swell," and had 79 majority, and in the present House they have 15. To sum up the situation, the Republicans had when General Grant came in, in 1869, a majority of 42 in the Senate and of 86 in the House. To-day they have a majority of two in the Senate, and are sure to be in the minority next year, while in the house they are in a minority already. Leaving doubtful cases to stand as they are it is clear that the Senate on the 4th of next March must have a democratic majority of at least 10.

This tells the story. It is eloquent in declaring that Radicalism has been weighed in the balance and found not only wanting, but infamous. Its career has been in antagonism to everything true and honest. Its record has been a record of crime. It is written all over with fraud, and, as if to cap the climax of infamy, its crowning iniquity of placing a man in the office of President by perjury knocks the last prop from its support and permits it to sink by the accumulated weight of its depravity to soundless depths of oblivion.

—All legal notices coming from the Clerk's office, such as administrator's and executor's appointments and sales, non-resident notices, etc., are strictly private printing, as the parties, and not the county, pay for them. Recognizing this fact, Clerk Moss has always allowed the parties interested to designate in what paper their notices should appear. The Sheriff's advertising is exactly of the same class, but his devotion to the "machine" will not permit him to allow any of his notices to appear outside of the "official organ."—Waterloo Press.

For four years, and during the official existence of Sheriff Meese, we did not get as many notices during his term as the Press has under Mr. St. Clair. For four years we went along smoothly and joyfully, and not one complaining word escaped us, but recognizing the custom that permitted him to advertise in any paper he pleased, we had no insinuations to offer. And even now under a Republican Auditor, who sends all his ditch notices to his party papers, though he could get a much larger circulation of the same in the COURIER, yet not a grumble have we uttered. We believe he does right and proper, and have no complaint to make. And the Clerk sends all his notices, when not otherwise ordered, to his party papers, which is correct. For these reasons we think the editor of the Press ought not to 'squeal.' With the Press it makes a little difference whose ox is gored. When Meese was giving him notice after notice he never complained, and now that the Auditor favors him with his patronage the Press does not say that these ditch notices should be published where the parties desire them to appear. When these things are considered, the utter selfishness of our contemporary is apparent.

—Another radical enactment—the bankrupt act—gone. Practical experience has demonstrated that the law was only beneficial to a horde of Federal office holders in drawing big fees. The business of the country will feel a sense of relief that the odious law has been swept out of existence.—Columbia City Post.

Garrett Items.

—Pay day Friday, the 26th.

—Chas. Linkenhelt and daughter went to Elkhart on Saturday to visit friends.

—Deputy Sheriff Gross visited Garrett Saturday afternoon and took John Robbins to Auburn.

—Bicknell lays over the deck telling a snake story. He discounts "Gulliver's Travels" or "Pilgrim's Progress."

—T. Taggart, Esq., who was formerly proprietor of the dining hall at the depot, returned on Monday from Chicago.

—The new hardware store is going to move to Angola, so we have been informed. They did not remain long in Garrett.

—Mr Blair is preparing to make garden and from the fertile appearance of the soil, we believe he will be abundantly reward for his labors.

—Our "Moral Spectator" says when he goes out he always sets his stake and never goes beyond. A good reason, for he always gets drunk before he reaches the stake. A good subject to give moral advice, ain't he.

—There is a law suit here at present in which Safer & Ward, of Avilla, are plaintiffs and our ex-constable is defendant. Mr. Haines, of Avilla, and Mr. L. Covel, of Garrett are attorneys for plaintiffs and J. J. Freeland for defendant.

—Ward & Kendall have moved their large two story building off of Peter street, south of the Sargent House, over on Randolph street. It now stands directly in front of the printing office where they will continue their business as boot and shoe makers. This is a much better stand.

—There came very near being a fire at the Sargent House last Sunday. It started in a bed chamber on the third story, but was extinguished before any damage was done to the building. It is said that one mattress was entirely destroyed. It is not known how it originated.

—Four freight crews were taken off of the B. & O. at this place last week. We are sorry the company was compelled to make this reduction by want of business, but believe it is better for the men than to keep them on short time, as those who are laid off will have an opportunity to look for something better, and those who are retained will have the benefit of all the time, which would otherwise be divided up.

Junction Items.

—Cops do you know Miss Brown.

—C. and G. thinks of taking lessons in painting

—Thanks, Miss W., your wishes shall be complied with.

—Mrs. Fred Lammons is visiting friends at Three Rivers, Mich.

—With the addition of the new siding at this point, it gives a capacity for storing about three hundred cars.

—Whit. had a hightoned customer one day this week. A big black hog waltzed in after his lager like the rest.

—I wonder if that gentleman who is going to shoot one of the Junction boys is a good marksman. As a general thing barking dogs never bite.

—Ague has put in its appearance at the Junction. J. S. Gale is geting a benefit. John declares he shook nine hours and sweat enough to do a common sized washing.

—Mr. P. made a visit to Waterloo and thinks he will go again. Some good looking ladies there, we understand, occasioned the visit.

—Round trip tickets have been placed on sale at the Junction for parties who wish to attend the fireman's convention at Defiance, Ohio. Round trip, $1.50. Good for two days.

—J. Whittington has bought out the saloon and restaurant of G. Mathews and is fitting it up in good shape to accommodate his customers. We think he will do well.

PERKINS.

St. Johns and New Era Items.

—A fine lot of fish is being caught now-a-days.

—A fine, refreshing shower Monday. Good for onions and oats.

—Our funny and witty young shoemaker, Willis Ketcham, has returned to Pleasant Lake. This leaves an opening for another shoemaker.

—The Railroad Company have painted the station house at New Era, from red to light brown, which adds greatly to the appearance of the house. Now let them turn their attention to the side track at St. Johns, which is only half laid out.

—Last Sunday forenoon the reservoir in Stoner's Mill bursted outward at the bottom like a swing gate over a ditch, letting the water rush through the mill at an alarming rate. Mr. Holmes' promptness in closing the flood gates prevented further damage.

—Mr. Vandercook, of Angola, who purchased L. L. Irons' farm, is engaged in putting up new buildings, fences and having drains dug several ways through the swamp west of his place, and has rented his farm to Bill Fair, who proves to be an excellent fellow.

SORINAUX.

—The county Treasurer says about the usual amount of the first installment of taxes has been paid this spring amounting to about $50,000.

Spencerville Items.

—Spencerville has an opium eater.

—Sim Jenkens has returned.

—Mrs. Silberg is having her house painted.

—J. A. Provines is adding some improvements to his drug store.

—There was a birthday party at J. W. Dills' Saturday evening.

—To find out how soon Dave can skip a mile, tell him Jimmy is in town.

—Milton Horn, of Mansfield, Ohio, is visiting his parents near town.

—Miss Lina Bommell will start for Beverly, West Virginia, in a few days on a visit to her early home.

—The dry weather makes a dearth of items, everybody is busy with their spring work and the political pendulum swings slowly, but in good time a grist of official aspirants will be ground out.

LaOtto Items.

—The roads solid but rough.

—Fruit trees all in bloom. Ah, beautiful spring.

—Constable Upton is full of business just now.

—Dr. Shepard of Dutch Ridge, gave LaOtto a call last Friday.

—George Steel and family of Auburn, visited with A. Canons last Sunday.

—The G. R. & I. R. R., is about to lay the track from Ft. Wayne to Rome City with steel rails.

—Rome City, of Noble county, is becoming famous as a summer resort for both invalids and mere pleasure seekers.

—Cedar Creek had a greenback meeting last Monday eve. Dr. Dunlop "squealed" for them, and the result was 10 names enrolled.

—Stolen or strayed, on Monday, Peter Hawk of the Hotel de Hawk, any person or persons returning the same or giving information concerning his whereabouts, will confer a lasting favor on the bereaved Madam. She wants to get hold of Peter just three minutes—no longer.

—The envy of half the boys in town was aroused last Sunday, by the appearance of Johnny McKinon on the streets, with a very large and very high stand up collar on, embraced by a very red necktie. Johnny Callanan in the bitterness of his soul, gave utterance to the unanswerable and seething remark, that Mack thought he was some because his folks kept hens.

—EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir: It is an interesting sight these beautiful mornings when the sun in all his glory smiles on the earth, to see a half-starved lantern-jawed, itinerant editor wending his tottering steps in search of five cents worth of blind-robbins and half a pound of soda crackers to strengthen up his physical form. He soon makes his appearance again in front of the hotel picking his teeth and trying to assume a dignified attitude. Here he stands wrapped in the mantle of imagination, his mind absorbed in silent meditation on his future success as a great journalist, making as great a puff and swell as though he was after partaking of a fine, square meal of potatoes and buttermilk. As he takes a general view of his position in life and all the surroundings, he says to himself: "I must get more advertising; I ought to have all the advertising in the county; I wonder why the Auburn merchants don't give their advertising to me; I must see the "county supervisors" about it; a few good puffs in my paper will fetch 'em; I wish all the other printing offices in the county would "bust up then I'd be happy. I could buy them all out, but then I could not raise $7 to pay the express on the first package of paper I had sent me here, and then—then I couldn't pay the freight on my goods when I had them shipped here; and then, they wouldn't sell on time. I am a little selfish, but then how nice it would be if all the printing offices were in one and I owned it. I could have all the advertising and no one would molest me by advertising in other papers. If I can get a good circulation for my paper and plenty of advertising, Garrett can go to the dickens with all her manufacturing and other interests. I am myself for myself, and support no other institution but my own. I will not patronize the barber shops, so there is ten cents a week saved. It matters not how long or frizzled my beard may look, even if the people do say I look like a wild Rocky Mountain goat. Then I will not employ any of the little boys to serve my paper to the subscribers, so there is ten cents a week more saved. I will be my own "devil." This is a cheap way to run a paper, but then I'm a cheap man. Let us see, there will soon be a town election, and I must talk and work the thing up, and run for town Clerk. I can get it for the people here all think I am smart, and Garrett has got to keep me at any rate. My fifteen years experience as an "editor" must be recognized. I'll let the people know what I am. I'll let them see who is going to run this town. Ah! what! what is that I see! there is one of our business men with a brush and pot of paint advertising on the board walk. I never saw anything like that at "Wapah" or "Chicago Junction." That will make a good local. Let's see, that fellow would not give me half of his profits for advertising his business for him, and then he went and advertised in an Auburn paper. I'll have revenge on him. I'll ruin his business if I can. I'll drive all his customers away from him. I'll advise all the farmers not to trade with him, not for the benefit of the farmers but it will gratify my revenge."

—Great bargains in groceries at the Garrett Tea and Fruit House.

CITIZEN.

—A hail storm of considerable force passed over this section yesterday, accompanied by rain and a tremendous gale.

—A large party from this place were prevented from attending the hop at Garrett last night, on account of the bad weather.

—Prof. Baldwin will give an expose of spiritualism at the hall to-morrow and Saturday nights. He gives a splendid entertainment.

—The wheat market seems to be in doubt whether to go up or down. It is now balancing at $1.10 to 1.18. Corn 33 @ 35c. Oats 23 @ 25c.

—A deed of trust was conveyed to Mr. Keyser, of the Baltimore road, last week, by Mr. Cowan, embracing about ten hundred and sixty lots in the town of Garrett. The Auditor's fee was ten cents a lot, or $106.

—In purchasing goods at Fort Wayne, you will find that Root & Company keep the best stock of dry goods, and carpets in the city. They are offering special bargains now on silks, which they have put down very low. Look out for their new advertisement this week.

—It will soon be time for the little boys to sample their neighbors cherries while on their way to Sunday school.

—The Holbrook family of Bell-ringers appeared here Monday and Wednesday nights, and gave a good entertainment.

—There is not much fuss made over it, there is a large amount of fixing up and improving property all over the city.

—A brick smoke house is now being erected on the County Farm. Charley Picker and H. Bumpus have the contract.

—Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup for sale at Wm. McIntyre & Son's.

—There are a good many "bloods" in town that are quite anxious to earn their bread—by the sweat of somebody else's brow.

—The Sunday schools were largely attended Sunday morning. Also morning and evening services at the different churches.

—This is the time of year when away down in the heart of many a woman lurks the following sentiment: "Old bonnet, no church."

—The Sunday school scholars were practicing at the Presbyterian church Sunday afternoon for the concert. Mr. Seiler led the singing.

—QUERRY: "Why will men smoke common tobacco, when they can buy Marburg Bros, "Seal of North Carolina" at the same price. *

—The New York Store offers special inducements in another column. It has started out anew, added a large stock and is offering splendid bargains.

—Remember the place opposite the Swineford House. Go there for your pure wines and liquors, drugs, medicines, dye stuffs and everything kept by druggists.

—Some shoddy Cincinnatti buggies were for sale on the streets Tuesday. People are too sensible to buy inferior work, and the salesmen met with no encouragement.

—The old livery stable back of the Court House will be opened the first of May by Cook Ford, who will give every accommodation to the old patrons of that barn. 2t.

—There will be a Sunday school concert at the Presbyterian church next Sunday evening. Great preparations are being made, and the entertainment will be an interesting one.

—Wm. McIntyre & Son invites the attention of the public to their fresh stock of drugs and medicines which they purchased for cash and can consequently sell cheap.

—The Herald gives an account of the arrest of a horse thief at Angola last week, who had stolen a pair of horses from the Sheriff at Hillsdale eighteen months ago.

—The old livery and feed stable east of the Court House, lately occupied by Mr. Cool, will be opened May 1st by Cook Ford, who will be pleased to accommodate all the old patrons of the place. 2t.

—F. Palmer will go to Garrett, and open up a tin shop for J. L. Davis, now engaged in the Hardware business. Fatty is an excellent mechanic, and will give satisfaction in the department in which he is engaged.

—There are a few in this city that have a tongue that never ceases to slander; an ambition that never sleeps; a face that never blushes, and a conscience that never hesitates. God pity the miserable wretches.

—Billy Grunauer, an old timed gambler of Fort Wayne, died last week. Billy flourished in the days of that city's prosperity, but seeing it slip back to the manners of a very quaint village he yielded up the ghost.

—The democracy do not accept their Bull Run defeat in Keyser township very philosophically.—Press.

—The republicans of Waterloo and Butler do not accept their Waterloo defeat very pholosiphically.

—One of our citizens went to Auburn Monday last to pay his taxes, and was greatly surprised at the difference between taxes on household goods and dogs. He paid two dollars on his dog, and eighty cents on his household goods —Garrett Herald.

—The Catholic people observed Easter Sunday and the general mode of worship was carried out. A large number of men women and children from Waterloo and other places were in attendance.

—The German denomination, we believe, is the only one who held services on Good Friday. They appear to regard the crucifixtion of our Savior more earnestly and promptly than any other class of religious people.

Contract For Hauling.

The undersigned desires to contract within the next two weeks, for the hauling of a lot of Stave bolts from the farm of John Lutz, east of Auburn, to Beugnot & Co's. Stave factory. Prompt payment made when contract is completed. CHRISTIAN SLEGLE.

—There is now some talk of erecting an Opera House at Fort Wayne, and Architect Tolan has submitted a plan which will no doubt be accepted. It is to cost $40,000. Fifteen dollars have already been subscribed and now the papers there cry the work will go bravely on.

—There was a belling at the residence of Mr. Swanders, north west of town, last week, and things not being satisfactoly to all concerned, Constable Picker was sent to serve warrants on the "musicians." They were brought before Esq. Walborn and were fined 73c a piece, making a total of about $60 for the "officials."

—The Court yard has been thoroughly cleaned from the litter and rubbish that has gathered there for some time past, and it now presents an inviting appearance. With little care it can be kept so, and with the addition of a fine foliage that is promised in a short time, it will become what it should have been years ago, an attractive little park.

—It is apparent that vegetation is fully a month ahead of last year. Wheat stands in some places over two feet high, and some of the rye is heading. There are fears that the grain will grow so rank that it will lodge and rot, perhaps, before harvest. With a favorable out come, a great deal of harvesting will be done in June. This year late sown wheat is much the best.

—There seems to be considerable feeling against Auditor Abbott, at Fort Wayne, in his aspirations for a second term. From our stand point it would not be to the lasting disgrace of the democracy of Allen if he did not get a second nomination. The people there are of the opinion that one term of a four year office is long enough and incumbents should step aside and let some one else have a chance.

—We are in receipt of a new paper, called the "Enterprise," published at Fort Wayne, by Carr & Congdon. We don't know them, but that makes no differance. The paper meets a want never felt in that city. The Enterprise will no doubt be more fruitful of failure than anything else. They may be worthy gentlemen, and we wish them no harm, but if they can find a good job of railsplitting somewhere, they will find it much more profitable

—Easter Sunday came in pleasant. The bright sunshine, and the balmy breeze and the singing of the birds made the morning a most inviting and beautiful one. Those who were so fortunate as to be the owner of a vehicle were driving to and fro on the smooth throughfares, and others were strolling to the cemetery and other places, laughing, singing and seemingly happy over the approach of spring, gentle spring.

—Read the three column advertisement of the Boot Upside Down. Mr. Austin says it pays to let the people know what you have. We published a whole page for him last year, and he assures us that it was a splendid investment, bringing him a largely increased custom, which he holds by the fine bargains he offers in boots and shoes. Advertising brings you custom, your goods and prices hold them.

—Farmers, now is the time to get your salt fish. I have just received a large lot, all new, bought for cash direct of packers. Pickerel, ½ bbl. $3.85; ¼ bbl. $2.15; family white fish, ½ bbl. $3; ¼ bbl. $1.75. I also have cod fish and mackerel at lowest prices. Your grocer may tell you that they can't be sold at such low prices, that the fish are old, but don't you believe them. I warrant all my fish new, and at such low prices every farmer should lay in a stock. Call at my store, Garrett, Ind.

J. J. HOFFMAN.

—Farmers, buy your goods of those men who advertise in their home paper, and not of those who daub up every sidewalk in town with their great (?) inducements.—Garrett Herald.

Bro. Powell will learn after sixteen more years of experience in the publishing business, that it will not do to insult and blackguard people because they do not choose to patronize him. We have several business houses here that do not advertise, but we do not consider it our province to abuse them therefor. Every man has a right to conduct his own business according to his own ideas, and if it don't pay he is the looser.

—The Chicago Times has gathered reports from about two hundred points in the West and Northwest, representing every section in the State of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, which show that the acreage of wheat sown is fifty per cent. greater than last year, while the condition than in any season since the famion crop of 1860. The farmers throughout the whole region reported from are in a very hopeful frame of mind. There is an average of fifteen to twenty per cent. of last year's crop still on hand.

—Charley Picker's mother-in-law, living in the vicinity of Stoner's mill, has been paying him a visit for several days.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

NEW YORK papers record the death of William M. Tweed, which occurred in the city jail. Tweed had been dangerously ill for several days. His death resulted from a complication of disorders, but was caused directly by nervous exhaustion and the clogging of action of the heart. He was 55 years old.

ELEVEN business failures occurred in New York in one day last week. The total liabilities aggregated over $900,000. George W. [illegible] & Co., jewelry importers, with liabilities of $400,000, was the heaviest failure. [illegible] & [illegible], well-known umbrella dealers on Broadway, have made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors. Liabilities, $250,000.

THE rumor, which the New York press has for some time given currency to, that Mrs. Tilton was about to make a confession, is fully confirmed, as the following letter will show:

Mr. Ira B. Wheeler:

MY DEAR SIR: A few weeks since, after long months of mental anguish, I told, as you know, a few friends whom I had bitterly deceived that the charge brought by my husband of adultery between myself and the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was true, and that the lie I had lived so well the last four years had become intolerable to me. That statement I now solemnly reaffirm, and leave the truth with God, to whom also I commit myself, my children, and all who must suffer. I know full well the explanations that will be sought by many for this acknowledgment—a desire to return to my husband, insanity, malice, everything save the true and only one—my quickened conscience and sense of what is due to the cause of truth and justice. During all the complications of these years you have been my confidential friend, and therefore I address this letter to you, authorizing and requesting you to secure its publication.

ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

Upon receiving a copy of the foregoing, the Plymouth pastor indited and printed the following denial:

I confront Mrs. Tilton's confession with an explicit and absolute denial. The testimony to her own innocence and to mine, which for four years she had made to hundreds in private and in public, before the court, in writing and orally, I declare to be true, and the allegations now made, in contradiction of her uniform solemn and unvarying statements hitherto made, I utterly deny. I declare her to be innocent of the great transgression.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

THE WEST.

A CHICAGO paper says of the drama, "The Exiles," now running at McVicker's theater: "The story of the play is natural and unaffected, well drawn and unstrained, having an intense, sustained interest from the rise to the fall of the curtain—literally until the fall; for half a minute before the conclusion it is absolutely impossible to tell what the end will be. In this respect, and also in strength of characterization, it is a much stronger play than 'A Celebrated Case;' and the lesson drawn from the work is a good one, and appeals to nine-tenths of an average audience, embracing, as the play does, the various emotions of all men and women. We may say that perhaps no play has ever been given by Mr. Vicker with such completeness."

A TORNADO passed over Cottonwood, Kan., on the Santa Fe road a few nights ago, blowing forty-five cars off the track, and destroygin a number of houses. Some lives were lost, also stock.

REPORTS from over 150 stations on the lines of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads in Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota say that the acreage sown to wheat is from 20 to 30 per cent. larger than last year.

THE Northwestern National Bank of Chicago announces that hereafter notes of its own issue will be redeemed at its counter in gold.... A militia company, after drilling at Coal Creek, Ind., regaled themselves at a saloon in the vicinity. One of a party of negroes went into the saloon, and, a few words passing between him and the militiamen, he was fired upon and ran out. The militiamen, pursuing, shot him dead, and started through the town shooting at all the colored men they found. Phil Cozens, John Meyers, and Thomas Cooper were killed, and Pete Artis badly wounded.

THE SOUTH.

IN view of the frequent train-robberies in Texas the Governor of that State, in response to the solicitation of railroad officials, has increased the reward offered for each arrest and conviction to $1,000.

THE business part of the thriving town of Clarksville, the principal tobacco market of Tennessee, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $500,000; insurance, $150,000.

THE chiefs of the Kiowa, Comanche and Arrapahoe Indians, with their warriors, fifty-nine in number, confined at St. Augustine, Fla., the past three years, have been released and sent West.

A DISPATCH to the Galveston News reports an Indian attack on the mail-carrier near Fort Concho. One man was killed and the mail taken. The same day another party of Indians captured thirteen mules at Fort Davis. Cavalry are in pursuit. The Indians are supposed to be from the Fort Stanton reservation.

GEORGE SHOENBERGER, a prominent citizen of Huntsville, Ala., was assassinated in cold blood. Ben Evans and Eph Hall, both colored, were arrested on suspicion. They confessed to the deed, and said they were instigated thereto by a white man named Mike White. The infuriated populace thereupon gathered by the hundreds, forced open the jail, took the prisoners out and hung them to the limb of a tree.

WASHINGTON.

THE appeal of Gen. Fitz John Porter for a reopening and review of his case has at last been granted, and the President has ordered the appointment of a board to take the new evidence claimed to be in the possession of Gen. Porter, and to report what action is necessary to be taken. The board is composed of Maj. Gen. Schofield, Brig. Gen. Terry, Col. G. W. Getty and Maj. A. B. Gardner, and is to convene at West Point, June 20.

THE goloid dollar question is practically settled, for this session of Congress at least, the House Coinage Committee having decided to refer the matter to the International Monetary Commission.... There has been some misapprehension about Secretary Sherman's late contract with the Syndicate. It was first stated that $50,000,000 of 4½ per cents. had been positively sold to the Syndicate, $10,000,000 to be taken now, and $5,000,000 a month hereafter. But it now appears that the Syndicate takes only $10,000,000 outright, and that all that has been settled with regard to the balance is that the Syndicate have the option of taking $5,000,000 a month at the agreed price. It is believed on both sides that the balance will be certainly taken, but it is not a matter of certainty, as the first announcement indicated. If the Syndicate for any reason should fail to dispose of the $10,000,000 they are bound to take, they would, no doubt, refuse to take the remaining $40,000,000. The arrangement is contingent, and not absolute.

A WASHINGTON telegram says the "House Committee on Banking have directed a subpœna to be issued upon Secretary Sherman to compel him to appear before the committee and testify as to the details of the negotiation he has made with the Syndicate for the sale of 4½ per cent. bonds. Subpœnas will also be issued to members of the Syndicate to testify on the same subject."

POLITICAL.

AT a meeting of the Cabinet in Washington, the other day, and before the Ministers had formally proceeded to the business of the day, the President submitted a platform which he said he believed would reunite the Republicans and again secure them the control of Congress. Following is the platform in brief:

1. Resumption of specie payments in gold and silver.

2. Resistance to all schemes for inflating paper currency.

3. A fair and moderate tariff that will afford reasonable protection to American industries.

4. An amendment to the constitution prohibiting the use of money raised by public taxation for the support of sectarian schools.

5. Speedy completion of all public works, such as river and harbor improvements, public buildings, fortifications, etc., now that labor and material are cheap and workingmen need employment, and a liberal policy for the improvement of the great national channels of commerce like the Mississippi river and its tributaries.

Members of the Cabinet coincided with the President, and, after some informal discussion, a sixth paragraph was added, declaring against the payment of claims to disloyal citizens for damages and losses growing out of the Rebellion, and the payment of pensions to persons who were disloyal during the war. With this addition, the platform was pronounced to be a fair presentation of the views of the administration.

THE Oregon Republican State Convention was held at Salem, April 17. C. C. Beekman was nominated for Governor, and H. K. Hines for Congress...."Gath" views the Presidential possibilities from New York, and believes that Hendricks will be nominated Democratic candidate for President in 1880 on the first ballot, and that Gen. Grant or Secretary Sherman will be the Republican candidate.

GENERAL.

A TELEGRAM has been received at Washington announcing the recognition of the Diaz Government in Mexico by the United States Minister....Texas desperadoes have so interfered with the mails in that State that the Postoffice department has notified Gov. Hubbard, requiring him to prevent any recurrence of such interference, and demanding that he should issue a proclamation of outlawry. If he has not the power to prevent these outrages the Federal Government offers to give him assistance.

FAILURES: Fellows, Foster & Co., importers of watches, New York, liabilities $130,000; Ketcham & Viot, merchants, Toledo, liabilities $47,000; Henry P. Kilfield, dealer in morocco leather, Boston, liabilities $100,000; Pierreville Mills Company, Montreal, Canada, liabilities $160,000.

THE International Sunday-School Convention has just been held at Atlanta, Ga. All the States, Territories and Canadian provinces were represented, about 450 delegates being in attendance. Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, presided.

EX-GOV. T. J. MOSES, of South Carolina, was recently arrested in New York, on a requisition from Gov. Hampton. He had been convicted of forgery, and has been taken back to Charleston to be sentenced.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A SPECIAL from Paris says the prices of lodging and all necessaries of life will be largely advanced during the Exposition....The cable announces the death of Prince Lucien Napoleon Murat, the youngest son of the famous Marshal Murat, King of Naples in the days of the first Napoleon....In a circular just issued, the Sultan of Turkey recognizes the San Stefano treaty as the result of reverses sustained in the late war, and expresses a determination to fulfill its stipulations in good faith, but admits that Turkey would regard as opportune any modifications obtained through the intervention of the powers or the moderation of Russia.

THE thirty-fifth race between the Oxford and Cambridge University crews took place on the 13th inst., on the river Thames, over the usual course, from Putney to Mortlake, and resulted in an easy victory for the Oxford crew.

THE Queen of England has replied to the address of Parliament thanking her Majesty for calling out the reserves. She thanks both houses for their loyalty, and says she feels sure she can always rely upon their adopting measures for the honor of the crown and the stability of the empire....Preparations are making in Russia for the organization of a general levy. Passports will only be issued to persons over 46 years of age.

A BERLIN dispatch says it is understood that, in consequence of the slow progress of the attempted mediation, Prince Bismarck has recommended fresh negotiations between the powers themselves. In reply, both Austria and England intimated their willingness to treat, but refused to make a definite settlement without a conference....Switzerland and Greece have accepted the proposal of the United States to participate in the international congress to fix the relative values of gold and silver.

LATE advices say that the Turks have an army of 70,000 men in a position to defend Constantinople, and that the occupation of the city by the Russians, or any attempt to force the Sultan from a neutral position, will be strenuously resisted....A great strike of cotton operatives has begun in England....Austria has negotiated a loan of 55,000,000 florins in Paris.

A CORRESPONDENT at St. Petersburg says the situation is decidedly pacific. In official circles it is believed that Germany's mediation will very likely be successful.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, April 12.—SENATE.—Not in session. HOUSE.—The House passed a bill restoring Geo. A. Armes to his rank in the army, and one or two other private bills, after which the bill for the relief of William and Mary College, in Virginia, was taken up, and the remainder of the session consumed in debating the measure.

SATURDAY, April 13.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed appropriating $5,000 to erect a monument over the grave of Thomas Jefferson....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was discussed....The appropriation recommended is $33,190,373, a reduction of $987,770 from last year; $9,100,000 of that sum is for railroad mail service, $6,090,673 for inland mail transportation and $7,200,000 for the pay of Postmasters.

MONDAY, April 15.—SENATE.—Mr. Sargent submitted an amendment to the House joint resolution to restore Gen. Shields (of Missouri) to the army, and to place him on the retired list. The amendment proposes to place on the retired list Generals Grant, Dix, McClellan, Banks, Butler, Burnside, Rosecrans, Sigel, Logan, Hurlbut, McClernand, Oglesby, Williams (of Michigan), and others. Mr. Sargent said all these were equally as meritorious as Gen. Shields, and he did not see why they should not be placed on the retired list. Several Senators gave notice that they should move to add names to the above list when the bill shall come before the Senate for action....The Senate, by a vote of 37 to 6, passed the bill repealing the Bankrupt act. The six negative votes were: Allison, Anthony, Saunders, Conover, Burnside and McMillan....The bill authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil was passed....Mr. Hereford introduced a bill to repeal that part of the Specie-Resumption act of Jan. 14, 1875, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of United States bonds and redeem and cancel currency....Mr. Jones introduced a bill authorizing railroad companies to construct and maintain telegraph lines for commercial purposes, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for military, postal, and other purposes....The bill authorizing the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Bismarck to the Black Hills was passed.

HOUSE.—Mr. Swan presented the resolutions of the Maryland Legislature, known as the "Blair resolutions," reopening the Presidential question. Mr. Garfield objected to their reception or their reference to any committee. The Speaker ruled that the resolutions were in the nature of a petition from a State, and were in order. The discussion was cut off at 2 o'clock by the Speaker, who said that the remainder of the day must be devoted to consideration of bills relating to the District of Columbia.... Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Willis, of New York, a bill reciting the near approach of specie payments, and directing the President to make public and solemn proclamation that it is the firm determination of Congress to enact no further laws affecting the currency or finance until specie payments shall have been actually resumed; by Mr. Kimmel, to provide a mode for trying and determining by the Supreme Court of the United States the title of the President and Vice President of the United States to their respective offices when their election to such offices is denied by one or more States of the Union.

TUESDAY, April 16.—SENATE.—The resolution of Mr. Howe, calling for certain information in regard to Judge Whitaker, of New Orleans, was adopted....Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to the balances due from the Collectors of Internal Revenue not in office, as to what amount has been settled by compromise, etc....Mr. Garland, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a substitute for the Senate bill supplementary to the act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas....Mr. Grover, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, and on his motion it was referred to the Committee on Railroads....Mr. McDonald introduced a bill to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to bring and prosecute suits against the United States to recover money due on account of the proceeds of sales of public lands....The bill to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company, and Mr. Plumb's bill for the relief of settlers on certain public lands, were passed....Mr. Howe made a personal explanation regarding newspaper comments upon his recent speech in the Senate. Mr. Howe disclaimed any malice toward the administration, and denied that he had ever appealed to the President for aid in prosecuting his personal aspirations.

HOUSE.—The Senate bill authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil was passed....Mr. Keifer introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution prohibiting Congress from appropriating money for the payment of any claim against the United States not created or authorized by law, international treaty or award. Referred....The bill to establish a permanent Government for the District of Columbia was defeated—yeas, 94; nays, 124. A motion to reconsider was adopted, and the bill was recommitted to the District Committee....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was discussed.... The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Harrison, to construct a ship canal for the passage of naval vessels from the Mississippi river to Lake Michigan; by Mr. Chalmers, for the education of colored teachers in Mississippi; by Mr. Cummings, to prevent the reduction of the volume of United States notes; by Mr. Banning, authorizing the President to appoint a commission to arrange a treaty with the King of Corea.

WEDNESDAY, April 17.—SENATE.—A resolution was unanimously adopted ending the session on the 10th of June....After a brief discussion, by a vote of yeas 38, nays 17, Mr. Burnside's bill to remove all the restrictions now existing in regard to the enlistment of colored citizens in any arm of the United States army was indefinitely postponed. Mr. Plumb, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably on the Senate bill to make an additional article of war prohibiting gambling in the army....The Finance Committee reported a substitute for the House bill to repeal the Resumption act. The bill, which was ordered printed and placed on the calendar, is entitled "An act to amend an act to provide for the resumption of specie payments, and for other purposes;" and reads as follows: "That from and after the passage of this act United States notes shall be receivable in payment for the United States bonds now authorized by law to be issued, and, on and after Oct. 1, 1878, said notes shall be receivable for duties on imports; and said notes, in volume in existence Oct. 1, 1878, shall not be canceled or permanently hoarded, but shall be reissued, and they may be used for funding and all other lawful purposes whatsoever, to an amount not exceeding in the whole the amount then in circulation and in the treasury; and the said notes, whether then in the treasury or thereafter received under any act of Congress, and from whatsoever source, shall be again paid out; and when again returned to the treasury they shall not be canceled or destroyed, but shall be issued from time to time with like qualities; and all that part of the act of Jan. 14, 1875, entitled, 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments,' authorizing the retirement of 80 per cent. of the United States notes, shall cease and become inoperative on and after said Oct. 1, 1878."

HOUSE.—Mr. Bell, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill repealing the act authorizing the coinage of 20-cent silver pieces. Passed....Mr. Phillips, from the same committee, reported a bill providing for the deposit of savings in the popular loan, and for funding the national debt in home bonds. Referred to the committee of the whole....The Prorata Pacific bill, the bill establishing the Pacific Railroad Commission, the bill amending the Pacific Railroad acts (identical with Mr. Thurman's bill), the bill authorizing the deposit of silver bullion and the issue of certificates therefor, and the bill extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, were also reported and referred to the committee of the whole....After considerable discussion, the House, by a vote of 101 to 120, to-day refused to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means the concurrent resolution of the Senate fixing the 10th of June as the time for the adjournment of Congress without day, the anti-tariff Democrats voting with the Republicans against the motion to refer.

THURSDAY, April 18.—SENATE.—The House bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and the Senate bill authorizing citizens of Colorado, Nevada and Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes were passed....The Senate bill in relation to the Pacific railroads, being the Funding bill reported from the Railroad Committee, which still remained on the calendar, was indefinitely postponed.... The executive session of the Senate was mainly occupied with a discussion in regard to the nomination of John McNeil, of Missouri, to be Indian Inspector. The principal ground of opposition to him was his having caused the execution of ten guerrillas while serving as an officer in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion. The Democratic Senators generally voted against his confirmation, but it was finally effected by a vote of 31 to 26.

HOUSE.—There was a wrangle over an appropriation proposed by the Senate for increased railway mail service, and to prevent illicit distilling. The House was unable to agree with the Senate, and a new conference was appointed.

Mr. Hewitt's Plan.

Representative Hewitt, of New York, contemplates submitting to the House a plan to facilitate the transaction of public business. Some change is imperatively needed, as, under the present system, the greater portion of the time is wasted, and the expenses of the Government greatly increased. Hewitt's plan is to leave the present Representative Hall as a sitting-room, and where conversation and private business can be transacted, after the nature of what is called the Smoking-Room in the Houses of Parliament, and to convert the Statuary Hall into a chamber exclusively for the transaction of business. In this latter chamber no desks are to be allowed, nor is writing, loud speaking, nor anything to be permitted except the closest attention to the Congressional business. Written speeches are not to be delivered there. It is to be in the power of the majority at any time to occupy the large hall whenever a great occasion may seem to demand it. Hewitt will propose this scheme as an experiment, and, from estimates, it appears that Statuary Hall can be arranged for that purpose at an expense of $5,000.—Washington Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Death and the Doctor.

The average population to each physician is, in the United States, 600; England, 1,672; France, 1,814; Austria, 2,500; Germany, 3,000. So, then, with five times as many to dose us with drugs as our German friends, we are able to do about half the work. We hear of German students who study eighteen hours a day. Their Teutonic blood may be too tonic for us, but we are sure the Americans are not living out half their days—not half the period that they would live if living slower. Why, even the animals that we domesticate, like the horse and dog, only live a dozen or twenty years, while crows and their ilk live a century, and the eagle 500 years, according to Tacitus. To renew our youth like the eagle's we are to go back to more primitive simplicity. "Modern conveniences" are other words for disease and death. Our food, attire and employments all invite disease.—Church Union.

STARTLING TRAGEDY.

A Woman Shot Dead by Another One on the Stage—Reckless Use of Fire-Arms.

(Providence (R. I.) Cor. New York Herald.)

A terrible tragedy occurred this evening at the opera house, in Pawtucket, in this State, during one of those sensational and reckless exhibitions in marksmanship, originally introduced on the stage by Frank Frayne and his wife, Miss Clara Butler. In this instance the holder of the rifle was a woman, and she instantly killed another woman who was holding the apple aimed at on her head. On Monday last a variety company, hailing from the Mozart Garden, in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., commenced an engagement at the Pawtucket Opera House, their performance being of an ordinary character, except the feats in rifle-shooting by Mrs. Jennie Fowler, whose stage name is Miss Jennie Franklin. She usually began by firing at a target and at various objects, closing that part of her performance by shooting at an apple placed on the head of another member of the company, known as Mlle. Volante, who also appeared as a trapese performer.

In order to intensify the sensational character of this act, Miss Franklin, instead of taking direct aim at the apple on Mlle. Volante's head, faced in an opposite direction and obtained her range by means of a small mirror placed at the wing. This mirror has to be arranged at such an angle that its face will bring the face of the person supporting the apple directly in the center of the glass. The holder of the rifle places the weapon over her right shoulder, and then takes aim through the sights at the reflected image before her. The trick has been repeatedly accomplished with success, but it requires great coolness and steadiness to strike the reflected apple with precision, and has always been deemed a foolhardy and dangerous experiment.

This evening the variety entertainment passed off as usual until the rifle-shooting act, when the audience was horrified by seeing the unfortunate trapese performer shot dead. Miss Franklin displayed considerable skill in hitting her target and other objects while firing directly at them, and she seemed confident and assured when the final feat was to be attempted. M'lle Volante stepped alertly to her station, smiling at the audience as she did so. Placing the apple (an ordinary-sized one) on the top of her head, where it rested in her luxuriant hair, she stood motionless as a statue. Miss Franklin also took her station near the footlights, in front of the mirror, and deliberately aimed over her shoulder through the glass at her ill-fated friend. The audience sat in silence, curiously watching the performance and suspecting some deceitful trick, when suddenly the trigger was pulled, and at the same instant a shriek resounded through the hall as the unfortunate Volante fell forward on the stage.

Everything was now in confusion, both before and behind the footlights, the audience being in a state of terror at the denouement of what had promised to be only a pleasant bit of sensation. At first it was only supposed that Mlle. Volante had been wounded, but it was not many minutes before the news spread that the woman had been instantly killed, the fatal bullet having entered her forehead and pierced the brain.

Miss Franklin was immediately placed under arrest by the local police. She seemed to be half crazed with horror at the occurrence, only realizing the recklessness of her act when it was too late.

The tragedy has naturally caused great excitement in the town of Pawtucket. This accident will, of course, put a stop to all such exhibitions, no matter who may attempt them.

The members of the company, with a large number of the audience, seem to ascribe the cause of the accident to Miss Volante moving after the apple had been placed upon her head. She was of a very jovial nature, and laughed repeatedly during the performance of this part, and the management had cautioned her to keep still, and pay strict attention during that act. She voluntarily assumed the part for a few nights, during Mr. Franklin's absence, he having gone to Brooklyn for his child.

When Miss Volante fell her head dropped near the footlights, and her hair got scorched somewhat, but some of the audience removed her from the flames. It seems from the statement of those present that on its occurrence for an instant every one seemed dumbfounded. When the audience rose to their feet and hastened forward some of the men in the audience fainted at the ghastly sight. The distance across the stage was scarcely twenty feet, and one may judge of the force with which the bullet must have entered her brain from a rifle at that short range.

Fashion Fripperies.

Olive and blue are worn together with good effect.

Scarf drapery is quite novel, and will be popular.

Street basques are increased in length this season.

Blush pink is a fashionable color for full-dress bonnets.

A perfect corset is indispensable to a perfectly-fitting dress.

The most fastidious women wear hosiery to match their dresses.

New veils are narrow black net pieces to be worn like a mask veil.

The real Roman pearls are the beads most used by stylish milliners.

The Ulster will be the most fashionable garment in linen for summer traveling purposes.

Evening toilets are all made Princesse or Empress robes, and the trains are fully a yard long.

A novelty for summer dresses is colored linen in open patterns like lace or brocade.

A modern costume of fine cambric or percale is as pretty and elaborate in its way as one of silk.

In all goods, both foreign and American, there is a marked improvement in the quality and finish.

Brocaded grenadines of two colors, or two shades, are among the richest dresses shown for summer.

Neat and pretty dresses for young ladies and school girls are made of the hair-striped summer silks.

The styles in millinery are so varied and many this season that out of the hundreds displayed no two look alike.

One of the prettiest novelties brought out in millinery are flowers whose petals are formed of thin flakes of mother-of-pearl.

Mastic gray (putty color), with green, is one of the most popular combinations in spring suits sent over by French modistes.

The d es of the colored hosiery are very much improved, the colors being both faster and better in point of vividness and variety of shades.

The latest fancy in overdresses is that of making a vest with a coat that is lengthened behind to form a polonaise, yet preserves the simple outlines of gentlemen's coats.

THE BLAIR RESOLUTION.

Speech of Mr. Dennis, of Maryland, on Presenting it to the Senate.

MR. PRESIDENT: If the Senate will bear with me a moment I will explain my relation to this resolution. There are no instructions coming to me from the Legislature of my State in regard to it. I am opposed to it. I shall act with good faith. I voted for the appointment of the Electoral Commission, and I will stand by the decision of that commission. I feel in honor bound to sustain it. I feel that if I were to do otherwise I should be unworthy, as a member of the Senate, to a seat upon the floor. Moreover, I am sure that, while reason holds her sway over the minds of our people, any attempt to reverse the decision of that commission will not succeed. I do not consider this Senate a suitable arena for the exercise of such a power as this joint resolution which has been read would propose. Our people desire peace. We have had enough disturbance throughout this land. No man within the confines of my State desires to witness a renewal of such scenes as have been enacted within the past fourteen or fifteen years. No one can desire to see brothers weltering in brothers' gore. We want unity, peace and concord, and never while I hold a position on this floor shall there be any act of mine the effect of which would be otherwise than to contribute and aid in bringing about fraternal accord between every section of our country.

Sir, we are one people, identified and bound together by the ties of relationship, and by every tie that can bind man to his fellow-man. Let those who died in that sanguinary strife rest in peace. Let those who were baptized by the blood of that strife, and slumber among the dead, sleep in peace until the day of final resurrection, when the archangel shall assemble uncounted millions by the sound of his trumpet, and call upon the sea and all the earth to give up their dead.

Sir, we are united as a people in all and in every respect. We are bound by bonds of iron, and, I may say, by a network of nerves, in a telegraph so arranged that when you touch one point you touch the whole.

Sir, to the Pacific ocean I have sent one of my children, who is as dear to me as my own heart's blood. His destiny is fixed with those people in that growing, rich and populous section. While he sleeps by the gentle murmurs of the placid Pacific, I, in the noonday sunshine, almost, am here, and shall labor to do whatever I can to promote the interest of that section in which his future destiny is fixed, and every section of our common country.

In the presentation of this resolution I have performed the duty which respect for the Legislature of my State demands, but, believing that the interests of every section of the Union calls for acquiescence in the decision made by the Electoral Commission, I feel constrained to state that I shall deem it incumbent upon me to oppose any action by this body in furtherance of the intent of the resolution. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

So ordered.

Cure for Rheumatism.

Some years ago, in Philadelphia, there was an old Irishman who made a great many cures of the rheumatism by the following process: "Make a poultice of strong mustard, mixed with garlic, vinegar, and a few crumbs of bread or meat. Go to bed, have plenty of clothes placed over you to induce perspiration, and have this poultice placed, about a quarter of an inch thick, close to the hollow of your feet (no cloth between feet and poultice), keep it on for ten or fifteen hours, then take off the poultice, and the cure is complete." Get one ounce of iodide of potassia, put it in a quart bottle of soft water, and take for a dose two-thirds of a common-sized stem wineglass three times a day, half an hour before meals. Avoid strong drink and gross diet. Should the glands of your neck get sore, you must reduce the dose. You must take regular rest, and take four bottles of the medicine before you stop, and then quit it for two weeks. Then take two bottles more, which will in all probability complete the cure. You must keep your bowels open. I would advise all rheumatics to try the poultice first, and, if it fails to effect a cure, then to try the recipe which cured Mr. Boswell, of Louisville, Ky., a gentleman well known and highly respected in that city.—Exchange.

Killing a Bear at Close Quarters.

As Mr. Kirk, of Linsmore, N. S., was returning home last Friday evening from his work in the woods, he suddenly encountered a large bear, and, before he could get out of the way, he was grappled by the animal, and both rolled over on the earth. Mr. Kirk, who is a man of Herculean strength, struggled desperately to free himself from his antagonist, but without avail. Then, drawing a large knife which he carried, he stabbed the bear repeatedly in the ribs, and at last succeeded in sending a fatal thrust that reached the heart. Bruin then gave up the ghost, but, strange to say, even in death, he still retained his victim in a close embrace. So rigid did his limbs become that Mr. Kirk, despite his utmost efforts, was unable to release himself from his uncomfortable situation. Nor could he extricate himself until he received the assistance of a man who was luckily passing by and was attracted by Mr. Kirk's cries. Mr. Kirk's injuries were only trifling.—St. John Telegraph.

THE year before last a young American landed at Patras, Greece, and, without a guide, and with no knowledge of the language, walked through the breadth of the Peloponnesus to Athens.

Some of Prentice's Sayings.

A recent writer reproduces from the Louisville Journal some of George D. Prentice's witticisms, which were not dependent upon time and circumstances, as most of them naturally were, for their point and force. Following are a few of them:

"To keep your friends treat them kindly; to kill them, treat them often."

"He who reels and staggers most in the journey of life takes the straightest cut to the devil."

"Men should not think too much of themselves, and yet a man should be careful not to forget himself."

"A dinner to which a man is not invited generally sits hardest on his stomach."

"There are many men whose tongues might govern multitudes if they could govern their tongues."

"The doctors ought to escape calumny. No man living has a right to speak ill of them."

"The working of a corkscrew is about the only thing 'best achieved by indirection.'"

"The reduction of postal facilities has gone too far. The mail passed through —— town the other day in a couple of stockings tied over the back of a bull-dog."

"A few days ago the freedom of New York city was presented to Mr. Van Buren in a gold snuff-box. There was plenty of room in the box for all the freedom that New York has enjoyed for many years."

"There are two periods when Congress does no business. One is before the holidays and the other after."

"Were it not ungenerous to remind a man of his natural deformities, we should inform the editor of the Grand Gulf Advertiser that he is a natural fool."

"An opposition editor offers to bet his ears on something to our discredit. He shouldn't carry gambling to such extreme lengths."

"If the editor of the —— isn't a rogue, he ought to bring a libel suit against his own face."

Spring Gardening.

Sow shirt buttons early in the morning.

Sow bird seed this month. The birds will come up by June.

Cats do best in the night in a very light soil, well dug and raked.

Sardine cans, broken bottles, old shoes, and tin-ware should be set out in the back yard.

The gin-cocktail does best under glass. It needs but little water, and its cultivation will give one an appetite for breakfast.

Prima donnas are lovely flowers, but very difficult to raise. A gentleman endeavored to raise Roze last month, but failed entirely.

If you are a landlord and in any doubt as to what product to raise—raise the rent. If you are not a landlord, try and raise the wind.

Oysters should be set out with a top dressing of bread crumbs and plentifully watered. The oyster withers if not watered, although its fragrance is increased.

Olive branches should be set out around the breakfast table. They need great care and attention, however, to keep them from running into the butter and molasses. Wash them well once a day with soap and water.—New York Graphic.

A Paragon of a Husband.

"Oh, my husband is quite a paragon of perfection," said Mrs. A. to Mrs. B. "Ah, indeed! Doesn't he drink any more?" asked Mrs. B. "No," said Mrs. A. "About two months ago he came home intoxicated, and I told him if he ever did so again I'd go home to ma, and he doesn't drink now." "That accounts for it," said Mrs. B. "The other night my husband met him in the street hanging to a lamp-post, and asked him why he didn't go home, and he said he would as soon as he got sober." When Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. pass each other in the street now, the coolness is as thick as a quart of ice cream.—New York Dispatch.

SOVEREIGNTY OF THE GREENBACK.

No Redemption.

The Government of the United States is sovereign in all the powers of the General Government; sovereign in all the powers delegated to it by the people, through the constitution. It is supreme, superior to all, predominant, effectual! As God is the sovereign ruler of the spiritual, government is the sovereign ruler of the political! The constitution has confided to government the sole and supreme power of declaring what shall constitute money, what shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and, when it has so declared, what it has declared to be money is as sovereign as money as the Government is sovereign as a power. It declared silver and gold, of a certain weight and fineness, to be money, and it became money. As money it was supreme for all the purposes of money; there was nothing superior to it, and, therefore, there was nothing to which it acknowledged its dependency but the Government which created it. It could not be redeemed, for its sovereignty made it supreme. Government not only declared its sovereignty as money, but it received it for its taxes, for its revenues, for all its demands as the supreme power. In this sense, and in this sense alone, the Government redeemed it. It re-issued it as fast and as often as it received it, thus perpetually admitting and declaring its sovereignty as money.

The distinction between money that is, and may be, declared a legal tender, and State or individual bank bills, erroneously called money, which cannot be made a legal tender, is obvious. The State which charters a bank, with power to issue bills as currency, through the individuals which constitute its corporate existence, has no power to make or declare such bills money—no power to declare them a legal tender. The State neither possesses the sovereignty nor the power of declaring what shall be money, nor what shall constitute a legal tender. State banks cannot create money; they may create a currency of doubtful character. They possess no single elements of sovereignty as creators of money, but are entirely subordinate to a double sovereignty, if I may be permitted the expression. For, first, they are the creatures of State laws, the State creating them being sovereign in all matters in which they are not subordinate to the Government of the United States. They—that is each of the States—are subordinate in the power of creating money. In this the States are not sovereign. The United States]possesses and can alone exercise this sovereignty.

From this it follows that all currency, whether in the form of bills, or of gold, or silver, authorized by a State, through banks, whether individual or corporate, is inferior, not recognized by the sovereign power of the United States, and therefore not money. Being inferior, and recognizing a superior kind of money, which is sovereign as money, it is compelled to redeem itself, and to maintain agents for its redemption, and means to procure the money the Government declares to be money, to redeem the promise on which it is received and recognized as currency, and the moment it fails to so redeem itself the public discard it. In fact, these State bank and individual bank bills are nothing more nor less than the individual or limited corporate promise of combined individuals to redeem the bills they issue, in legal or sovereign money of the United States. Redemption is the sole test of its value. A failure to redeem is a failure of the bank; a failure of the bank is the loss of the people who trust the bank.

It was the perpetual failures, the constant stoppages of the State banks to redeem, which constituted the curse of the system. They were founded exclusively by individuals, their entire reliability rested on individual honesty and good faith. They did not possess even State guarantees. They were subordinates of a subordinate authority, and their inferiority to national money was as distinct and as absolute as the power of the individual is inferior to the power of the nation. In a word, they were but the infinitesimal constituents of the sovereignty of power and of the sovereignty of money. The relation they bore to sovereign money was the relation one individual, acting as a banker, or fifty individuals in a corporate capacity, bears to the 40,000,000 individuals who compose the Government; and the $100,000 of the individual bank capital, or the $1,000,000 of the corporate bank capital bear the same ratio of inferiority to national money as those sums bear to the $40,000,000,000 of our national resources. To sum up the difference, it is only essential to say that State bank currency represents an individual; national money represents the nation.

Gold and silver are but limited elements of national production; but, recognized and declared to be money by the sovereign power, they become sovereign money, and, therefore, neither require nor are capable of redemption.

The greenbacks, like gold and silver, are declared to be money by the sovereign power, and are by that power sovereign as money, and, being sovereign, they are as incapable of redemption as gold and silver, and, representing all the products of the nation and all the sovereignty of the nation, as a mere representative of sovereign power, they are as superior to gold and silver as a whole is superior to a limited constituent part.

A currency which has to be redeemed is not money. It is a mere individual promise to redeem in a money that is sovereign—a promise oftener broken than kept. It was a perpetual shuttlecock flying between certainty and uncertainty, with the uncertainty as certain as individual unreliability. The greenback has killed it. The nation has declared that it will rely on the nation; the people that they will rely on the people. The greenback is the symbol of the nation's faith and of the nation's sovereignty. It is money of the people, proclaimed by the people as the type of their sovereign independence of all mere individual responsibility. One has only to trace the history of the purposes of redemption of individual money to find the curse and the tyranny of the system. We have rid ourselves of the slavery of its eternal oppression. This is the new departure. It is the nation's new declaration of independence against the long catalogue of the wrongs of capital and its crimes, its usurpations, its baronial feudalities, its moneyed aristocracies, its damnable usuries, and its monopolized compounding of interest and taxes. Let us stand by this new departure—the sovereignty of the greenback as money—living to defend it, battling to sustain it, and revolutionizing, if necessary, to make it permanent as the nation, and universal as the people. But, in denouncing the principle of a money issue which requires redemption, let us see and comprehend what redemption is.

Redemption has been the weapon of the banker. It has been his instrument of tyranny, his means of crushing, and, therefore, his instrument of torture. New York has been the center of the nation; Boston the center of New England; Philadelphia the center of Pennsylvania. The old theory was that the country bankers must redeem their bills as they accumulated in these centers, and a failure to redeem was a failure of credit. So long as the bill of the country bank was redeemed at these centers it was regarded as good and current, less the cost of redemption at these cities. This difference, under the old gold-basis system, was called exchange. Nominally it is intended to represent the cost of transferring the bill to New York from St. Louis, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Chicago, Cleveland, or Buffalo, or any other point, and getting it changed into current funds, the equivalent of gold; really it meant not only the cost of the exchange, but the risk run by the exchangers of the solvency of the bank whose money was to be exchanged. This exchange varied with sections, cities, States, and communities. It varied from a quarter or an eight of 1 per cent. up to 3, 4, and 5, and 10 per cent. in ordinary times. It was always a crushing burden upon the producer as well as the consumer. The city banks held the county banks as their subjects. They had the power to sweep down upon them whenever they could accumulate their bills in sufficient quantities to make it an object to do so. If a country bank was strong, and if money was plenty, then the New York banks would use the currency, and not retain it for redemption; but if a bank showed the slightest signs of weakness—that is, if, in the desire of its officers to accommodate manufacturers, merchants, and dealers, it discounted freely, and paid out its own bills—it always ran the risk of having its currency find its way to the money centers, and, through the bankers there, to a demand for redemption in New York city funds or gold, and they had to be ready or they had to fail.

This system of redemption was essential for the safety of the lenders, or redemption houses at the centers; for, as the circulation of the country banks was based on bonds and mortgages, and the individual liability of the stockholders, the security was always uncertain, and therefore all credit had to be based on the promptness with which the redemptions were made. It was an endless curb on bank accommodations; it was an endless uncertainty, and therefore the system always lacked that positive stability which creates certainty, the mother of confidence. A customer applying for a discount was met with the excuse, "The New York banks compel us to redeem weekly, and we never know when we are safe." This enabled the banker to require, first, that the paper should be short; second, that it should be made payable in New York; and, third, that it should be paid in drafts, purchased of the discounting bank in New York, at the regular rates of exchange. The system was vexatious, expensive, and uncertain, but it brought grists to the mill of the great redeeming houses and to the banks. The national currency known as greenbacks is free from all these complications, for it redeems itself. It is money. The national-bank issues are still subject to the old curse—they have to redeem in greenbacks or in gold, and it affords the banker the argument by which he can magnify the power of his money. It is this system of divided and diversified liability, resting on individual passions, abilities and strength, which is the curse of the national-bank currency; and just as long as that is furnished by the Government to the national banks will these endless fluctuations exist. Money speculators live on these fluctuations; they are the nutriment and soul of all the gambling infamies of Wall street.

The greenback theory is the only one ever invented which strips paper currency from all the ceaseless burdens and fluctuations caused by the cry for redemption. The greenback is money—money possessing all the power of gold; it needs no redemption, for there is no superior to it. It is superior to gold, for gold is one of its subordinate supports; gold is one of its inferior constituents, as wheat, and corn, and cotton, and wool, and cheese, united to the whole manifold round of production, are its constituents. These are the elements of national strength and national wealth. The greenback is the nation itself; combining all that is material with all that is intangible, it is the united whole, not a part to be classed as a product of labor, but the combined entity of all constituents united into a power which knows no superior. It can, therefore, know no power to redeem it. It is irredeemable, because it is the whole. It pays for everything we want to eat, drink, wear, burn, consume or create. It pays all debts, public or private. It buys all that can be bought, and pays for everything demanding payment. It is money in the highest sense of nationality. It is not cursed with the limitation of any individual liability. It is not limited by individual wealth or corporate wealth, measured by State laws or State liability. It is the grand realization of "E Pluribus Unum." It is of one value everywhere to everybody. It is the same on the Atlantic coast as it is on the coast of the Pacific. From Alaska to Key West, wherever the sovereignty of our flag is recognized, the greenback is recognized. It owes no one, and being the highest, the strongest, the best indication of value, as the expression of national will there is no center to which it must culminate. Wherever the constitution is paramount the greenback is paramount. As gold is one of its constituents, so is silver; so that, whenever either of these metals is wanted for exchanges beyond the sovereignty of our nationality, the superior always can and always will command them, either as coin bearing the stamp of the mint or as bullion in the bar, representing its value as a merchantable product.

The greenback being superior to all ideas of redemption, it buries and forever all individual moneys or corporation moneys which have so long made redemption a necessity. The greenback is the nation, and one might as well talk about exchanging or redeeming the nation as to talk about redeeming the greenback.

When we want to turn back the wheels of progress and make the great mass of our people mere serfs to the soil and slaves to a nobility of task-masters, then we may want the feudalism of Prussia and the iron hand of Bismarck to control us. For the future the people will regulate their own currency. The greenback is the child of the people; the people will nurture it. It has saved us in the past; we will sustain it for the future.

Stop Contraction—More Money Needed.

We gave in a previous article the amount of money in circulation among the people at present as $460,499,882. The figures to show that are to be found in the published interview of the Committee of Finance of the United States Senate with Mr. Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury. The figures given by Mr. Sherman showed the following:

Greenbacks and bank notes outstanding	$649,000,000
Silver circulation	32,479,308
	$681,479,308
Deduct bank reserve	220,979,426
Total currency among the people	$460,499,882

How much is that per capita of the population of the United States? The population of the United States for 1878 is estimated by Prof. E. B. Elliott, of Washington, at 48,191,000; $460,499,882 would give $9.55 per capita of actual currency among the people. Our volume of currency, according to the population using it, has not been so low as $9.55 per capita for twenty years; while in that period our population has nearly doubled, and our real and personal wealth more than doubled. In 1858 our currency per capita, according to Prof. Walker, in his "Science of Wealth," was $11.55. Our currency now, had its volume kept pace with our increase in population and growth in real and personal wealth, should measure $23 per capita and over $1,000,000,000 in volume.

Counting the bank reserve, our outstanding currency would be $14.14 per capita. France has three times that, England double, and Germany nearly double. The extent and comparative newness of our country, the enterprise of our people, the outgrowth of popular institutions, and the absence of monetary accommodations and facilities, so numerous in England, France and Germany, demand a larger volume of currency for our ordinary business operations, per capita, than do the populations of the countries named. And yet, we are told, there is as much money now as there is any necessity for. That may be true for the present sickly business condition of the country. But we do not want business to be kept in that condition. If a man is sick and debilitated he doesn't need and couldn't use as much food as if he was well and active. We want the business of the country to be resuscitated, put in a healthy condition. That cannot be done by the debilitating system of contraction that is constantly going on, and must continue until after the first of January next, unless the pernicious Resumption act shall be repealed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Pork-Packing.

The Cincinnati Price Current's twenty-ninth annual report of pork-packing in the West has been published. The total winter packing in the West was 6,505,000; average net weight, 226 4-100 pounds; yield of lard, 38 61-100 per hog; cost per 100 pounds, net, $4.99. Compared with last winter there is a gain of 1,404,000 in the number of hogs packed, 10.12 pounds in the average net weight, 4.53 in the average yield of lard, and a decrease of $2.19 in the average cost per 100 pounds. The net total production of barreled pork was 723,368 barrels, an increase of 86,101. The aggregate packing for the twelve months ending March 1 was 9,048,565 hogs. The winter's product of lard was 761,192 tierces, of which it is estimated the visible supply in the West and seaboard, including interior points, was 250,000 tierces, or 33 per cent. The winter product of cured meats was 980,000,000 pounds, including barreled product, of which there was at large cities in the interior and at the seaboard 388,000,000 pounds. The report is elaborate in its presentation of details of the season's business and comparisons with previous years.

Hydrophobia Cured.

A correspondent in the Country Gentleman says: "Hydrophobia can be prevented, and I will give what is well known to be an infallible remedy, if properly administered, for man or beast. A dose for a horse or a cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine any time before the spasms come on. The first dose for a person is an ounce and a half of elecampane root, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to one-half by boiling, then taken all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet after several hours have elapsed. The second dose same as first, except take two ounces of the root; third dose the same as last; to be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own experience, and know a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful."

SABBATH READING.

No Room for Jesus.

O plodding life! crowded so full
  Of earthly toil and care!
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
  No room for Jesus there!

O busy brain! by night and day
  Working with patience rare
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking till thought becomes a pain
  No room for Jesus there.

O throbbing heart! so quick to feel
  In others' woes a share,
Yet human loves each power enthrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all;
  No room for Jesus there.

O sinful soul! thus to debase
  The being God doth spare!
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own
Heart, brain, life, are His alone;
Lest soon the bitter day shall come
  When vain will be thy prayer
To find in Jesus' heart a place,
Forever closed the door of grace,
  Thou'lt gain no entrance there.

Take Down Your Bible

And hunt up the following:

1. Who was the first drunkard? Gen. ix., 20, 21.
2. Who took the first temperance pledge? Judges xiii., 13, 14.
3. Who first pledged himself? Daniel i., 8.
4. Was he any wiser thereby? Daniel i., 15, 20.
5. Can a drunkard inherit the kingdom of heaven? I. Cor., vi., 9, 10.
6. Where was the first temperance society held? Jer. xxxv., 6, 8.
7. What blessing did God pronounce upon the first temperance society? Jer. xxxv., 18, 19.
8. Is temperance a vice? Gal. v., 23.
9. When is it a virtue? II. Pet. i., 5 7.

Formation of Character.

If you ever watched an icicle as it formed, you would have noticed how it froze one drop at a time until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean the icicle remained clear, and it sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was sightly muddy the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are formed. One little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If every thought be pure and right, the soul will be bright and lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but, if there be thoughts and feelings impure and wrong, the mind will be soiled, the character depraved and darkened, and there will be final deformity and wretchedness. How important, then, that we should be on our guard against every evil impulse and desire!

The Mazarine.

There are only two copies of the Mazarine Bible in America, and only six in the world. Two years ago two copies were sold at auction in London in the same sale, and one, printed upon paper, brought $14,000 gold; the other, on vellum, brought $20,000. Usually a vellum copy of any work brings four or five times as much as a paper one; but the history of the Mazarine Bible raises the value of the paper copies relatively to those on vellum. Guttenberg printed the first copies in 1455, and all these were on paper; in 1456 Faust got possession of the types, and his edition was partly on vellum. These, consequently, are not so complete or original. One of the American copies is owned in Hartford, Conn. It is one of the genuine Guttenberg prints, and is a marvel of the printer's work. Its equal could not be made to-day.

Abraham's Prayers.

The first full-length prayer is Abraham's touching plea in behalf of Sodom (Gen. xviii., 22, 23). See in it the characteristics of acceptable prayers:

A sinner feels he is "but dust and ashes," deserving "anger," not favor.

The sinner stands before God, believing in the promised Savior—no other warrant.

The sinner full of faith, that is, resting wholly on Messiah, is "the friend of God." God meets him, and stays to hear what he has to say.

This believing sinner yearns over perishing souls.

He perseveringly urges requests in behalf of the perishing.

Then we find (xix., 27-29) he looked after his prayers and found results.

Men of faith, oh, be men of prayer! A world perishing. Our country needs it. The churches of Christ need it. The Jews need it. The heathen need it. Some at your very door need it. And surely there would be results.

The Praying Little Cripple.

I once knew a little cripple who lay upon her death-bed. She had given herself to God, and was distressed only because she could not labor for Him actively among the lost. Her clergyman visited her, and, hearing her complaint, told her that there from her sick-bed she could offer prayers for those whom she wished to see turning to God. He advised her to write the names down, and then pray earnestly; and then he went away and thought of the subject no more. Soon a feeling of great religious interest sprung up in the village, and the churches were crowded nightly. The little cripple heard of the progress of the revival, and inquired anxiously for the names of the saved. A few weeks later she died, and among a roll of papers that was found under her little pillow was one bearing the names of fifty-six persons, every one of whom had in the revival been converted. By each name was a cross, by which the poor crippled saint had checked off the names of the converts as they had been reported to her.—Moody's Child Stories.

Things Worth Knowing.

What neat housekeeper is not annoyed when she sees on the spotless woodwork of her doors or windows those long dark scratches which reveal that some one has tried to light a match by drawing it across the paint? Now this is sometimes our experience, for servants will be forgetful or careless, and the tell-tale scratches greet our eyes in most unlooked-for quarters. But we have found a remedy for the marks, which, as every one knows, quite defy soap and water. Cut a sour orange or lemon in half; apply the cut half to the marks, rubbing for a moment quite hard; then wash off with a clean rag, dipped first in water to moisten it, and then in whiting. Rub well with this rag, dry thoroughly, and nine times out of ten the ugly marks will vanish. Of course, sometimes they are burned in so deeply that they cannot be quite eradicated. All finger-marks on painted walls, etc., should be rubbed off with a little damp whiting in the same way, and never washed with soap-suds, which destroy the paint.—Golden Rule.

A GOOD substitute for gutta percha has been discovered. It is called ralata, and is the hardened resin of a tree growing on the banks of the Amazon.

THE legend runs that a St. Louis directory man never ventures to pass through Chicago. He always gets out of the cars and walks around it.

THE oldest stove in the United States, if not in the world, is that used in the hall of the Capitol of Virginia, in Richmond. It was made in England and sent to Virginia in the year 1777.

OVER $2,000 a year is the value of the suds of a Bonanza miner's wash. The dirt washed from their shirts has been found to assay $259.10 to the ton. What a field for Nevada washer-women!

AN Italian is reported to have invented an appliance for the piano, by means of which that instrument can be made to give out prolonged notes, like a wind instrument or violin. Melo-piano is the name given the new instrument.

GERMAN newspapers daily mention the fact that Germany is, if possible, more sadly plagued with tramps than this country is. In rural districts women are in hourly anxiety because of these pests, and keep their doors carefully locked whenever their husbands are away from home.

THEY have discovered a bee in the wilds of Northern Michigan which is said to be of more value as a producer of honey than the Italian bee; but, unfortunately, it has a sting which is more painful than that of the wasp. They call it the "sweet stinger of Michigan."—Breakfast Table.

BANTING, the great man whose book on overcoming a tendency to obesity had so great a run some years ago, is dead, but England rejoices in the possession of one William Campbell, a man of 23, who stands six feet four inches, and weighs 728 pounds. He is the very picture of health, too, and is growing.

THE Russian navy has ready for use a newly-invented Swedish gun, claimed to be much superior to the Gatling gun. It moves to and fro, from side to side, in a section of a circle, sweeping the area it covers very thoroughly. It can be carried into the maintop of a vessel and worked to great advantage on an enemy's decks.

THE Murphy temperance movement in Massachusetts will, if the plan does not fail, be made permanent in the hands of a State committee, with a paid Secretary. Speakers for revivalism are to be provided by this central organization, which is not to dabble in politics. The Murphy pledge has 80,000 subscribers in Western Massachusetts.

ABOUT the tenth jewel robbery has just been committed in England. The thieves entered the dressing-room of Mrs. Valentine Cunningham, Walton Heath, Surrey, while she was at dinner, and took jewels of the value of $20,000, escaping undetected. In a precisely similar fashion have all the other robberies been committed.

EDISON'S claim to the invention of the telephone is contested by a French telegrapher, Charles Bourseilles, who, in 1854, stumbled on the idea of transmitting sound by electricity, but was discouraged by the coldness of his reception by M. Du Moncel, the member of the Academy of Sciences to whom he confided his views and suggestions, and so dropped the matter.

THE National Rifle Association has resolved to have a match at Creedmoor next September, open to all teams from each of the States of the Union, and all other countries, each country having a national guard or military, distinct from its regular army, entitled to send a separate team, to represent it. The annual convention of riflemen will be held at Creedmoor, May 24, for organization.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Galveston News recently talked with the old Indian chief, Santanta, in the Texas penitentiary. Santanta, the correspondent says, is treated very leniently. His occupation is chair-making, but he is allowed to desist and fall asleep whenever he chooses. He said that his age was 86 years, and yet he is a powerful-looking old fellow, with not a gray hair in his head. When asked whether he liked prison life as well as did the prairies and buffaloes, he said: "Ah—h—ah!" and shook his head.

IT is now the fashion in Paris to wear real flowers at balls; and, apropos of this, ladies who have good taste have decided to wear the flowers peculiar to the season—roses in the summer, daisies in the autumn, heliotropes, ivy, or holly in winter. Flowers reared in hothouses will also be worn, and, now that diamonds are placed everywhere, small ones will represent the dewdrops on these natural flowers. They are fixed on the petals with wire by fleuristes.

NO PUBLIC man of England ever mingled so much pursuit of everything in the form of indulgence with so much parliamentary activity as did Charles James Fox. From the dinner he went to the debate, from the debate to the gaming table, and returned to his bed by daylight, freighted with parliamentary applause, plundered of his last disposable guinea, and fevered with sleeplessness and agitation, to go through the same round within the next twenty-four hours. He kept no table and no house, but every house and table of his party in politics was at his disposal.

ILLINOIS DEMOCRACY.

Platform Adopted at the Late Springfield Convention.

The Democracy of the State of Illinois, assembled in convention, congratulate the country on the final settlement of the questions resulting from the late civil war, upon the principles of local self-government so long supported by the Democratic party, and reaffirm confidence in the capacity of the people to govern themselves, and their belief in the supremacy of the civil over the military power, the liberty of individual action uncontrolled by sumptuary laws, the separation of church and state, the support of free common schools, and the duty of all to yield to the lawfully-expressed will of the majority; and we declare:

1. That reform must be made in national, State, county and municipal Government by the reduction of taxes and expenditures, the dismissal of unnecessary and incompetent officers and employes from the public service, and the strict enforcement of official responsibility, and that the provisions of the State constitution limiting indebtedness and the rate of taxation shall be strictly observed and enforced.

2. That a tariff for revenue only should be adopted, and, if discrimination be made, it should be in favor of the necessaries of life, and, in order to remove a part of the burden from the mass of the people who are taxed too much, a gradual tax on incomes over a reasonable sum for support ought to be adopted and placed upon the surplus profits of the wealthy, who escape their just proportion of taxation.

3. That we are in favor of United States bonds and treasury notes being subjected to taxation, the same as other property.

4. That all contracts ought to be performed in good faith, according to the terms thereof, and the obligations of the Government discharged in lawful money, except when otherwise expressly provided upon their face and by the law under which they were issued, and repudiation should find no favor with an honorable people.

5. That it is not our intention to make any further reduction of the principal of the public debt for the present, and the bonds, as they mature, or sooner if possible, should be replaced by the issue of other bonds bearing a lower rate of interest. It is the duty of the Federal Government to issue bonds in small denominations to be sold in this country for the accommodation of those who wish to invest savings in safe securities.

6. That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the Resumption act.

7. That we applaud the action of Congress in the enactment of what is known as the Silver bill, and accept it as a partial measure of financial relief; but we demand such further legislation as may result in authorizing silver-bullion certificates and legalizing the free coinage of the silver dollar, the demonetization of which we denounce as an act meriting the condemnation of the people.

8. That it is the exclusive prerogative of the United States to issue all bills, to circulate all money, and a right which ought not to be exercised by any State or corporation.

9. That no further contraction of the volume of legal-tender treasury notes ought to be allowed, and they should be received for customs, taxes and public dues as well as private debts, and reissued as fast as received.

10. That the national-bank notes should be retired, and instead thereof there should be issued by the Government an equal amount of treasury notes.

11. That subsidies in money, bonds, lands or credit ought not to be granted by the Federal Government.

12. That the Bankrupt law ought to be immediately repealed.

13. That the courts should be brought as close to the homes of the litigants as economy in government will justify, and that, therefore, the judicial power of the United States should be so regulated as to prevent, in controversies between citizens of different States, the transfer of cases from the State to the Federal courts, which are so far removed from the people as to make justice therein inconvenient, expensive and tardy, and, further, that not less than $5,000 should be fixed as the minimum jurisdiction of such courts in such controversies.

14. That the appointment by Federal courts of receivers of corporations who resist the payment of taxes, disregard the rights of the citizens, and turn the earnings of the corporations into foreign channels, is an evil that ought to be corrected by law, and Congress ought to enact such laws as will prohibit such evils, and prevent the interference by the Federal courts with the collection of State, county, and municipal taxes by the appointment of receivers, the granting of injunctions, or other procedure.

15. That the wages of employes of corporations engaged in mining, manufacturing, and transportation shall be made a first lien upon the property, receipts, and earnings of said corporations, and that said lien should be declared, defined, and enforced by appropriate legal action.

16. That the system of leasing convict labor ought to be immediately abolished by the Legislature, and some measure adopted to protect the manufacturers, mechanics, and laborers from unjust competition with convict labor of other States.

In addition to the above, which was submitted as a platform, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the contract recently made by the Commissioners of the Penitentiary at Joliet with the Commissioners of the Eastern Insane Asylum, to build and complete that asylum, is without the authority of law, and the act of the Penitentiary Commissioners in sub-letting the entire work is a like violation of law, and a flagrant wrong to the mechanics and workingmen of this State, and the Attorney General is hereby requested to take immediate steps to have such contracts annulled, and to compel the letting of the work according to the statute.

Resolved, That the acts of the leaders of the Republican party in defeating the choice of the people for President and Vice President is the monster political crime of the age; is a crime against free government and the elective franchise, which can only be condoned when the criminals are driven from power and consigned to infamy by the people whom they have outraged; and we denounce the act of the President in appointing to high offices the corrupt members of the Returning Boards as a reward for their infamous conduct; and we condemn the officers of the Federal Government who have attempted to interfere with the administration of justice in the courts of Louisiana.

Resolved, That it is the duty of our Legislature to enact a law for the protection of depositors in savings banks and all other banks, and for the incarceration of defaulting bank officers.

Babes in the Woods.

Three little girls from 6 to 8 years of age, at Manville, Wis., on the Wisconsin Central railroad, wandered into the woods and got lost. Night came on, and the little ones finally at about midnight ran upon a hay-stack in a clearing. They pulled out some of the hay and made a hole big enough to crawl into, when to their horror several large wolves came howling about them and snapping their hungry jaws in anticipation of the human feast before them. The children cried and screamed in their terror, as the wolves came nearer and nearer. Finally the oldest of the children, while on her knees praying for herself and little sisters, happened to remember reading that fire would frighten away wild animals, and remembered also that she had a few matches in her pocket. In a moment she pushed the children out from the stack and struck a match and set fire to the dry hay. The effect was magical. In an instant the flames shot upward, and the wolves ran off in a rage of disappointment, and, soon after, as the little ones were warming their chilled blood in their little veins, their parents and friends came up to their rescue, attracted thither by the light from the burning hay-stack.

THE BOOT UPSIDE DOWN,

Auburn, Ind'a.

True as Preaching.

The following remarkable narrations are from the pen of D. B. Griffin, a correspondent of the Angola Herald, which he contributes to that paper under the head of "Reminiscences." If any body has a good snake story to give us send it in by all means:

I will continue some reminiscences of the past. There was a man in the vicinity of Freemont by the name of Abraham Walters, who had a son of the same name. The boy was a great hand to kill deer, turkey, etc. He would not hunt during good weather when it would interfere with his work, but would go out in the morning before breakfast and kill a deer; and I have known him to kill two before breakfast. Sometimes he would go out after his days' work was done and get a deer or turkey, and when he became a young man he had

AN ADVENTURE WITH A BULL,

Which was more strange than fiction. He was going through a pasture where there was a vicious bull when the animal saw him and went at him with great rage; threw him down and gored him in the side, and with his knees broke the sternum (breast bone) into its original pieces. When it got well the pieces stood upon their edges, and remain so until this day as an evidence of the dire conflict. His side was opened so that the heart and lungs could be seen; the lower edge of the left lobe of the lung was torn so that the wind would escape from it at every breath. He could see his own heart and lung. The wounded portion of the lung was replaced and the wound closed so that the air could not reach it, and the wound soon healed, after which he went on with his working and hunting as usual. When the bull had young Walters down goring him, with his knees on his breast, the young man contrived to get hold of the animal's nose with his teeth and kept his hold until the bull bawled and jumped up and threw him clear from him. Walters struck on his [illegible] and faced his antagonist for a moment, then turned and ran to the fence, [illegible] as loudly as he could for help until he got over the fence, when he fainted and fell to the ground. A neighbor who was at work in an adjoining field heard the man's cries and ran to his assistance and with a team took him home. His brother took his gun and shot the bull and that saved further trouble [illegible].

ANOTHER ADVETURE:

This same young man, as well as many other hunters, told of seeing a large buck in the woods, which had enormous horns—larger than they had ever seen on any other animal of the deer kind. They called the buck "Old Goldin." They would often tell on returning from a hunting expedition that they had seen Old Goldin. One evening when young Walters was out near the lake called Withington Lake, he saw a large pair of horns peering out of the grass, and Old Goldin soon rose to his feet. The young man took hasty aim and fired hitting the animal's horn close to the head. The deer fell and the young man ran to him took him by the horns and commenced to cut his throat. As soon as the knife enteerd the skin, the deer revived and tried to get away, but young Walters hung to the horns and made an effort to force his game into the lake which was very near. They entered the lake together, sometimes the deer would have him under water and then he would have the deer under.

HE KEPT HIS KNIFE IN HAND

and would stab or cut the deer where-ever and whenever he could. They went from shore to shore, and toward morning he succeeded in killing the deer. Finding himself stripped of his clothing, he started home and reached the house a little before daylight. He then dressed himself and taking a team went back after Old Goldin. It had cost him a terrible struggle, and that night in the lake will ever be remembered as one of the most perilous of his life, yet he had the satisfaction of killing the most wary, or cautious, deer in the county. Many hunters had looked for, and followed the coveted game, time and again, without success. But not many of them would have taken the chances that he took to bag the prize. Mr. Walters says these adventures were both very hazardous, but he would rather take his chances with the bull than the deer, if he was obliged to repeat either of the tragedies. The hero of the story is still living about three and one half miles north west of Freemont, and can testify to the truthfulness of the foregoing statements, as well as many other interesting facts and adventures connected with pioneer life in Steuben county.

Now Being Published.

The supplementary series of Ancient Classics for English readers, edited by the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M. A., 16mo fine cloth, $1 each.

The volumes of the new series now ready are: I, LIVY, by the editor. II, OVID, by the Rev. A. Church, M. A. III, CATULLUS, TIBULLUS and PROPERTIUS, by the Rev. James Davies, M. A. IV, DEMOSTHENES, by the Rev. J. W. Broadribb. V, ARISTOTLE by Sir Alexander Grant, Bart., LL. D.

The volumes yet to appear will consist of Lucretius, Anacreon, Thucydides and Pindar. The series will not exceed ten volumes.

We welcome the appearance of a supplementary series of 'Ancient Classics for English readers,' which was certainly very much required, if the publication was to answer the purpose for which it was originally designed. . . . Mr. Collin's 'Livy' is almost, if not quite, equal to the best of the preceding series. . . . Mr. Church's Essay is a very complete and scholarly performance.—London Times.

We have spoken in praise of this series so often, we need add nothing now. It is a great thing to have the marvelous treasure-house of classic literature opened to English readers.—Chicago Advance.

It ought to find a great deman, and should be in every school and college library as well as the private libraries of gentlemen of culture.—Boston Traveler.

CONDENSATIONS OF THE WORKS AND LIVES OF THE GREAT MODERN WRITERS.

Now publishing foreign classics for English readers, edited by Mrs. Oliphant 16mo. extra cloth. $1 per volume.

The purpose of this series is to present in a convenient and attractive form a synopsis of the lives and works of the great writers of Europe—who they were and what they wrote.

Now ready: PASCAL, by the Rev. Principal Tulloch.

He has performed his task with care, taste, and skill. He has really mastered his subject, and treats it independently from his own point of view. The translations are at once strictly accurate and singularly graceful.—London Athenæum.

VOLTAIRE,

By Col. E. B. Hamley, C. B.

The whole work has been done not only in a scholarly, but a very [illegible] manner.—Boston Evening Traveler.

DANTE.

By Mrs. Oliphant.

Mrs. Oliphant has done more than well—she has done nobly, both in prose and verse. Her sketch or summary of Dante's work is clear, succinct, and scholarly, and her translation of his poetic text is excellent.—New York Express.

Other volume will follow at intervals of two months.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price by J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health. but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

ONLY ONE DAY.

BY M. C. P. [illegible].

"Man's work's from sun to sun
But woman's work is never done."
—Old Proverb.

There was a man who lived in the woods,
And this you may plainly see;
For he said he could do more work in a day
Than his wife could do in three.

"So be it," the good wife said,
"But this you must allow,
That you will [illegible] at home to-day,
And I'll go follow the plow.

You must milk the pretty brown cow,
For fear she should go dry;
And you must feed the little fat pig
That lives in yonder sty.

You must watch the speckled hen,
Or she may lay astray;
And you must wind the bobbin of thread
That I spun yesterday."

Then the woman took the staff in hand,
And went to follow the plow;
Her husband took the shining pail,
And went to milk the cow.

Tiny she hinched, and Tiny she flinched,
And Tiny she cocked up her nose,
Then gave the old man such a kick in the face
That the blood ran down to his toes!

"Soh, Tiny! Ho, Tiny!
My pretty brown cow, stand still.
If ever I try to milk you again
'Twill be against my will!"

He went to feed the little fat pig
That lived in "yonder sty,"
And struck his head upon a beam,
Which caused his brain to fly.

He could not watch the speckled hen,
And so she laid astray;
He forgot to wind the bobbin of thread
His wife spun yesterday.

"The dinner to get, the table to set,
The beds to make up smooth,
The house to sweep, the bread to knead,
"Too much for him, in truth!"

Dried apples to string, a patch to set on,
These she said nothing about.
"Enough for a week," in despair thought John,
And he was no lazy lout.

"The windows to wash, the stove to make bright,
The beans to put baking for Sunday,
And all to be done before it comes night—
Too much for only one day!"

So Jonathan saw, by the light of the moon,
And the green leaves on the tree,
That his wife could do more work in a day
Than he could do in three!

WILLIAM M. TWEED.

Extraordinary Career of the Great Ring Thief.

[From the New York Sun.]

William M. Tweed was 55 years old on the 3d of April. He was born in 1823, at 9 Cherry street. His father was a chairmaker, a partner with Hezekiah W. Bonnel. He was in good circumstances, and gave his children a fair education. Young Tweed was sent to school to Gould Brown, the well-known author of "Brown's Grammar." Mr. Brown kept his school in Pearl street, near Franklin square. Tweed's old school-mates give him a good reputation. He was an apt scholar, and had a most retentive memory. He was not quarrelsome, but had an indomitable spirit, and would fight before suffering imposition. One of his boyish companions says that he was witty, and as "full of the devil as an egg is of meat." At times he is said to have been stubborn and mulish, but was always generous and ready to take the part of the smaller boys when suffering from the arrogance of their larger playmates. When about 12 years old William was sent to a boarding school kept by the Rev. Mr. Halsey in Elizabethtown, N. J. Here he finished his education. He studied nothing but the English branches. The Blue Book says that he is a graduate of the New York Law School, but his relatives pronounce his incorrect.

On his return from boarding school, young Tweed entered his father's shop and became a chairmaker. He is said to have been a good workman. Afterward he ran the business on his own account. His evenings were spent either in the theaters or in engine houses. Like most New York boys of that day, he fancied the life of a fireman. He became a runner with Twelve Engine, in the Fourth ward, before he was of age. In 1847 he joined that company. After two years' hard service the organization was disbanded, and afterward reorganized in the Twelfth ward. Meantime Tweed was married and moved into the Seventh ward. He joined Engine Company No. 6 on Jan. 1, 1849. Within six months he was elected foreman. Big Six, as she was called, became the most famous engine company in the city. She dashed through the streets, aiming to be the first at all fires. Tweed led the ropes with a silver-mounted trumpet in his hand, a white fire-coat over his arm, and one of the old-fashioned stiff hats on his head. He was well known to all bunkers and volunteer firemen. His personal popularity was so great, and the friends of Big Six so numerous, that the company became a powerful lever in municipal politics. The Americus Club was the offspring of its popularity, and its influence was felt in political matters years after its disbandment.

With the foremanship of Big Six, Tweed began his political career. In 1850 he ran for Assistant Alderman of the Seventh ward, but was defeated by the Whig candidate, Mr. John B. Webb. The following year he again contested the district with Mr. Webb, and was elected by a large majority. His business tact and vigor were recognized in the board, and the leaders of the party predicted his rise to power.

Congressmen were elected in the fall of 1852. There was a bitter contest for the Democratic nomination in the Fifth district. This comprised the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of this city and Williamsburgh. Mr. Tweed was Chairman of the Convention. The two wards presented one candidate and Williamsburgh another. Several ballots were taken, the vote standing 44 to 44. As a last resort, the Williamsburgh delegates dropped their man and nominated Mr. Tweed. This shrewd politician cast his vote for himself, saying: "Tweedy never goes back on Tweedy—Tweedy goes for Tweed!" Old Joe Hoxie was the Whig candidate. He went through the district, working like a beaver, telling funny stories and filling the air with eloquence. Tweed confined himself to the quiet work that proved so effective in subsequent campaigns, and beat Hoxie by 1,000 plurality. He served two years in Congress. In this time the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed. Mr. Tweed doubted the expediency of the measure. He predicted that its passage would ruin the Democratic party; but he obeyed caucus behests and stood by Pierce's administration to the last. In 1854 the Know-Nothings swept Tweed's Congressional district, and elected Thomas R. Whitney by 556 plurality.

The following year Mr. Tweed ran for Alderman on the Democratic ticket. He had fought the native American element the previous year and excited their bitter enmity. They ran their strongest man against him, and won, after a hot contest. Tweed became the recognized champion of the foreign element. He owed much of his success in his subsequent political career to that fight. Defeated in 1855, he was elected School Commissioner in the Seventh ward in 1856. In 1857 he ran for Supervisor, and, though opposed by the Know-Nothing and Republican parties, was successful. Before this he had been made a Sachem of Tammany Hall. His political ability was generally recognized, and his advice sought by such politicians as Isaac V. Fowler, Lorenzo Shepherd and Fernando Wood. In the contest between Fowler and Wood, Tweed was a firm supporter of the former. Wood called him a "political fist," and Tweed never forgot nor forgave it. With all his power, however, he was unable to trip his wary enemy. Tweed became the ward leader, ousting the veteran Capt. Isaiah Rynders, then United States Marshal, who had controlled the ward for years. During all these years he had carried on his chairmaking business. Soon after his election as Supervisor he sold out and devoted all his time to politics. He served as Supervisor until the board was abolished in 1870.

While a member of this board, measures were passed that laid the foundation of the vast debt under the weight of which the city is now staggering. Mr. Tweed was an active member of what was known as the old Supervisors' ring. He and his partners kept a political toll-gate, and collected heavy tolls on every bill that passed the board. All the members of the board, with possibly one exception, became rich during their term of office. His success as a manipulator of his associates undoubtedly emboldened him and led him to plan and carry out the gigantic schemes that afterward astounded the community.

In 1861, Tweed was the Tammany nominee for Sheriff. Mozart Hall placed James Lynch in the field. Tweed's anti-Know-Nothing record proved of no avail, for Lynch was a popular Irishman, who had twice been unfairly beaten while running for office, and his canvass was conducted by a wily and shrewd politician.

In 1861 Tweed was elected Chairman of the Tammany General Committee. He held this position until his downfall. The key to his future power was the Grand Sachemship of the Tammany Society, and the lock the General Committee.

In 1863 Street Commissioner Charles G. Cornell appointed Tweed a Deputy Commissioner. He was reappointed by Commissioner McLean, and held the office until the department was abolished. In 1867 he was elected State Senator. About this time he succeeded John T. Hoffman as Grand Sachem of Tammany Hall. All these offices seemed to have been seized by Tweed with a distinct object in view. As Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society and Chairman of the Tammany General Committee, he had complete control of the political wires in the city, and could dictate nominations at his will. Virtually Street Commissioner, he could employ thousands of laborers who might be used in upsetting ward primaries where lesser chieftains showed a spirit of antagonism. Laborers were given work at the request of the Aldermen. This and his position in the Legislature gave him control of that board.

At Albany he was a political autocrat. The Legislature, Democratic or Republican, carried out his schemes. If not paid directly, they were paid by appropriations in the Supply bill. Legislation on municipal matters was shaped to cover Tweed's plans and to carry out his ends. The County Court House was a mine. Millions were drawn from it and used in forwarding similar jobs. Every Democratic politician of any note held office. There were street inspectors, pump inspectors, water inspectors, inspectors of meters, of weights and measures, of street incumbrances, all drawing salaries and all useless.

With this vast power, Tweed became very rich. He invested in real estate and iron mines; was interested in every street opening and widening; had a hand in all contracts, and was a Director in railroad and gas companies, banks and insurance companies, and similar organizations, almost without number. Comparatively a poor man in 1864, within five years he was reputed to be worth $12,000,000. He cemented his power by social organizations like the Americus and Blossom Clubs. His ward leaders followed suit, and Tweed associations and similar societies were organized in every City Assembly district. Judges were controlled at the dictation of Mr. Tweed. The dangerous classes were protected if they would secure the least political influence.

The murder of Rogers, on Twelfth street, on New Year's day, and the scenes at the trial of John Real startled the public. Judge Barnard, who sentenced Real at midnight, came very near being mobbed upon the bench, and narrowly escaped assassination. Tweed saw his mistake, and for a time refused to protect bullies and ruffians. He was at the height of his power, but this course in a measure alienated from him a portion of his followers. They were ripe to join a revolt.

The revolution came. Harry Genet, John Fox, John Morrissey, Jas. O'Brien, Michael Norton, Thomas J. Creamer, and others headed it. Some were animated by hopes of plunder; others joined because defeated in their political aspirations; a third class were aflame with personal feeling against Sweeny. The revolting elements were consolidated, and the fight of the Young Democracy followed. The leaders had been used in building up the power of Tweed. He had doled out to them supplies from the public crib. They believed themselves strong enough to oust him. They made a combination with leaders in the Manhattan Club and succeeded in capturing the Board of Aldermen and a majority of the city Assemblymen and Senators. They then went to the Legislature with what is known as the Huckleberry charter. Its object was to free the city from the State commissions saddled upon it by the Republican party, and to secure a relegation of their powers to the Board of Aldermen. With this board in their hands they could help themselves. Sweeny, terrified at the magnitude of the revolt, fled from Albany. Tweed was paralyzed. He felt the trembling of the ground under his feet, and did not really know where he stood. At one time he seems to have been half inclined to throw Sweeny overboard and himself join the revolt. He went so far as to take the oath of allegiance to the conspirators, but never attended any of their meetings. The Huckleberry charter was defeated through the cupidity of the country members. The Young Democracy had boasted that they would put it through if it took $200,000 to do it. As the money was not forthcoming the country members revenged themselves by voting down the measure.

This inspirited Tweed. Sweeny reappeared, and the old Boss assumed the offensive. A million dollars was taken to Albany. It was used in passing what was known as the Tweed charter. That instrument virtually placed the municipal power in the hands of the Board of Audit, consisting of Tweed, Connolly, and Hall. No money could be drawn from the city without the sanction of this board. The power of the Board of Aldermen was fairly usurped by this commission. The Tweed charter was passed by the aid of the Republicans; $100,000 was paid for a single vote.

Though the revolutionists had captured the new Tammany General Committee they had overlooked the power of the Tammany Society. The committee claimed the right to meet in Tammany Hall, and marched in solemn procession. They thought they owned the building. By order of the Sachems of the Tammany Society, however, the hall was closed against them. They were refused entrance by the police, and met in Irving Hall. Their meeting was a farce. Each was suspicious of the other, and probably one-third of them had already taken the back track and were in sympathy with Tweed. Solitary chieftains continued the warfare, but the great mass of their followers fell into line and again tramped to the music of Tammany.

Tweed was now master of the city. He could throttle his enemies through the Board of Audit. His first measure was to reimburse himself for his expenses in fighting the Young Democracy. Within two months, with the aid of Garvey, Woodward, and Ingersoll, over $6,000,000 of city money was drawn from the Broadway Bank and divided. Woodward drew the money and paid Tweed's and Ingersoll's shares with checks on the same bank. His success seems to have made Tweed reckless. The Tweed charter had made him Commissioner of Public Works and ex-officio member of the Board of Audit. To punish O'Brien for his revolt the board refused to pay his bills as Sheriff against the city. O'Brien took his revenge. He succeeded in getting a man appointed clerk in the Comptroller's office. Figures were taken from the books that conclusively showed the operations of the ring. These figures were given to the newspapers. Some of them had been printed in the Sun years before, but the source of information had been discovered by the ring, and dammed by a nomination to Congress. The New York Times boldly called Tweed, Connolly and Hall thieves, and challenged them to bring libel suits. The figures were so convincing that the people rose en masse. A great meeting was held and seventy prominent citizens appointed to investigate. The Board of Audit became alarmed. Dissensions sprang up. The Comptroller's office was broken open and many vouchers destroyed. Connolly believed that he was to be made a scapegoat. He went to his old friend, ex-Mayor Havemeyer, made a partial confession, and gave up the key to the situation. Green was made Comptroller, Samuel J. Tilden and Charles O'Conor got upon the track of the robbers. The checks in the Broadway Bank were discovered. There was no room for doubt. The money had been shamelessly stolen from the city. Tweed was forced to resign his Commissionership. With the weight of these disclosures on his shoulders, he ran for State Senator, and was elected by 9,000 majority, his Irish opponent, O'Donovan Rossa, not having the strength of a corporal's guard. Before this, Tweed had appeared at the Democratic State Convention and showed a bold front, but it was his last appearance in such a body.

The first proceeding against Tweed was a civil suit brought by the Board of Supervisors for the money taken from the Broadway Bank. At the request of Corporation Counsel O'Gorman, George Ticknor Curtis and John K. Porter wrote an opinion declaring that the county had a right to bring such a suit. O'Gorman began proceedings for the recovery of the money. Within a few days another civil suit was brought in the name of The People of the State of New York against Tweed, Garvey, Ingersoll and Woodward. It was instigated by Charles O'Conor, Samuel J. Tilden and Wheeler H. Peckham. The complaint was signed by Attorney General Marshall B. Champlain, but the leading counsel were Peckham, Tilden and O'Conor. Judge Learned, of Albany, issued warrants and held Tweed to bail in $1,000,000. In this suit it was held that the Supervisors' suit was collusive. After an effort to have his bail reduced, Tweed produced bondsmen and was released from arrest. Tweed's counsel maintained that the people had no right to sue, and the Court of Appeals afterward so determined. Meantime, the Grand Jury had indicted Tweed for various offenses. The indictment contained 120 counts, and covered 1,050 printed pages. It substantially charged him with criminal neglect of official duty while a member of the Board of Audit. Tweed was tried on Jan. 30, 1873. The jury disagreed.

That summer he made a trip to California. The panic came on and he returned to New York, disregarding the advice of friends in San Francisco, who assured him that he would never again be allowed to leave the city. He was tried a second time on a criminal indictment on Nov. 10, and was found guilty on three-fourths of the counts. Upon the first trial Judge Noah Davis had expressly declared that, in the event of a conviction, the maximum punishment could only be one year's imprisonment and a fine of $250. He intimated no change of opinion until after the verdict of guilty on the second trial, when he sentenced the prisoner to twelve years' imprisonment and a fine of $12,000.

At the expiration of one year's imprisonment a writ of habeas corpus was sued out in Tweed's behalf. After repeated adverse decisions in the inferior courts, the Court of Appeals, on June 15, 1875, ordered his discharge. The case was argued on behalf of Mr. Tweed by David Dudley Field, William O. Bartlett and George H. Comstock. B. K. Phelps and Wheeler H. Peckham were opposed. When the mandate of the court reached this city, Judge Noah Davis was himself obliged to sign the order releasing Tweed from the eleven years' illegal imprisonment which he had imposed. Twenty-six other indictments were hanging over Mr. Tweed's head, but no attempt to try them has been made.

While the civil case was before the Court of Appeals, Mr. Tilden and others, foreseeing the decision, got an act through the Legislature expressly authorizing the people of the State to maintain a civil suit such as they could not maintain without an express statute. New civil suits were then brought. Mr. Tweed was arrested in the Warden's office as soon as discharged, and held in $3,000,000 bail by the same Judge, Noah Davis. He could not procure the bail, and lay in prison.

He remained there until Dec. 4, 1875. While visiting his residence, in custody of two keepers, he made his escape. For some days he was hidden in New Jersey, not far from the Weehawken ferry. He was afterward conveyed to a farmhouse beyond the Palisades. His whiskers were shaved off, his hair clipped, and he put on a wig and gold spectacles. He assumed the name of John Secor. He afterward spent some time in a fisherman's hut within sight of the Narrows and visited Brooklyn. He left in a schooner, and landed on the coast of Florida. From there he reached Cuba in a fishing smack, and was landed on a rock near Santiago de Cuba by the skipper. He and a companion, Hunt, were at once arrested. He was recognized, but got on board the Spanish bark Carmen and took passage for Vigo, Spain. Hamilton Fish, then Secretary of State, requested the Spanish authorities to arrest him on his arrival. They did so, and, though there was no extradition treaty between the two Governments, and the suit against Tweed was a civil and not a criminal one, he was turned over to the commander of the United States man-of-war Franklin, and delivered to the Sheriff of this county on Nov. 23, 1876.

Great Colored Revival.

A remarkable religious revival is under way in Richmond, Va., among the negroes. The preachers have not dodged the question of hell, but have vied with one another in picturing the torments of the damned. The Rev. John Jasper's assault upon the theory that the world moves was only one of the incidents of this awakening. A correspondent says of one of Brother Jasper's sermons: "Nothing could exceed the vividness with which he pictured the torments of eternal punishment, and he scathingly denounced Beecher and those other preachers who attempt to show that there is no hell. Some of his congregation groveled upon the floor in very agony, when he told that 'same as a head of cabbage in a bilin' pot will de sinner be for-everlastin' in hell. The pot will keep on bilin' and de cabbage will burn, but never burn up. You all will be like dat cabbage if you don't repent.'" All the employes in a tobacco factory gave up work one day and went through the streets shouting, singing, and urging everybody whom they met to seek salvation. Many of the converts say that they have visions of heaven. Here is another incident: "To-night, at supper in one of the hotels, a waiter suddenly became converted as he was entering the dining-room with a dish of stewed oysters, and throwing the dish and contents to the floor, he raised his hands and began to tell how he was converted on the spot, and to proclaim the visions of glory that had been revealed to him and were passing before him."

A Rosy Future.

They were in the bell-tower, yesterday, and she leaned her yellow-haired head on his agricultural shoulder and listened to the mighty "tick! tack! tick!" of the big clock.

"We don't want such a big clock as that, do we, darling?" she whispered.

"No, my little daisy," he answered, as he hugged her a little closer; "I kin buy a clock for $2 which 'll run three days to this clock's two. I've got her picked out already!"

"We'll be very, very happy," she sighed.

"You bet we will! I've figured it right down fine, and I believe we can live on twelve eggs, one pound of sugar, ten pounds of flour and one pound of butter."

"And you'll have a bank account?" she pleaded.

"I will, even if I have to buy a second-hand one."

"And will we keep a coachman?"

"Yes."

"And have a piano?"

"Yes, darling."

"And I can have some square pillows with shams on them?"

"Yes, my tulip—yes; we'll sham every durned thing from cellar to garret, have the front door painted blue, and—but less go 'n look at some second-hand cook-stoves!"

Holding the Breath Under Water.

It is probable that the entrance of water into the lungs has a great deal to do with the painlessness of drowning. It is certain that unconsciousness comes on more quickly when the person is deprived of air because the lungs are filled with water, than when the air-passages are closed, while the lungs remain intact. Most persons can hold their breath for a minute, very many for a minute and a half, some for two minutes. In one of the variety theaters of New York appeared recently "The Brilliant Pearl of the Enchanted Grotto, christened Undine, who performs, while under water, incased in a mammoth crystal illuminated glass tank, feats of astonishing suppleness and almost unbelievable endurance." This performer can probably remain under water, holding her breath voluntarily, two minutes and perhaps more. I have myself, watch in hand, seen Johnson, the celebrated ocean-swimmer, remain under water, in a tank before an audience, for the astonishing space of three minutes and twenty seconds, and, before he rose, the involuntary contractions of his respiratory muscles were uncomfortable to witness. In such cases, although extreme distress may be felt, there is no approach to unconsciousness. But if a person's head is under water, and he does not hold his breath, unconsciousness will usually come on in one or two minutes at the furthest.—Dr. R. S. Tracy, in Popular Science Monthly for May.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

A Greatly-Disappointed Man.

[From Harper's Magazine for May.]

Mr. Webster is reported to have said to a friend that, although he knew that he had a public reputation to leave to posterity, yet if he were to live his life over again, he would, upon no consideration whatever, permit himself to enter public life. The public, he said, are ungrateful, and the man who serves them most faithfully receives no adequate reward. Do your duty, he added, as a private citizen, but let politics alone. It is probable that he said this substantially as it is reported, for there was never a more bitterly-disappointed public man. Toward the end of his life there was almost a gloomy melancholy in his aspect. At the completion of the Erie railroad, in 1851, as Secretary of State he accompanied President Fillmore and a very distinguished party of public men on an excursion along the road from New York to Dunkirk, and, upon reaching Dunkirk, he spoke from a platform in the street. During the speech the "Easy Chair," who was a spectator, observed that the sun was setting just behind Mr. Webster, as he stood erect, his gray hair lifted by the breeze, his great head and somber, mournful face drawn against the illuminated west. It was a significant and pathetic spectacle. A little later the national convention of his party passed him by and nominated another candidate for the Presidency. Still a little later he died, as was generally felt, a broken-hearted man—not only, it was believed, because he had failed to receive the "adequate reward," but because of some things he had been willing to do to obtain it. On the evening of the 6th of March, 1850, the orator of Plymouth Rock in 1821 said to a friend and member of Congress who told the "Easy Chair," "To-morrow I am going to annihilate you —— abolitionists."

The remarks that we have quoted are familiar, and are but a modern form of Wolsey's piteous words on Cromwell in Shakespeare's "Henry VIII." They are true also in this sense, that the man who serves the public for the hope of adequate official reward from the public will probably be disappointed. But this truth is as old as history, and no man who is able to fill a great public place adequately can be ignorant of it. The blindness of personal ambition is well illustrated by the reported words of Mr. Webster. He says, in effect, that he has served the public faithfully, and had been not only inadequately rewarded, but had been most severely censured for his least selfish actions. But what is adequate reward of great public service? For forty years Mr. Webster was almost continuously in public life, as Representative in Congress, Senator and Secretary of State. His commanding abilities, at once recognized, placed him in general estimation at the head of the bar, and secured him an unequaled influence in politics. By common consent he was the chief of living American orators, and his mere presence as speaker gave greatness to the greatest occasions. Upon points of constitutional law he was the highest authority, so that his word alone could challenge a long-settled interpretation, not only without absurdity, but with a force that was so respected as to raise a doubt. As a diplomatist he was unrivalled among his fellow-statesmen. And, above all, there was the greatness of his reputation—a historic fame that began while he was yet living—which made him the most conspicuous of American citizens, and which might well have satisfied the most inordinate ambition of applause and personal consideration. No possible official position could have added to his renown, nor to his opportunity of great service. If his fame and his unquestionable power, the immense admiration which was universally conceded to him, and his vast authority in public affairs were not an adequate reward, it is not easy to see what would have been.

Daniel Webster.

He was a large, tall man, with a head whose beetling brow and deep-set, burning eyes and unusually swarthy skin marked him as no common man. In his rough hunting-suit, with high boots incasing his pantaloons, and his face often marked with powder stains, from the habit he had, common to many sportsmen raised on the old-fashioned, single barreled, flint-lock fowling-piece, of blowing into the muzzle of his gun after its discharge, he was an uncanny person to meet on a wild, lonely marsh near sunset. One day, when he had been shooting at the birds that flew by his covert, a flock of birds flew by at a lower level; discharging his gun, he heard the next moment an outcry from the beach below him. He sprung up, and, rushing over the bank, discovered a man rubbing his shoulder. "My dear sir, did I hit you!" he exclaimed. The man gave a single glance at the sportsman, and replied, excitedly, "Yes, you did hit me; and from your looks I should think that I am not the first man you have shot, either."

Printing-Press Works Closed.

Gordon's printing-press works at Rahway, N. J., the largest of their kind in the country, have been closed. The stoppage grows out of the difficulty in the settlement of the will of the late George P. Gordon and from the general business depression. The Rahway shop alone had a capacity of 500 presses per annum, and, while over 750 presses were sold in 1871, only 100 were sold during the first three months of the present year, and there is at present a finished stock of over 300 presses on hand.—New York Graphic.

MAY-FLOWER.

BY HENRIETTA HARDY.

Was it not you, beloved, who sang to me at midnight?
I heard a voice in dream-land at midnight sweet and low,
As if the spring's warm mouth was bent close over [illegible],
And her glad song was breathing o'er wastes of trackless snow.
Oh! sweet was its soft pleading, oh! loving was its kindness!—
The snow shone ice incrusted, its gleaming I could see;
Cold was the winter's splendor, fine was its flashing moonlight,
But finer, braver, dearer, the spring song breathed to me.

I follow thee, I follow,
O'er every hill and hollow,
I look for thee, I follow,
Thou hidden, sacred sweet;
I follow, and shall find thee!
Nor ice nor snow can blind me!
Beneath them I shall find thee
Blossoming in thy retreat!

II.

Ah! May-flower mine, my maiden,
I'll find thee, blossom-laden,
Coy, rose-flushed, snow-hid maiden,
All purely waiting me!
I follow thee, I follow
Thy steps through every hollow,
Beneath the snow I follow,
But surely finding thee!

Ah! was't not you, beloved, sang to me
This song at midnight? And this breath—ah! see!—
Has melted snow, my bloom unveiled to thee!

The Largest Gland.

"Which is the largest gland?" asked a Chicago medical professor of the newest arrival in his class, the other day. The student buried himself in deep and attentive thought for a moment, and then, brightening up suddenly, exclaimed, "The largest gland, sir, is—England!" Then the professor kindly led the youth aside, and pathetically advised him to think no more of medicine, but to join a minstrel show or enter an army.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

A VENETIAN has succeeded in making a violin, the box of which is porcelain, and the strings of metallic wire. Upon it are said to be produced tones of rare purity, richness, harmony and power.

IT is predicted in England that the close of the age of iron draws on apace, and that steel is destined eventually to take its place. On this account energies are being directed toward devising a way to produce steel from the puddling furnace by a direct process.

PROF. JAGER, in a late number of the Kosmos, endeavors to maintain that the organs of hearing are but modifications of the general organs of touch, by tracing the mechanism of hearing from the original simple form of an animal, where spiracles, diffused over the whole protoplasmic body, collect and conduct sound-waves.

OAK wood which has remained a long time in water finally acquires the appearance and hardness of ebony. The application of the acids hastens a result that the ordinary agencies of the atmosphere would take centuries to produce.

NO PHYSIOLOGICAL antidote has yet been found for the poison of the cobra and other venomous reptiles of India, which caused the death of 17,000 persons and over 3,000 cattle in the year 1875. EXPERIMENTS in potato culture—conducted of late in Germany but described in a French agricultural paper—are said to have demonstrated that the vigor of a potato plant is always in direct proportion to the weight of the tubers used for seed, and that not only do different tubers vary in productiveness but also different "eyes" in the same potato. The "eyes" in the top of the potato produce much finer offsprings than those lower down or at the bottom, and in planting agriculturists are, therefore, advised to cut them horizontally, instead of vertically, and use the lower parts for cattle feed. The best plan, however, is to set them whole, cutting out all eyes except those at the top. From careful statistics of the experiments conducted by Prof. Gantz, it appears that from tubers divided vertically only five tons per acre were produced; from whole potatoes seven and a half tons, and from those cut horizontally nine and three-quarters tons. In the last point, however, other scientific observers do not agree with the results of Herr Gantz's experiments, as they insist that, other things being equal, whole potatoes will always produce more than halves, however cut.

Nihilist Riots in Russia.

A recent cable dispatch says: There have been Nihilist riots in the streets of Moscow, the nature and extent of which it is impossible to determine from official reports. The alleged occasion was the arrival of fifteen students from the University of Kieff going into exile, whom the crowd surrounded, crying: "These men suffer for the truth." An official account says: "Acts of violence ensued. The students were conveyed to prison, pending their dispatch to Siberia, and tranquillity was restored." Private information, however, attributes the disturbances to the excitement growing out of the trial of the woman Vera Sassulitch for her attempted assassination of Trepow, the Chief of Police at St. Petersburg. She admitted the shooting of M. Trepow, and said she fired without caring whether she killed, wounded or missed him, but with a determination to bring his conduct before the public. She herself had spent the best years of her life in a dungeon because she was a friend of a relative of a conspirator. There she learned to pity those who suffered in a similar manner. When she read in the newspapers that M. Trepow had caused political prisoners to be flogged, she determined to do vengeance on him. This was her whole defense.

The speech of defendant's counsel and verdict of acquittal despite the Judge's charge evoked such expressions of applause from the press and the people that it is believed that the Government will modify the present system of trials for political offenses.

The outbreaks at St. Petersburg, Moscow and Kieff, which followed the news of the woman's trial, are said to have been so serious as to give rise to reports in Berlin that a revolution had broken out.

The Berlin Post, commenting on this news, says: "Russia is threatened with serious dangers. The lesson the trial of Vera Sassulitch affords will be fatal if disregarded."

A Texas Desperado.

In Longley, the desperado, who has murdered thirty-two men, and is now waiting to be hanged in Lee county, Texas, one may study in real life one of those characters so often depicted in cheap and sanguinary romances. Longley is described by the Globe-Democrat as "scarcely yet in his 24th year, with dark hair, worn rather long and slightly parted at the side; coal-black whiskers and beard that shade a fine olive complexion; a nose rather after the Greek model; teeth white and beautiful as a woman's; eyes black as midnight, that seems literally alive with expression, which their possessor seems little inclined to curb or suppress." He is confined in a dungeon "as dark and dismal as any pictured in the pages of romance. A massive iron door from the rear opens into a corridor dimly lighted by rusty iron gratings. At the further end is the cell of the desperado, the strong iron door of which is secured by massive locks, and whose walls are also massive." This handsome highwayman and manslayer, a Dick Turpin and Claud Duval combined, will undoubtedly swing from the gallows. The Court of Appeals has confirmed his sentence, and there is no further hope for him.

"Take Off Your Coat, Gibbs."

Judge—Where did you find this colored man, officer?

Officer—I found him last night hanging around Devlin & Co.'s clothing-store. Mr. Devlin has had a good deal of clothing stolen lately and I brought this man on suspicion.

Judge—What is your name, prisoner?

Prisoner—Napoleon Bonaparte Gibbs.

Judge—What is your occupation?

Gibbs—I isn't well, I isn't, sah. De doctor say, Napoleon, you wear plenty clothes. De 'fluency, sah. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—Ah! What have we here! A swallow-tail? Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—Dis yere won't do, Judge. I's got a stuffness in de borax. I's very bad. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—Ah! A double-breasted frock! Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—Dar's gwine to be a funeral here, dar is, sah; I feels de stuffness rising in de borax. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—What's this? A shooting-jacket, by the soul of Nimrod! Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Judge—A linen duster. I think I've got you down to hard pan, Gibbs. I shall commit you without bail. Take him down gently, officer, for he is a lily—a lily of the valley. He toils not, neither does he spin; yet Solomon, in all his glory, was not clothed like him. —New York Graphic.

Terrible Fight with a Panther.

A hunter named Jacob Farquarson, while passing through the forest between White Fish lake and Black Trout lake, near the head waters of the Madawaska river, encountered a puma, or American panther. He came across the carcass of a deer, which he stopped to examine, and found it to be the remains of a large upland cariboo. While looking at it, he heard a noise at some distance off, among the tree-tops. Shortly after the sounds were repeated, and, on looking up, he saw a large animal leaping from tree to tree toward the spot where he stood. He was armed with a Ballard rifle, and, as soon as the beast came near enough, he fired at it, when, to his surprise and alarm, the brute sprung from the tree directly at him. In the meantime the hunter had rapidly reloaded, and, having jumped aside and behind a large pine before the infuriated animal could recover for a second spring, he gave it another bullet. Both shots had taken effect, as was afterward discovered, but neither in a vital part. After the second shot the puma turned and darted with a roar at the hunter, who drew a long, keen-edged hunting-knife, and, with his back against a tree, awaited his enemy. The enraged animal sprung at him and fastened its long curved claws into his shoulder, when he drove the knife repeatedly to the hilt into its breast. Both came to the ground together, but the struggle did not last long, for the huge animal, weakened by the loss of blood from the bullet and knife of Farquarson, soon turned over dead. The animal, which is quite rare in Canada now, was one of the largest size, measuring nine feet from the nose to the extremity of the tail.—Ottawa (Canada) Free Press.

Fight With an Eagle.

An enormous eagle, measuring seven feet from tip to tip of the wings, was lately captured near Atlanta, Ga. An old negro was carrying a baby in his arms, and his wife was walking close behind him, when the bird suddenly descended and made a swoop for the child. The father warded off the attack by a well-directed blow, but the eagle returned to the attack with renewed vigor. The negro kicked and fought with all his might while clinging desperately to the child, and his face was scratched by the claws of the bird. His wife screamed for help, and a farmer who was chopping wood close by ran forward and with a stroke of his ax laid the bird senseless on the ground. The eagle was stunned but not killed by the blow, and the farmer now has him under bonds. The designer of the disgraceful bird on the silver dollar would do well to make a journey to this Georgia Cracker's barn and find out for himself how an American eagle spreads its wings.—Exchange.

Death, Life, and Death Again.

A 12-year-old daughter of J. B. Doremus, of Willis street, Paterson, died on Tuesday of last week, as was supposed. The body was prepared and laid out in the coffin, and all the arrangements were completed for the funeral on Friday afternoon. The father sat alone in his house on Friday evening. The preparations were all ready, the doctor's certificate filed, and the coffin sat upon the benches in the adjoining room. The door silently opened, and in her shroud and grave clothes, the girl he had supposed to be dead tottered toward him, threw her arms around his neck, kissed him passionately, and then fell back unconscious in his arms. A physician was called with all haste, but this time she was dead.—New York Sun.

What the Robin Eats.

In 1858 Prof. Jenks devoted a season to determining the character of the robin. He found that in Massachusetts, in March, April, and May, its whole food was insectivorous; from the last of June till October its stomach contained both insects and berries, and after July its diet was mostly grasshoppers. Prof. Treadwell, of Cambridge, has demonstrated that each young robin eats to exceed its own weight each day.

SABBATH READING.

Sabbath Bells.

Hark! hark! methought that o'er mine ear
Some distant strains of music fell;
And now it comes, more soft, more near—
It is thy chime, sweet Sabbath bell?

Blessed sound! how oft, with willing feet,
Have I obeyed thy sacred spell;
And loved to join where pilgrims meet,
Obedient to the Sabbath bell.

Its distant echoes, faint and fleet,
Could music's softest tones excel;
Nor knew mine ear a strain so sweet
As thine, harmonious Sabbath bell.

Of holy hopes, of joys refined,
The pensive murmur seemed to tell;
And spoke of countless joys combined
In that sole thought, the Sabbath bell.

And now my spirit spurns the thrall
That binds me to my pillowy cell;
And fain would hasten to the call
That vibrates from the Sabbath bell.

The holy fane, the sacred rite,
The hallowed joys I loved so well;
Say, shall they bless again my sight,
At summons of the Sabbath bell?

Oh, no! that hope I fear is o'er;
I bid the dear deceit farewell,
And scarce may hope to hear once more
The music of the Sabbath bell.

Soon, soon its meek and mournful strains
May vibrate in my funeral knell;
Yet, while a thought of life remains,
'Twill ne'er forsake the Sabbath bell.

And if, beyond this mortal lot,
On former joys the soul may dwell,
My spirit still shall haunt the spot
That echoes to the Sabbath bell.

* * * * * * * *

Passed from imperfect worship here,
To fullness which no tongue can tell,
Thou dost not pine, ah, spirit dear,
For any earthly Sabbath bell!

Christ, the Bread of Life.

Bread is the staff of life. It is the plain, simple, cheap food, partaken of at almost every meal, full of nourishment, and yet never wearying to the taste. Such, to the soul, is the one simple, all-fruitful, all-sufficient truth of the love of God in Christ, by His infinite stooping to die the death of the cross to win our souls everlastingly to Himself, and to testify evermore His infinite and irreconcilable hatred of sin, simultaneously with His boundless willingness to forgive to the utmost the repentant sinner. This fundamental truth never wearies the believing soul. It is as bread to it. It brings God in Christ as the loveliest, grandest, and tenderest manifestation of Deity, more grand even than all His outward glories of the material universe in heaven and earth.

This love of God in Christ sustains the soul in life and in death, in childhood, manhood, and old age, in prosperity and adversity, always and everywhere; it is the bread, the staff of spiritual life. And, like outward bread, it must be sought for. Christ himself exhorted to "labor for the meat which endureth unto everlasting life. The Bread of God is He who cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world. I am that bread of life." As the outward bread must be labored for, though obtainable everywhere, so Christ, also everywhere accessible, must yet be sought by prayer, meditation, the study of the scriptures, and by the use of regular means of grace. For He is bread, life, happiness to the soul.—The Christian.

Six Short Rules for Young Christians.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray remember that God is present, and that He hears your prayers. Heb. xi., 6.

2. Never neglect daily private Bible reading; and, when you read, remember that God is speaking to you, and that you are to believe and act upon what He says. I believe all backsliding begins with the neglect of those two rules. John v., 36.

3. Never let a day pass without trying to do something for Jesus. Every night reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, what am I doing for Him? Matt. v., 13 16.

4. If ever you are in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room and kneel down and ask God's blessing upon it. Col. iii., 7. If you cannot do this, it is wrong. Rom. xiv., 23.

5. Never take your Christianity from Christians, or argue that, because such people do so and so, therefore you may. 2 Cor. x., 12. You are to ask yourself, How would Christ act in my place? and strive to follow Him. John x., 27.

6. Never believe what you feel, if it contradicts God's Word. Ask yourself, Can what I feel be true if God's Word is true? and if both cannot be true, believe God, and make your own heart the liar. Rom. iii., 4; John v., 10 11.—Central Christian Advocate.

Talent and Tact.

Talent is something; but tact is everything. Talent is sober, grave and respectable; tact is all that, and more too. It is not a sixth sense, but it is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell, and the lively touch; it is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties, the remover of all obstacles. It is useful in all places and at all times; it is useful in solitude, for it shows a man his way into the world; it is useful in society, for it shows him his way through the world. Talent is power, tact is skill; talent is weight, tact is momentum; talent knows what to do, tact knows how to do it; talent makes a man respectable, tact will make him respected; talent is wealth, tact is ready money. For all the practical purposes of life tact carries against talent ten to one.

Losing a Day.

Every day is a life, and our whole is but a day repeated; whence it is that old Jacob numbers his life by days, and Moses desires to be taught this point of holy arithmetic, to number not his years but his days. Those, therefore, that dare lose a day are dangerously prodigal; those that dare to misspend it, desperate. We can best teach others by ourselves; let me tell you how I would pass my days, whether common or sacred, that you—or whosoever others, overhearing me—may either applaud my thriftiness or correct my errors; to whom is the account of my hours more due, or more known? All days are His who gave time a beginning and continuance; yet some He hath made ours, not to command, but to use.

THE Tobacco Plant says: "The entire mass of tobacco which is annually consumed in smoking, snuffing, and chewing on the earth is 4,000,000,000 pounds—manifestly too high an estimate for from 1,200,000,000 to 1,500,000,000 of inhabitants. Let us take the half as the more probable, and let us suppose the tobacco leaves transformed into roll tobacco, a tobacco serpent is created which, with a diameter of two inches, and following the direction of the equator, would wind itself around the earth thirty times."

A REMINISCENCE.

The Celebrated Lincoln-Shields Duel.

The prominence given Gen. Shields in the late Congressional squabble over the Doorkeeper's place, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean, has brought to mind the fact that he was one of the principals in the celebrated Lincoln-Shields duel in 1842. Shields was then Auditor of this State, though quite a young man. In that year the Springfield Journal published a number of letters over the signature of "Aunt Becca," ridiculing Shields, and declaring that he was a dandy who went "floatin' about in the air, without heft or earthly substance, just like a lock of cat-fur where cats had been fightin'."

Shields was greatly enraged over these letters, and announced that, if the author was discovered, he would have to settle it with pistols. After this announcement another letter appeared, in which "Aunt Becca" apologized for her former communication, and offered to let the General squeeze her hand if he'd say no more about it. She closed her letter thus:

"If this should not answer, there is one thing more I would do rather than get a lickin'. I have all along expected to die a widow; but, as Mr. S. is rather good-looking than otherwise, I must say I don't care if we compromise the matter by—really, Mr. Printer, I can't help blushin'—but I—it must come out—I—but widowed modesty—well, if I must, I must—wouldn't he—maybe sorter, let the old grudge drap if I was to consent to be—be h-i-s w-i-f-e? I know he is a fightin' man, and would rather fight than eat; but isn't marryin' better than fightin', though it does sometimes run into it? And I don't think, upon the whole, I'd be sich a bad match, neither; I'm not over 80, and am just four feet three in my bare feet, and not much more round the girth; and for color, I wouldn't turn my back to nary a gal in the Lost Townships. But, after all, maybe I'm countin' my chickens before they're hatched, and dreamin' of matrimonial bliss when the only alternative reserved for me may be a lickin'. Jeff tells me the way these fire-eaters do is to give the challenged party choice of weapons, etc., which being the case, I'll tell you in confidence that I never fight with anything but broomsticks or hot water, or a shovelful of coals or some such thing, the former of which, being somewhat like a shillalah, may not be so very objectionable to him. I will give him choice, however, in one thing, and that is, whether, when we fight, I shall wear breeches or he petticoats, for I presume this change is sufficient to place us on an equality."

The author of the letters is said to have been Miss Todd, afterward Mrs. Lincoln, and then engaged to the future President. Whether Shields knew this or not the result was a challenge to Lincoln, which the latter accepted. There was a great deal of traveling about negotiating, etc., Lincoln stubbornly refusing to make any explanation or deny the authorship of the letters until the challenge was withdrawn. Finally, however, the matter was settled without any bloodshed, and the principals went on their life journey, one to the leadership of a nation and a martyr's death, the other to a Major General's commission, and a noble military record in two wars.

A Craven King of Beasts.

At 4 p. m. the bull was let into the arena. Jack Farley, assisting in placing the bull in the arena, was charged by the bull, severely wounded in the leg, and had to be hauled home in a carriage, having sustained a terrible flesh wound in the calf of the leg. An immense octagonal iron cage weighing 6,000 pounds, 40 by 120 feet in size, had been occupied by George, the lion, since the defeat of his mate, Jennie, the lioness, by old Tige, the wild Texas bull. The signal being given, the bull was hustled into the cage with the lion. Once eying his antagonist, old George seemed inclined to depart. The bull did not for some moments observe his enemy. Spying him at length, he straightened his huge body and almost instantly charged the lion, dashing him heavily against the bars of the cage, and apparently gored him, making the yellow hair fly in all directions, and partially uplifting the lion from the ground. The lion gave vent to roars of rage. He is blind of one eye, and paced to and fro in great trepidation, with the blind eye toward his powerful bullship. Critical observers were aware that this decided the contest in so far as that lion was concerned, but he was tantalized and gored and punched about until, in endeavoring to escape the tormentors from without the cage, he would approach the bull too nearly for what he deemed comfort, and would be instantly charged and dashed angrily against the sides of the cage or rolled over with the impetus of the movement, while the bull would, after each passage at arms, retire majestically and with almost human dignity to the center of the arena, evidently waiting an auspicious opportunity to renew his attacks. After four such charges, two of them accompanied by tossing, and in one of these raising the lion high in the air, running his horn in the lion's left flank and making an ugly wound, which did not, however, reach his vitals. At length, after a few moments of truce, during which the lion crouched down in front of the bull and begged in every manner except in words for peace, the bull was declared the victor, and the usual hurrahs were given.—San Antonio (Texas) Cor. Chicago Times.

Lecturing Ladies.

I wish young women could be taught that it does not add a cubit to the stature of a house to call it a "residence;" that a church or even a meeting house is as venerable as the "sacred edifice;" that it is no more genteel to say "retire" than to go to bed; that the garment so fondly, slowly covered with side plaitings, so coldly and quickly frayed out along the paving stones, is really a gown and not a "promenade costume;" that it need not bring a blush to the cheek of even Mr. Podsnap's young person to say leg instead of "limb," when leg is meant; that the supper at an evening party is not "the entertainment;" and that there are well-founded objections to the use of "nicely" as an adjective describing the state of one's health. "To clothe low creeping matter with fine language," said old Fuller, "is not fine fancy, but flat foolery." It rather loads than raises a wren to fasten the feathers of an ostrich to her wings.—Mrs. C. Runkle.

Why He Wouldn't Marry Her.

"Marry her! by George! I would if it wasn't for her confounded nose."

"Nose! Ha, ha! What's the matter with her nose? Is it too short, too long, or crooked—which? You're too fastidious, young man. A woman may be a charming wife and have any one of these deformities."

"It isn't any of them, old fellow. The fact is I like Kitty—like to look at her and talk with her—but any closer relationship I could not endure. Her nose is too o-d-o-r-o-u-s!"

Mallory, at Messinger Bros., 151 Michigan av., says in a letter to a friend: "To my great and agreeable surprise, one bottle of 'Dr. Herndon's Gypsy's Gift' has entirely cured me of rheumatism, from which I suffered six years, finding little relief from anything I could procure." Sold by all prominent Chicago druggists.

Don't Do It.

Do not buy yeast powder or baking powder of short weight. A manufacturer that defrauds by short weight will not hesitate to make adulterated goods. You can always rely on DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER—being full weight and strictly pure.

HAVE you Heart Disease? If so do not neglect it. Large trees from small seeds grow, and so the germ of disease once planted will in time assert its strength. Heart Disease is more difficult to subdue than most diseases, consequently, you hear it said, the physicians have done all they can; but have they tried Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR? This has done wonders when all other remedies have failed, and we are led to pronounce it a decided cure. To substantiate it, we have the testimonials of many who have almost been snatched from death. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

MOTHERS! Mothers!! Mothers!!! Don't fail to procure Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for all diseases incident to the period of teething in children. It relieves the child from pain, cures wind colic, regulates the bowels, and, by giving relief and health to the child, gives rest to the mother. It is an old and well-tried remedy.

WAR DECLARED.—Veterinary surgeons all over the country are fiercely denouncing the parties who put up extra large packages of worthless trash and sell it for Condition Powders. They say that Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders are the only kind now known that are worth carrying home.

JOHNSON'S Anodyne Liniment is richly worth ten dollars a bottle in certain cases. For instance, in cases of diphtheria, croup and asthma, when the sufferer is almost dead for want of breath, and something is required to act instantly. It costs only thirty-five cents.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age is Dr. Tobias' celebrated Venetian Liniment! 30 years before the public, and warranted to cure Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic and Spasms, taken internally; and Croup, Chronic Rheumatism, Sore Throats, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, and Pains in the Limbs, Back and Chest, externally. It has never failed. No family will ever be without it after once giving it a fair trial. Price, 40 cents. DR. TOBIAS' VENETIAN HORSE LINIMENT, in Pint Bottles, at One Dollar, is warranted superior to any other, or NO PAY, for the cure of Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. Sold by all Druggists. Depot—10 Park Place, New York.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Democrats to the Front.

Democratic caucus at old Jail building on Saturday evening, to nominate town officers for the ensuing year.

—Rev. Henry Ward Beecher will visit Salt Lake the coming summer. This will give the punsters another chance.

—Wouldn't it be a capital joke if Sam Tilden should yet be inducted into the office to which he was elected in 1876 by a majority of nearly a quarter of a million? It would be a glorious vindication of the majesty of the ballot.

—The Wabash shops at Fort Wayne are running ten hours a day for the first time in three years. The Pittsburg shops in that city are filling their order for Union Line cars at the rate of eight cars, complete, per day.

—Blessed are the widows and unmarried women. They are exempt from taxation to the extent of $500 if worth in real or personal property not over 21,000. The Gardians of unmarried women under 21 years of age, can claim the same exemption for such wards.

—There hasn't been a case of Kuklux-ing since the Democrats have been administering the law in South Carolina and Louisiana. There was no law administered before—the carpet baggers couldn't stop from stealing long enough to hold court.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton comes out in a card in the N. Y. Tribune, "owning up the corn," again about her little "nest hiding" with H. W. Beecher; and Henry comes out in the very next issue and confronts her confession with an explicit and absolute denial. It is a pity there can be no end to this dirty business, whether they did or didn't.

—Gold, silver and greenbacks at par, sound once more like olden times. One currency for all, the bondholder and the poor man all treated alike, is one of the many blessings which the Democratic party will bestow upon the country when it regains posession of the government. No thanks, however, to the Shylocks.

—There is a palpable difference in the condition of things now, and when the Republicans had entire controle. True, the Democracy have only control of the House, but out of that came the Silver Bill, which the President vetoed, yet it has surprised everybody in the effect it has already produced in the financial world. Even Sherman applauds it. Out of the House also came the great reduction of expenses, a grand result. Thieves have been kicked out of high places, corruption has been exposed, and extravagance checked all through the House. Surely if the small power extended by the House, can do all this, what can be done when the Democracy get entire control. Let them have a chance.

Concord Corners.

—Our community was again called upon to follow to the grave one of our first settlers, Mrs. Lyda Johnson, last week.

—I see several articles in the Republican in referance to an old settlers' meeting some time the coming summer. Mr. Editor, can't you stir up this subject and let us have an old settlers' meeting before they are all sleeping with their fathers. C.

Spencerville Items.

—Donation at Rev. Eirick's last Friday evening.

—Dr. Houghton has completed the excavations for his new house.

—Jacob Baker has found his Sylvester—a boy sure.

—Deacon Billy Smith has turned his attention to trading horses.

—The new minister at the M. E. church very favorably impressed his congregation last Sabbath.

—Mrs. Wise died Saturday, April 28, at the ripe old age of 72 years.

—The republicans of Concord-tp. are suggesting the name of O. W. Rummell as a candidate for county Auditor, at the fall election.

Richland Chips.

—Roads improving.

—Friut trees blooming profusely.

—Miss Callie Britton is teaching the Richland Center school.

—Mr. G. I. Patterson has returned from Kansas.

—Aaron Baker has moved with his family to Kosciusko county. The party they gave to their young friends before leaving was much enjoyed by all.

—A lady of this vicinity, getting her "dander up," pelted her husband with "hen fruit" while he pranced frantically around vainly striving to keep out of range.

—We wonder if "Uncle Joe." was a member of the band that went to serenade the house of a respectable widow lady, "on the east bank of little Cedar Creek," each member of which was fined six dollars and sixty-four cents. How is it Uncle Joe. JOHN.

LaOtto Items.

—Holbrook & Dudly have a steam thresher.

—The inhabitants of Green-tp. are somewhat exhilerated over the appearance of a twenty foot snake, having been seen by several parties.

—The versatile proprietor of the Lake Side is at present engaged in the insurance business.

—Aaron Shonts, who for years has been a voluntary exile from home, returned last Saturday.

Garrett Items.

—Rev. Father Lutton, of St. Louis, is giving a mission at the Catholic church this week.

—Mr. T. Taggart will leave Garrett this week, and take charge of a dining hall at Indianapolis.

—We saw Bro. Parker in town Monday looking up his interests, and lamenting that he did not have the school house built a little larger.

—Mr. James Decker, of Angola, was in town Saturday.

—Business continues dull on the B. & O. Quite a number have left here this spring for the west.

—We understand that Dr. Hosler is going to leave Garrett.

—There has been a somnambulist discovered among the B. & O. engineers that has created quite a sensation in that circle, as he was very unceremoniously interrupted in one of his midnight feats by his boarding mistress at Chicago Junction one night last week.

—Bicknell has commenced improvements on his building.

St. Joe Items.

—Too much rain.

—Feeding bees is not a very pleasant judging from the appearance of Byron's face.

—A tramp representing himself as a hog and cattle buyer, stopped with Mort Tustison Thursday night, and to pay his bill stole the best pair of pants Mort had.

—It is reported that the B. & O. R. R. Co. will lay a side track at Concord this spring.

—The son of N. Scholes, who left home a week ago, has been heard from at Monroeville, Ind.

—What's become of the Newville correspondent. We would like to hear how that graveled road to Butler is progressing.

—Carpenters are busy repairing the railroad bridge across the St. Joe river.

—We learn that Mr. VanHyde, formerly of Concord, has been appointed Superintendent of the State Reform Farm for boys a Lancaster, Ohio.

—Dr. J. E. Emanuel, of Spencerville, will use ALL his influence with the Hon. Board of Commissioners to our advadage, providing the road is not meddled with, that runs through the Doctor's farm. We need the help of all and will let the Doctor have his road, providin we can't help ourselves. G. W. W.

—We understand that the Rev. W. Langdon Sanders will deliver his popular lecture on "Wit and Humor," under the auspices of the Good Templars of this place at an early date.

—What gives the Bland dollar eagle such an ugly appearance is the frantic effort he is making to hatch out the other eight cents.

Wanted at the New York Store, 100,000 pounds of Wool, for which the highest market price will be paid.

Cut This Out.

Our new house in a new part of the street. All our furniture was new; all our friends were new; our silverware was new; our carriage was new; harness gold-plated, was new; we were new; and we wanted a new baby but we had to wait a reasonable time. Our friends were new; our hall chairs with the new coat of arms, to the grand piano with the new action, and up-stairs, again, to the new fire escape, all things of high polish, in our new room, 8 Columbia-st. West, for cheap china, glass ware, silver plated ware. We warrant all our Meriden Britanua Company brand of Silver Plated Ware.

On and after May the 1st, we shall be at our new store, No. 8 Columbia street. Do not fail to look for the Big Iron Dog.

Respectfully, H. N. Ward.

—They couldn't agree on a certain point and the cosequence was a little sparing expedition immediately ensued James Henry said to James Johnson, to-wit: "I'm hard to get started, but don't stamp on my corns. I'm a stunner and send a powerful heft from my shoulder when I'm mad." But James No. 2 heeded not and trampeth on his toes. Then James the first sendeth one of those shoulder bumpers that is spoken of before, and James the second saw stars in broad day light. Then there were others gathered around them and after several minutes, peace again reigned.

—Spring is a time of resurrection. The trees awaken from their long sleep, put on their robes of green and make ready for the summer; the flowers burst into bloom and fill the air with their fragrant odors; the waters are released from winter's bondage of ice, and leap into motion with the coming spring; the barren earth decks herself anew with green; the birds return to their woodland haunts and the forests ring with their melodies. All nature seems to awaken into a new life and the hum of the mousquito and song of the house fly betoken that they too have felt the power of the spring resurrection.

—Our city ordinances do not allow horses to run upon the streets, but cows have full sway. If this law was just changed "vica versa" it would look a little sensible. A horse does no harm whatever unless he should happen on Main street, and after being drove away once he would stay, but a cow will come back to a wagon "seventy-five thousand times" a minute. It takes a bull pup and a hired man continually on the trot to keep one cow from a farmers wagon after she gets a taste of hay. If the town Dads wish to let either run the horse is the less troublesome and more "manerable" in its daily rounds.

—Is the new band organized. Can't they all get into one room for practice. One mouth-piece of this new enterprize is located in the south end of town, not far from our bed room. Every night, from half-past eight till the next morning, some fellow sits in his window and by main force drags the most hideous and heartending noises from the bowels of that squeaking horror. We call it a horn. It may possibly be a concertina or a melodeon, but it is one of that tribe of instruments that seem to be born into the world with an incalculable amount of wind in their stomachs, and to spend the whole of their useless lives in belching it forth through a dozen keyholes upon a suffering world. When we have more time we will sum up the amount of deaths and the number of babies who have been frightened into fits by the noise from this "musical instruments."

OBIUUARY.

Lydia Johnson, born April 10, 1805, died April 27, 1878. Mrs. Johnson was born in Fiatt county, Pa., and moved in 1816 to Richland county, Ohio, where she was married to Thomas Johnson, and where they lived until 1842, when they moved to DeKalb county, and lived here until her death. She was a sister of James and George Draggoo. She was one of the pioneers of this county, one of the brave women and mothers who endured hardships, suffered early want and privation in order that those who come after might enjoy the prosperty and plenty denied to her. Her death breaks another link that connects the past heroic of our land with the future and reminds us anew to honor, to love and cherish the heroes and heroines of the early day, of whom only a few still remain as remenants of the courage and devotion of true manhood and womanhood. Mrs. Johnson has been for the last twenty-seven years of her life, a devoted christian, a light in the church, an example to the world of womanly piety. She leaves surviving and mourning her loss, nine children, three of her children having already gone before. At the altar of the church she no longer worships, in the social gathering she no longer cheers, in the home circle she no longer weaves the golden chain of domestic love, by which the hearts of children and parent are linked together. Devoted christian, noble woman, venerable mother, we bid the farwell.

—A singular case was tried last week in Liberty township, Grant county. A father and son brought suit against a father and son; each side had one-eyed attorneys; and the jury consisted of three fathers and their three sons.

—Medical men often puzzle themselves over the large sale that Dr. Cull's Baby Syrup enjoys. Its great popularity is due only to the excellent qualities possessed by this household medicine. 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

—A boy, whose general appearance betokened the want of a father's care, being asked what his father followed for a living, innocently replied: "He is an office seeker by trade, but he don't work at it any more since he was caught stealing."

—The [illegible] daily, published at the Littl[illegible] on an acre lot, gave an interesting [illegible] from Ora Shaffer and Jack Stahl last Friday. We object to these things, Mr. daily. That letter should have been under the head of "Fallen Leaves" in the "Republican." It was flat enough.

—Our farmer friends inform us that there never was a finer prospect for peaches in this country than at the present moment, and unless we have a frost or some other accident befalls them, there will be a bounteous crop. Apples, too, promise fairly, and other small fruits will be plenteous.

—Mr. Davenport has received a new supply of Lawson's Curative, which is suer to cure to cure those distressing complaints such as neuralgia, rheumatism, headach, and all pains of the limbs and back, when it is faitfully used according to directions. It will allay the inflamation in wounds and bruises, and heal it if by magic.

—Joseph Columbus Loveland has again retired from the trial and temptations of an editor, and in his valedictory, Joe winds up in this wise: "In a jog over the rough stones to eternity, and while dealing with hard facts in this cold world, 'tis pleasant to remember that there are at least some friends to rally round one and render kindly aid in such an undertaking.

—Mrs. Hattie Russell, a young bride of a few months, committed suicide at Bryan, Ohio, by taking morphine last week. She received a registered letter which, after reading, she destroyed, and immediately afterward purchased the fatal drug. The letter is believed to have been written by a former lover, who resides at Kendallville, Ind., but the contents are, of course, unknown.

—Road Supervisors are now called upon in the name of all who have occasion to travel upon the public highways to loose no time in making such repairs on the roads in their respective districts as will in some degree add to the comforts of both man and beast. It is the work that is done in the early part of the season that proves most effectual and durable; that done late in the season in most instances had better not be done at all.

—If the boys of this city expect to have a first-class ball club here this summer, they must have more energy than has been shown so far. A few of them will go to the ground when a practice game is called and another set of them will not play anywhere only on the main thoroughfares so that when the ladies pass they can make an impression, an awkward move or two and think, in their mind, that they are base ballists and need no practice. Fill up their places with others.

The weather has been very uncertain and its hard for our people to make up their minds that spring has come. Here are signs of spring that lays all others in the shade:

Soon the blue birds will be twittering
Upon the budding tree;
Soon the small boy will be fooling
With the festive bumble bee.
Soon the cowslip and the daisy
'Mid the clover will appear.
Soon the moonlight serenader
Will be walking on his ear.
Soon the maiden and her lover
Will rub noses o'er the gate.
And for flies the lodger skirmish
In the hash upon his plate.

—The next thing to demand the attention of the voters of this place is the city election, which is soon to take place. The present city council has proved itself alive to the interests of the place, and we believe has given very general satisfaction. We do not know whether any of them are candidates for re-election or not—indeed they all may be, for that matter—but if we get as good ones in the future as we have at present, the people ought to be satisfied.

—Iron road are the latest improvement in county roads. They are made by laying parallel bands of iron about ten inches wide each, for vehicles to run on. Each band has its flange to keep the wheel from running off. Two tracks are constructed—one on each side of the road to accomodate travel each way. The bands are kept in place by being spiked to posts and stringers. The space between the bands used by horses is graveled. It is estimated that such roads will cost about $2,000 per mile.

—Mishwauke had a large fire last week.

—The roads have become passable again.

—Garden "sass" has made its appearance.

—Coop Ralston is painting his residence.

—Some new lots are being fenced in in Rainier and Headley's addition.

—It will soon be time for our young folks to get together and visit the Lake.

—Walt Peterson put Queen Esther on the stage at Kendallville, last Friday.

Trade was slack last week. The little drops of water fel about seven days.

—John Rush, agent at the depot at Plesant Lake, was in town over Sunday.

—We were compelled to condense our correspondents this week, owing to a want of space.

—Mr. Mitchell opened his saw mill for business last Tuesday. Farmers bring in your logs.

—Frank Strebe cleaned out his shop last Saturday. "In the sweet-by and by."

—J. L. Davis' tinners are at work roofing the new building on the Poor Farm.

—The lecture at the Hall last week on spiritualism was not attended very largly.

—Its most too wet for work to commence on the roads before the latter part of this week.

—Mrs. Yesbery and Enos. Weaver were reported dead yesterday. The rumor was unfounded.

—Si. Locke is in the city quite often of late. He is interested in his business more than in the past.

—The attendance from this place to the Odd Fellows celebration at Fort Wayne, was not large.

—A number of our "hightones" will work out their own road tax this year. Hard times, you know.

—"What's in a dress?" asks a popular writer. Sometimes a good deal, and sometimes precious little.

—Fruit of all kinds promises an abundant yield this season. Everybody is longing for a large crop.

—Gentlemen, freemen, citizens, sovereigns: don't you know that the corporation election takes place next Monday?

—Henry Lesh, who has been visiting friends in the city for several weeks, returned to Louisville, Ohio, yesterday.

—There is a rumor that Mr. Swihart's barn, west of town, was struck by lightning during the storm last Friday.

—There was a heavy hail storm a mile south of the city last Friday, and nothing but rain fell here. Strange indeed.

—Bill Britton and Si. Locke's clerk had a fight Tuesday night. Clerks of all kinds should not let their angry pass rise.

—All best prints 6c and a splendid prints for 5c a yard. Best Lonsdale Muslin for 10c a yard at Schaab Beugnot & Co's.

—These are nice times for the tramps—none too cold, and none too hot—just right for a lazy vagabond to put in his time loafing.

—Dr. Casebeer has returned from Ohio, where he has been attending his eldest daughter, who has been very ill for some time.

—Another "chap" is reported in high-toned circles. We we will not publish the names in respect for the parties connected.

—Queery: "Why will men smoke common tobacco, when they can buy Marburg Bros, "Seal of North Carolina" at the same price.

—Local items are very scarce this week and our readers will have to accept a double dose of items on spring, the weather, roads, &c.

—The plug train, on the Air Line, which now stops at Kendallville will soon be run through to Elkhart. There is a little sense in this move.

—Miss Rosalie Higgins, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, a niece of Mr. and Mrs A. J. Little and Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge, is paying them a visit.

—Our faithful and hardworking marshal will come before the Town Board for re-election. Sam is worthy of the position, and should have it.

—Schaab, Beugnot & Co have the largest and best selected stock of spring clothing ever brought to the county, and are sold at bottom prices.

—There are some persons we know of in this city who cannot bear good treatment. If you want them to respect you give them a kick whenever opportunity is given.

—What the Columbia City Post says of the aspirants for office in that county we believe is applicable in this. "We are glad to note a good feeling prevailing, each candidate submitting his claims to the people upon his own merits and willing to abide the decision of the Democracy of the county. The Democrat who announces his name makes a pledge that he will support the nominee whoever he may be, as he expects to be supported should he be the winner. A number of most excellent gentlemen will apply for a nomination for every principle office in the county. The Democrats can cheerfully support any one of the number nominated, but in doing so they want no kicking from those defeated.

—Rev. Mr. Tedrow is short a hoe and rake. When the parties who have them are through with them, please return.

—House cleaning time. Now ladies, be cherubs, and insist upon the gentlemen observing the third commandment while moving stoves.

—Farmers are well advanced with their spring work. A great deal of the ground for corn is already plowed, while the oats and flax are all sowed.

—The suit of clothes in front of the N. Y. Store frightened Mr. Keeran's horses, and he had a buggy to undergo repairs to the tune of several dollars.

—The time of the year draweth nigh, when the able bodied male citizen will be called upon to gather up his implement, and put in his little road work.

—Saturday was a good day for the republican candidate. He was out early and late, sowing the seed for his harvest Some of it will fall on barren soil.

—The boys who have been in the habit of breaking down the fence at the Auburn House had better let up on it. If the parties are caught they will have to suffer the verdict of a jury.

Married.—Mr. George Meyer to Miss Agnes Schudel, both of Waterloo, at the Catholic church by Rev. Young, Tuesday last. High mass was celebrated.

—Bishop McCoskrey, gives unqualified denial to the charges against him.

—The hum of the mosquito and of the buzz-saw can again be heard in the land. Both delight in taking blood.

—The latest slang phrase is, "Now, Johnny, don't get on your neck." The next, we predict, will be, "Now, don't get on your shoulder."

—Spring poetry: Her cheeks were very ruddy, and the streets were awful muddy, and she loudly shrieked "Oh, thunder," as her feet flew out from under.

—A gold brick was recently made at Helena, Montana, which is said to be the largest ever made. It weighs 3,-880.98 and is worth $51,000. Oh, for a hat full.

—As the time for devouring ice cream draws near, one by one the girls begin to realize what a blessed thing it is to possess the affections of a nice young man who is liberal with his dimes.

—The Sunday School Concert at the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening, was a splendid entertainment, and all enjoyed and appreciated the efforts of the managers in preparing and giving it to the citizens

—Mrs. Hollister, mother of our restaurant man Mr. S. Hollister, was found dead in her bed one day last week, at Hicksville, Ohio. Her death was sudden and probably resulted from heart disease.

—Farmers are considerably alarmed concerning the advanced condition of the wheat, fearing a late frost may injure the crop. Everything indicates a June harvest.

—This being an unusually early spring, giving the farmers ample time to put in their spring crops, would it not be well to spend a few days in repairing the roads?

—House cleaning time is due. Crochety husbands will raise the dickens upon going home to find nothing to eat but a few cold potatoes, piece of bread, and a glass of water.

—We noticed a young couple on the streets Saturday evening who really ought to have been sewed together and left to run. They are two sweet to live long in this promise world.

—Those wanting to avail themselves of the bankrupt act, will have to hurry up their failures. The Senate has passed a bill repealing the whole law. It was probably about time.

—Jno. Ennis, while crossing the track at Jackson Tuesday morning, was run over by a Grand River Valley passenger train, cutting one leg off above the knee, and badly bruising him.

—Engaged young people should remember that osculation is a great transmitter of pneumonic troubles. A little deprivation now can be made up for when the summer evenings come.

—We received a well written arrticle from our correspondent at Concord Corners, on the death of Mrs. Lyda Johnson, and will have to omit it, having an obituary of the same in type.

—Some fellow tried to make his way into the second story window of a Cedar street residence, and was dusted out too lively. Pay closer attention to your directions, my boy, the next time.

—Charley Picker and H. Bumpus has went "pards" in the brick laying business. They are among the best brick masons of the State and those of our readers who want a good, substantial job will do well to give them a call.

Treasurer's Notice.

Notic is hereby given, that I will redeem county orders protested prior to December 1st, 1877, and interest will cease on the same not presented, after May 10th, 1878.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS, alias "Pat the Avenger," the hero of the Pittsburgh riots of last summer, was tried last week on an indictment for murder. The jury rendered a verdict of acquittal, and he was remanded to jail to await trial on the charge of participating in the riot and consequent destruction of railroad and other property....Sam Steenburg (colored) was executed at Fonda, N. Y., on April 19, for the murder, in November last, of Jacob S. Parker.

THE death of Hon. William Orton, for the past eleven years President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, is announced. It occurred in New York city, and was caused by apoplexy....George T. Hathaway, treasurer of the Border City and Sagamore mills, of Fall River, Mass., is a defaulter to the amount of about $700,000. Hathaway is a relative of S. Angier Chace, who embezzled $500,000 of the Union mills funds.

THE President and a party of distinguished guests were entertained by the citizens of Philadelphia on the 24th of April....The twelfth annual meeting of the National Board of Fire Underwriters was held in New York last week, Alfred G. Baker, of Philadelphia, presiding. About forty-five companies were represented. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Alfred G. Baker, Philadelphia, President; B. Lockwood, New York, Vice President; M. Bennet, Jr., Hartford, Secretary; J. S. Parish, Providence, Treasurer....The Erie railroad was sold the other day at New York, in foreclosure suit, by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. The road was purchased for $6,000,000 by ex-Gov. E. D. Morgan, David A. Wells and J. Lamber Welsh, who are trustees for the stockholders.

THE WEST.

JOHN ENNIS, a Chicago pedestrian, has succeeded, at Buffalo, N. Y., in walking 400 miles in 128 hours.

PORTIONS of Illinois and Iowa were visited by a most disastrous storm on the 21st of April. At Galesburg, Ill., the hurricane was preceded by a furious fall of hail, many of the stones being larger than hens' eggs, which played fearful havoc with window-panes. At Pomeroy, Iowa, a small station on the Illinois Central railroad, forty miles west of Fort Dodge, the tornado assumed a frightful velocity. Several houses were blown down, four or five persons killed, and about twenty others wounded. In Jefferson county the storm did immense damage to dwellings, barns and fences. At Storm Lake, Monona county, a number of buildings were blown down and several people killed. Loss of life is reported at other localities in the path of the storm. Taken altogether it was the most disastrous tornado ever experienced in the State of Iowa.

CHICAGO elevators contain 570,890 bushels of wheat, 1,887,603 bushels of corn, 139,450 bushels of oats, 88,162 bushels of rye and 460,319 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,140,827 bushels, against 7,525,393 bushels at this period last year.

GENERAL.

INFORMATION comes from Mexico that an insurrection against the Diaz Government is steadily but surely ripening.

THERE has been a severe riot at an open-air political meeting in Montreal. "Just before the meeting closed," says a dispatch from that city, "a mob on the outskirts made a desperate attack on the assemblage with stones, wounding a large number. Nearly thirty have been attended by doctors. Many others were less seriously injured."

SENSATIONAL dispatches to the San Antonio (Tex.) Express, dated April 23, detail additional Indian and Mexican outrages. The raiders murdered men and women and carried children into captivity. No less than forty persons have been killed and much stock taken.

THE Windsor Hotel at Coburg, Canada, was destroyed by fire a few days ago. While the firemen were at work one of the walls fell outward, burying six of them in the ruins. Three of them were taken out dead, their bodies being horribly mutilated. A fourth received probably fatal injuries. The two others were badly injured, but will probably recover.

WASHINGTON.

EDISON, the inventor of so many wonderful instruments, is a great lion in Washington. He is constantly engaged in giving audiences to Congressmen, who find language inadequate to express their enthusiasm over the marvelous phonograph. Among his other late inventions is an improved ear-trumpet. Edison is very deaf, but by this trumpet he can hear at the back part of a theater with perfect distinctness.

THE majority of the House Committee on Agriculture has agreed to the Cattle Transportation bill that has been pending before the committee during the last two or three months. This provides that cattle shall be unloaded and fed every twenty-four hours.

THE House Ways and Means Committee have completed the Internal Revenue bill. It exempts from the income tax funds belonging to States on deposit in banks. Funds of savings banks invested in United States bonds are also exempted, except when deposited in the name of a single person. It levies a tax of 16 cents per pound on tobacco; $5 per 1,000 on cigars; $1.25 per 1,000 on cigarettes not weighing more than 3½ pounds, and an income tax of 2 per centum on all sums over $2,000.

Waite, Chief Justice; Fifth circuit, Joseph P. Bradley, Associate Justice; Sixth circuit, Noah H. Swayne, Associate Justice; Seventh circuit, John M. Harlan, Associate Justice; Eighth circuit, Samuel F. Miller, Associate Justice; Ninth circuit, Stephen J. Field, Associate Justice. The new order was made in accordance with the recent appointment of a new Associate Justice.

THE House Committee on Naval Affairs has agreed to report a bill recommending that the claim of Mrs. Dahlgren, for the Dahlgren gun, be referred to the Court of Claims, with a limit of $65,000....The President has nominated Geo. L. Smith to be Collector of Customs at New Orleans....The United States Senate has reconsidered its action in rejecting the appointment of Mr. Colburn, of the New York Times, as Consul General to Mexico, and confirmed him by a handsome vote.

THE Secretary of Treasury sent to the Senate to-day, in response to its resolution of Jan. 15, a statement of the issue of loans and treasury notes from March 4, 1861, to June 30, 1877, inclusive, showing that the 7-30 bonds of '61, amounting to $20,000,000, sold at 3.25 premium; the 81's of '61, from 86 to 127; the loan of '63 at an average premium of 4.13, and the 10-40's of '64, at par to 7 per cent. premium, and all others at par. The total principal is given at $6,320,236,304, and the premium at $64,112,195. The releases amount to $2,478,819,196.

POLITICAL.

WASHINGTON correspondents report that there is a scheme, which is to be urged through the House Judiciary Committee, to reopen the investigation of the Louisiana Returning Board. "It is proposed that the members of the board be summoned and compelled to answer these questions: Were you advised by any one whom you believed to represent the Government at Washington or the party now in power that it was necessary for you, in the interest of the national welfare, and in disregard, if need be, of the laws of the State, under which you acted, to count out the Tilden electors and count in the Hayes electors? Did you thus count out and count in, and in violation of what you believed to be the provisions of the law under which you hold office?

A WASHINGTON special to the Chicago Tribune says: "A dispatch has been received here that McLin, of the Florida Returning Board, has confessed that the State was carried for Hayes by fraud."....Hon. George C. Gorham, of California, has been appointed Secretary of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

THE President is reported to have informed an inquiring Congressman that, under the civil-service policy of the administration, any office-holder of the Government who voluntarily chooses to do so may contribute to political campaign funds, but he desires it to be understood that no officer or employe of the Government will incur any danger as to the tenure of his office by refusing to do so.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A SPECIAL from Berlin says: "Private advices from Moscow state that 3,000 students and workmen were involved in the disturbances of the 13th instant. Twelve were killed and twenty-five wounded. One hundred of them were arrested."....An English surgeon, who has just returned to Constantinople from Erzeroum, says 13,000 sick and wounded Turkish soldiers have died since the evacuation of that city, and the Russians have lost 21,000 men by sickness since they entered the plain of Erzeroum....A telegram from Athens says England has arranged a truce in Thessaly. The Turks have retired to fortresses and the insurgents to Greece.

A DISPATCH from Calcutta says: "All the energies of the Government are concentrated on war preparations in India. The native regiments have been ordered to recruit up to their full war strength immediately. Factories for the manufacture of arms are working day and night, Sundays and week-days. The Sepoys have responded cheerfully to the summons for foreign service, and a number of regiments have spontaneously volunteered."....A Madrid telegram says a heavy gale has prevailed along the northern coast of Spain. Numerous fishing vessels were lost, and about 100 Bermeo fishermen drowned. Fifty-six fishermen belonging to Santander were also drowned.

THE Island of Tahiti was lately visited by a violent hurricane. One hundred and twenty people were killed and much property destroyed.

A REPORT comes from Constantinople that 80,000 Mussulmans, presumably in the Balkan districts, have armed themselves with the cannon and rifles left behind by Suleiman Pasha at the time of his retreat and attacked the Russians. It is said that the Russians have lost 900 men and thirteen officers, and have asked for reinforcements from Adrianople.

THE police have discovered important evidence regarding the murder of Lord Leitrim, implicating at least one of the prisoners now in custody. ..Dispatches of April 23 say that the disturbances between the Russians and Turks in the Balkan districts of Bulgaria and Roumelia have assumed proportions which threaten to make the matter a serious one. Fighting has been going on for several days between the Turkish residents on one side and the Russian garrisons and Bulgarians on the other, and at last accounts the Turks had proved more than a match for their enemies.

THE International Telegraphic Congress, announced for July next, in London, has been postponed for one year on the motion of the English Government....In a violent gale on the Black sea, a Turkish corvette was lost, with ninety of the crew.

Placed on the calendar....The amendment of the House to the bill granting a pension to Gen. James Shields, so as to increase his pension from $50 to $100 per month, was, on motion of Mr. Sargent, referred....Consideration was resumed of the bill to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific railroad. After a long discussion and several amendments the bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The proceedings in the House were of a decidedly ludicrous character, an excited and humorous discussion upon a protest to the River and Harbor bill taking place, which continued for four and a half hours. Finally the protest was not allowed a place in the journal, and the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, April 24.—SENATE.—Mr. Eustis introduced a bill providing for ocean mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil. Referred....Mr. Dorsey submitted a resolution instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the late survey of the western boundary of the State of Arkansas, if the title to any public land is affected thereby, and what further legislation is necessary on the subject. Agreed to....The House bill for the relief of James Fishback, late Collector of Internal Revenue, Tenth District of Illinois, was passed. ....The Printing Deficiency bill was discussed and passed....Mr. Ferry introduced a bill regulating the compensation for the transportation of mails on railroad routes. Referred....The bill to amend the Revised Statutes in relation to deposits for savings was passed....Senate bill in relation to the jurisdiction of District Courts in Utah, Wyoming, and other Territories, in matters of divorce was also passed.

HOUSE.—The resolution to begin the session at 11 o'clock on and after Monday next was adopted. ....Mr. Knott, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill for the distribution of the unexpended balance of the Geneva award. Printed and recommitted....Mr. Keana, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill extending the operations of the Lighthouse Board over the Illinois river, for the establishment of lights, buoys, etc. Passed....Mr. Roberts, from the same committee, reported a bill providing that the hailing-place of every vessel of the United States may be the town where the vessel is built, or where the owner resides. Passed.... Mr. Springer introduced a bill authorizing the Committee on Civil-Service Reform to ascertain the number of employes of the House, and what change, if any, is necessary to promote efficiency in the service....Mr. Clymer, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the Naval Appropriation bill with various Senate amendments, recommending concurrence in some and non-concurrence in others. The report of the committee was agreed to....The Senate Funding bill in regard to the Pacific Railway Companies having been reached on the Speaker's table, Mr. Cox, of New York, moved that it be put upon its passage. Under the previous question, the main question being ordered, a vote was taken on the passage of the bill, and resulted—yeas, 243; nays, 2; so the bill was passed. The negative votes were cast by Messrs. Butler and Lynde....The next bill on the Speaker's table was the bill for the repeal of the Bankrupt law, pending consideration of which the House then took a recess until 7:30 p. m., the evening session for debate only.

THURSDAY, April 25.—SENATE.—The River and Harbor Appropriation bill, which recently passed the House, was read by title and referred. ....On motion of Mr. Sargent, the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Naval Appropriation bill, and asked for a conference with the House. Agreed to....Mr. Matthews submitted a resolution directing the Secretary of War to report to the Senate what amount of money had been expended for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, how much it will cost to complete the work, how much has been paid for right of way, attorneys' fees, etc. He asked for present consideration of the resolution, but it was objected to by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, and was laid over....Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE.—The House, after a long debate, concurred in the Senate amendment to the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law....Mr. Schleicher, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted a report of that committee in reference to the Mexican border troubles, together with a bill in relation thereto, requesting the President to keep on the Texas border not less than 5,000 men to protect American citizens, and authorizing the crossing of the border by United States troops until such treaty stipulations shall be made with Mexico as may secure an efficient protection to American citizens and property. Referred to the committee of the whole....Mr. Cox, of New York, introduced a joint resolution for a joint committee, to be denominated the Committee on Census, to take into consideration the proper measures to be employed for taking the next census. Adopted.

Spoiling a Game of Eucher.

It is said that early in his reign Rutherford had invited some of the boys up for a card-party, and the thing was "set up" in advance. The President and Uncle Richard Thompson were to play against Evarts and Sherman. The game was to be eucher, although Sherman and Thompson were yearning for a little draw poker. The guests came, and were ushered without ceremony into the President's library. Rutherford was there, and so was Madame, more entertaining and winsome, if possible, than usual. She was particularly solicitous about the health of each and the family of the same, hoped Uncle Dick Thompson wouldn't work himself to death, and bade Mr. Evarts beware how he took fried clams on his stomach at midnight. Mr. Sherman hoped they were not detaining Mrs. Hayes from receiving other friends, or from the pleasant duties of the domestic circle. Ah, no, indeed! This was her hour with her husband, and any of his intimate friends who happened to drop in. Thompson looked at Sherman and winked. Sherman remarked: "Ah, yes, beautiful thought, madame; beautiful thought." Evarts emitted a wordy eulogy on the beauties of home life; and the President—yawned. Eleven o'clock came, and the visitors withdrew with the sweetest of parting benedictions from Mrs. Hayes. The next day Rutherford was obliged to admit to his disappointed friends: "It's no use; Lucy won't have it; she doesn't say a word, but you see how she works it." There won't be any wickedness at the White House if Mrs. Hayes can help it. There is a great deal of intriguery which she knows nothing about, but that doesn't count. When she strikes anything off color, she "shoots it on the spot."—Washington Letter to Philadelphia Sunday Press.

Irish Humor.

The "Drawer" is indebted to a friend in Colorado for the following, which was related to him by a Catholic priest, Father H——, who, in his mission work in Southern Colorado and New Mexico, met with many extraordinary people and incidents. On one occasion he happened to hold service in a small, out-of-the-way chapel, where the varied duties of janitor were discharged by a gentleman of Irish descent. During the service a child was brought forward for baptism. It may not be generally known that in the Roman Catholic ritual the priest, before touching the child with water, puts a little salt into the water in the presence of the congregation. The janitor, however, had prepared the water beforehand, according to his own ideas as to the proportion of salt, when the priest, having omitted to place the salt in readiness, whispered softly to his attendant, "Pat, will you please to get the salt?"

Pat responded in an audible whisper from behind his hand, "Sure, an' I put it in already."

Father H——, not fully understanding, repeated his whispered request.

Again Pat replied, more audibly than before, and with slight dudgeon in his tone, "Sure, an' I put it in, I tell ye."

"But the ritual demands that the priest should perform the ceremony before the congregation," explained Father H——, considerably annoyed at the janitor's obstinacy.

The Irishman procured the salt, and, handing it to the priest, electrified him, as well as the congregation, with the remark, delivered in a surly growl: "Here ye are; bedad ye can make a pickle of it if ye want to!"—"Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for May.

Horrible Murder and Suicide.

A frightful tragedy was recently enacted at Troy, Geauga county, Ohio. An old man named Stroud, who had quarreled with his second wife and left her because they could not agree in regard to their children, came back, and, driving up to the front of the house, called out for something to eat and drink, and, the wife bringing it out, he attacked her with a butcher knife, caught her with his left arm around the waist and plunged the knife into her abdomen. It entered just at the left of the navel. He then drew it hastily out, and, with with murderous desperation, plunged it again into her abdomen to the right of the navel, with the blade up, and, turning it half around in the wound, made a circular gash more than five inches in length across her person under the navel. With a desperation which a mortal only possesses when life depends upon it, the victim struggled herself free from her murderer and started in the direction of one of the neighbors screaming, "Murder! Murder! Help! He has killed me!" After going about fifteen rods she fell down with her bowels protruding in a frightful manner. The desperate man then cut his own throat, but, the result not being satisfactory, deliberately took off his hat and coat and severed the windpipe and jugular. A neighbor rushed to the spot, when Stroud struggled up, and, taking a small pocket-knife from his pocket, made an attempt to stab him. Stroud died in an hour. The people who gathered around Stroud before he died would have lynched him if he had not been so near dead. It was proposed to bury him alive, but one thought it would pollute the soil. Another said the old man looked the best he ever saw him. Upon taking water several times it ran out at the gash made in the neck. He died slowly and in terrible agony. The reason of this terrible feeling against Stroud was that he had always sustained a bad reputation, having poisoned cattle and burned buildings in various instances.

The Spring Migration.

During the last six weeks there has been a continuous stream of migration flowing West through Missouri into Southern Kansas and Northern Texas, and it is still flowing. It will continue as long as there is time for the immigrant to put in a crop in the region where his new home is to be. The immigrants are a class of people that any State might covet—small farmers from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, who have sold their places in these States for enough to purchase larger ones in Kansas and Texas, and have something over to live on while the new crop is growing. To these must be added several small colonies of colored people from Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia, who go to Kansas to get the land they cannot buy in the other States. It would not be out of the way to estimate the addition to the population of Kansas and Texas which this migration will bring at 50,000 for each State. When it is considered that this means a farm for every five persons, or 10,000 new farms in each of the States of Kansas and Texas, some idea of the value of this new acquisition may be formed.—St. Louis Republican.

Curious Discovery of a New Grain.

We have been shown a new grain, discovered about four years ago by a farmer in Surprise valley, in the northern part of this State, taken from the crop of a wild goose which had been shot by the farmer. He sowed the seed immediately after it was taken from the garner of the bird's crop, and it produced more than a hundred fold. Mr. Merithew, a farmer of Butte county, being on a visit to Surprise valley, obtained some few seeds of the new grain, and succeeded in propagating it with wonderful success on his farm in Butte county. The straw and beardless head resemble wheat; the grain looks a little like rye, but is twice as large as rye. When cut as it is passing into the milk it makes a hay even superior to wheat-hay. Mr. Merithew has on hand several tons of hay from this new variety of grain, and perhaps five bushels of its seed. It appears to us every way superior to rye.—Ventura (Cal.) Free Press.

Repealing the Bankrupt Law.

The following is the full text of the bill which passed the United States Senate, repealing the present Brankrupt law:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Bankrupt law, approved March 2, 1867, and all acts in amendment or supplementary thereto, or in explanation thereof, be and the same are hereby repealed; provided, however, that such repeal shall in no manner invalidate or affect any case in bankruptcy instituted and pending in any court prior to the day when this act shall take effect, but as to all such pending cases and all future proceedings therein, the acts hereby repealed shall be in full force and effect until the same shall be fully disposed of in the same manner as if said acts had not been repealed.

It will be observed that the repeal will be total, no modifications appearing, except that no cases now pending shall be affected by its provisions.

The Easiest Way to Drown.

If death by drowning be inevitable, as in shipwreck, the easiest way to die would be to suck water into the lungs by a powerful inspiration, as soon as one went beneath the surface. A person who had the courage to do this would probably become almost immediately unconscious, and never rise to the surface. As soon as the fluid filled his lungs all chilliness and pain would cease, the indescribable semi-delirium that accompanies anæsthesia would come on, with ringing in the ears and delightful visions of color and light, while he would seem to himself to be gently sinking to rest on the softest of beds and with the most delightful of dreams.—Dr. R. S. Tracy, in Popular Science Monthly for May.

CONKLING AND THE PRESIDENT.

An Interview with the New York Senator—The Administration Severely Denounced.

The New York World publishes a long and important letter from its Utica (N. Y.) correspondent, being the sum of a series of interviews with Senator Conkling at his home in that city at intervals during the past few months. The relations between the correspondent and Senator Conkling, the World says, were such as made entire frankness necessary on the part of the latter, and, the World adds, "the correspondent's name will be forthcoming if the slightest real occasion for publishing it shall arise."

In the interviews the Senator spoke with the utmost freedom about the successive steps that led to the formation of the Electoral Commission, the part had in it by prominent Democrats and Republican members of Congress, and by President Hayes and his friends. In the course of the interview the World's correspondent asked:

—Well, Senator, I would like to know whether you think the true history of the Louisiana electoral business will ever be told in Congress, and, if so, how soon?

Conkling—Yes; I think it will. I don't see how it can be kept down. There are too many avenues of information opened to-day to make concealment of avail much longer. No reasonable man can doubt there was some kind of a bargain between the friends of Nicholls and that man Hayes, and that Stanley Matthews and Sherman were privy to it. A very great many people have become exceedingly curious to know precisely what the bargain was and exactly how it was carried out, and Yankee ingenuity will be sure to find some means of getting at the information. I cannot say how soon the facts will come out, for something may occur any day to force them to the surface. It will probably be best to let them come out naturally.

Correspondent—What will be the result?

Conkling—The result will be that the whole country will be appalled by the dishonor of this administration. I tell you, sir, that never in the history of this nation has there been in the entire four years of an administration so much corruption, bartering of offices, rewarding of political favorites, traffic with political leaders, and bargain and sale of the electoral franchise, as during this past year. People will not believe it until the proof is shown them; but the proof will be forthcoming. People say that Hayes is a good man, and means well, but they do not know what they are talking about. When all the facts are known about this administration no one will attempt to excuse the man on account of his supposed goodness, nor yet because he is weak and ignorant. The acts that have disgraced this administration have all been done before the opened eyes of the President.

Mr. Conkling then goes on to review at length the history of the Electoral Commission. He says the country was in actual danger. Yes, I mean that the danger was real and imminent. The point of peril was not in the South, but in the West. It was understood that the Republican leaders had determined to have Vice President Ferry count the votes at all hazards and declare Hayes elected, and the West was determined on resistance. It was to be no child's play in that action. Gen. Steedman had 70,000 men enrolled and assigned to regiments for the purpose of seating Tilden in office in case Vice President Ferry carried out his proposed programme. You may look astonished, but these things are true. President Grant was at his wits' end. He confessed to me that he did not know what to do. He was gathering some troops at or near Washington, but he did not know how far he could depend upon them. Gen. Sherman told him that in case of trouble the sympathies of a large majority of officers and soldiers of the regular army would be with Tilden, and that the army must not be taken into consideration as a dependence in any such crisis. From these facts, and, from what was threatened and prophesied publicly in those days, you can imagine how gloomy the outlook was at the Republican councils. The President asked my advice, and I frankly told him I did not believe that Vice President Ferry had any power to declare the vote, but could merely act in a clerical capacity to open the envelopes and lay the votes of the Electoral College before the Joint Convention of the two houses for their decision. And, by the way, I may as well state here that when a certain Senator came to me and said it was proposed to make me President of the Senate in Ferry's place so that the thing should not miss fire, I frankly told him that I could not accept the position, and that, by my interpretation of the constitution, I should be compelled to rule exactly opposite to the wishes of himself and friends. That will perhaps explain one story that is told about me, and, while we are on the subject, let me say that I suggested subsequently that there was no constitutional reason why Grant should not be elected President of the Senate if they wanted a strong man there, though I saw no necessity for any such change. Of course I knew there was no likelihood of such a choice, and that Grant simply desired to see his successor peacefully inaugurated and to enjoy a long vacation afterward.

Conkling says that he then suggested to President Grant the idea of a commission, and that the latter embraced it heartily. He gives an account of various interviews with the President and Gen. Sherman, the difficulties the advocates of the plan met with, and then in particular detail why he was convinced that Mr. Hayes, then in Ohio, was intriguing with Southern Democratic members of Congress. Speaking of the final vote he says:

"I am frank to say that I thought then there was something not exactly straight about the Louisiana business, but now I believe that when the whole truth is known it will sink the administration, President and all, to the lowest depths of infamy."

"You think, then, Senator, that the President is wholly in the hands of Southern Democrats?"

"I am sure of it," said Senator Conkling. Conkling said there had been no reform under Hayes, not even in the civil service, and said his list of appointments was the worst ever made. Said he: "If Hayes should send in a message on civil-service reform, a list of some of these appointments will be published, and it will make such an astounding commentary upon the President's works as would disconcert a more philosophical Cabinet than that in which Evarts and Schurz figure as reformers."

Further on in the interview the correspondent asks: "Do you see no hope of bringing the President in accord with the Republican leaders?"

Senator Conkling replied: "I must confess that I have ceased to have any expectations of it. No opportunity for harmonizing matters is given by the President. In my opinion, it is not possible to speak in too extreme a manner of this administration. Look at its usurpations of power. In Ohio it openly dictates the election of a United States Senator. In order to do this it bargains with a man, to whom the succession properly belongs, to step out of the way, promising to use its influence, the influence of an army of officeholders and their positions, to make him Speaker of the House. People don't stop to think what this act really is. A President who holds the veto power of legislation promises to interfere in legislation and control its course by dictating who shall be Speaker of the House of Representatives. Fancy the sovereign of England trying any such game with the House of Commons. There would be such an uprising as there has not been since Charles the First lost his head. Yet people are strangely quiet, and say that Hayes is a good man and means well at the very moment he is attempting to place all the power in the hands of his personal friends. If Grant had ever attempted any such usurpation of authority the whole country would have rung with it, and he might not have escaped impeachment."

Concluding, the Senator said: "Republicans in and out of Congress have borne a great deal from Hayes because he is a Republican President, but they are not quite prepared yet for Southern dictation. I can look for no good from the President and his Cabinet. They have not got it in them. When the people know him as well as Republican Senators do the party will be thoroughly united, leaving out the administration."

The Armies of Europe.

Maj. Gen. Upton, who claims to have obtained his figures from official reports and documents, estimates the military strength of the various European armies as follows:

	War-Footing.
Austria	1,013,785
England	228,634
France	1,720,000
Germany	1,302,479
Italy	860,316
Russia	815,344

Gen. Upton is of opinion that, if England goes into a European conflict, she goes in to be whipped; and prophesies that the result of such an enterprise on her part will be the total abandonment of her policy of interfering in the quarrels of the continent, or a complete reorganization of her army. He says: The adherence of England to a military system inherited from the last century can only be explained by her insular position, and the security from invasion afforded by a powerful navy. The salient defect of her system is the non-expansive organization of the regular army; and this defect, in view of European complications, becomes the more apparent when it is considered that nearly one-half of the regiments, batteries, and squadrons, exceeding 90,000 men, are employed in India and the colonies."

He estimates the number of British infantry, available for aggressive purposes, at 100,000 men, including in this the greater part of the reserve recently created. The infantry of the other powers is organized on the expansive principle, and presents these imposing figures:

Austria	845,000
France	700,000
Germany	695,000
Russia	674,000

Trained reserves, and armies of the "second line," are maintained by these powers in addition to the infantry, and these reserves, "supported by artillery and cavalry in the highest state of drill and discipline," outnumber the total military force which England can bring into the field.

RUSSIA has thirty-four inhabitants to the square mile, while England has 389.

WHICH SIDE WILL YOU TAKE?

Individualism or Nationalism.

The principle of all individualism is defiance. It is the egotism of power, the selfishness of gain, the ambition to control. Scott and Vanderbilt represent it in railroads, Stewart in merchandise, Parker in coal, Rothschilds in money, Shylock in usury. It is monopoly rampant. It usurps all it can lay its hands upon. It cares not how many starve so that it grows fat. Specie is its instrument, domination is its aim, aristocracy is its result. It ignores all democracies of right; it sneers at all the evangelisms of equality. When it attains its majority and its power it is Louis XIV. declaring "I am the state."

There is a principle in direct antagonism to this. It is association. Its aim is the universal good; its civilization is charity; its religion, "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you;" its law, "Love thy neighbor as thy self;" its philosophy is education, its humanity is justice. Francis de Sales was its apostle, Franklin was its representative, Washington its conqueror, Jefferson its philosopher, Hamilton its economist, Chase its financier. Paper money is its instrument, equality is its aim, a free and prosperous people result from its principles. It hails every democracy of right, it welcomes every means of equaling rewards—labor's prosperities. When it becomes strong it will not alone declare that all men are born free and equal, but it will battle to maintain a perfect equality of rights—not of intellects, but of security from oppression; not of abilities to accumulate, but of protection from all usurpations.

Specie has long been the right arm of power to individualism. Paper money must become the right hand of power to annihilate the idea that any man can arrogate to himself the power to declare, and be able to maintain his arrogance in declaring, either that "I am the state, "the tyrant of railroad power," "the ruler of merchandise," "the monopolizer of coal," the "dictator of money," or the "enslaver of labor." Specie is king-craft, paper money is democracy; specie is oppression, paper money is liberty; specie is the feudality of the past—slavery; paper money is equality, holding the reins of progress for its strides in the future—freedom.

Specie requires submission. Ignorance gave it power; barbarity made it king; oppression made it master. Long ages of tyrants have made it the autocrat of privileges and the enslaver of men.

Let us understand what the term paper money signifies. We may reach its affirmative meaning by showing what it is not. It is not individual bankers' paper, nor corporate bank paper, nor State bank paper; for neither of these are money; they are but representatives of money. It is paper issued by a sovereign power capable of declaring what shall constitute money, and by that power made a legal tender for all debts, dues and obligations, public and private. It is issued under the seal, guarantee and sovereignty of a Government acknowledging no superior but God, and no responsibility but to the people who constitute it. Money thus created and heralded as the sovereign measure of values, circulated under the standard flag of the free, by the plaudits of a great and an independent people, is the paper money I recognize. The greenback is its type. The United States issues it.

Specie requires submission, because the individual few who are rich control it. Everything which gives monopolized power to the few creates power. All power is selfish, tyrannical, and often brutal. It always oppresses those who are too weak or too timid to resist it. Specie never has, and never can be, mined in quantities to meet the demands of a free or an enterprising people. Always sought after by the powerful, as a means of controlling men, power has always controlled it. The very fact of its scarcity has made it the autocrat of privileges. All autocracy creates slavery; all slavery is ignorance. Ignorance is menial. The menial is the subordinate tool of the master; masters are individuals, and any system which creates masters creates individualism.

Paper money is the instrument of the free, and the free can create just as much of it as educated freedom demands—just as much of it as equalized rights require to equalize capital and labor, progress and justice. The sneering individualist says you can create it so easy that you will destroy it. The individualist is a selfish scoffer at all liberty. The Tory of England said that the excesses of liberty would destroy liberty. The Government and the progress of the United States is his answer. To admit that the people of the United States cannot regulate and control their own issues of money with safety, is to declare that the people are not capable of self-government. This was the language of individualism with the Tories and aristocracy of George III.'s time. It was a libel on the human race. It was a slander on freedom in government. Individualism propagated it. Aristocracy applauded the lie. Ignorance submitted to it. Education took the slanderer by the throat; the struggle became a contest; the contest ripened into a revolution; Bunker Hill, Trenton, Monmouth, Saratoga, Yorktown were its battles, its victories, its triumph. A century has created a nation. The strength, the intelligence, the power and the wealth of that nation is America's answer to the libel, the slander, the lie.

Specie was the right arm of England, as she said to the colonies, "Submit to taxation without representation or we will burn your towns, annihilate your commerce; Indians shall murder your citizens and scalp the unprotected, and Hessians, hired to kill liberty, shall revel in the blood of your people."

Specie in 1812 was master of the ocean. Arrogant and insolent, it impressed our seamen, insulted our flag, and played the tyrant, until, using our treasury certificates, we showed the British Lion that he must attend to his own ships, mind his own business, and cease all interference with the American flag. Our national character was sustained by our national credit.

Specie, in 1818, 1826, 1833, 1837, 1842, 1857, 1861 and 1873, through the selfish tyranny of capital, made its wicked battles to kill our credit, ruin our manufactures, starve labor and bankrupt business, simply to satisfy the greed of individual sharks who controlled the finances of the country. Our slavery to this individualism of specie capital costs the people more than our present national debt in losses, bankruptcies, failures and stoppages. It added colossal fortunes to individualism, represented by the holders of dead capital. It wrenched, and robbed, and desecrated the life-long energies and earnings of 10,000 people where it benefited a single usurer, and added pomposity to a single capitalist. Millions were trampled into the dust to give superiority to a few hundred hoarders of accumulated fortunes.

In 1861, when our nationality was the stake, when liberty was assailed, when slavery held aloft its flag of battle and defied freemen to the duel between a government of freemen or a government of slavery and servitude, England and gold were the right-hand supporters of rebellion. Then came the test; all monarchical aristocracies sang hosannas to the South; all tyrants prayed for the success of slavery; all landlordism in the British isles covertly, meanly and sneakingly sent their aid to kill liberty in our Government. The same dastardly cowards who paid Indians for scalping women and children, and who hired the butcher Hessians to make battle on the free, were against us. The murderers of Ireland were against us; the despots who rule India were against us; English gold was against us. We had to battle all these elements into utter defeat, or our life as a nation of freemen was ended. We had to battle without gold, and against gold, or be slaves. In fact, from July, 1862, to July, 1865, and January, 1878, gold and silver were never seen; they were not used as currency or treated as money; they were our bitterest enemies; they fought against us, and yet we conquered. The people's money (the young giant, the greenback) fed our soldiers, clothed them, shod them, paid them. It furnished us with arms, ammunition, transit powers, and, in fact, with every element an army of Americans required to sustain American arms, American independence, and American money. Paper money killed coin money. Coin represented the slavery of individualism; paper money represented associated freemen—the people. Coin is the instrument of individualism the world over. England makes it her Achillian shield, but America makes paper money her club of Hercules. England recedes. America progresses. The Lion growls, the Eagle soars aloft. England is a land of "monstrous riches," and "more monstrous poverty." Her lords are the pillars of the throne, the masters of her lands and her people. England represents individualism—aristocracy. America is a land devoted to freedom, progress. Equality, association of all for each, and each for all, is her principle. She is no longer afraid of England; in her heart she despises her—her arrogance, her grasping tyranny, her oppression of the poor, her robberies in Ireland, her plundering vandalism in India, her sneaking meanness, her hypocrisy—and let her understand that America will not submit to any interference with her financial independence. She must keep her hands off, or by the Eternal we will thrash her, break Ireland's yoke, and send India legions to crush out the black-hearted infamy of English rule! Specie is England's god. Her god is her tyrant. Individualism worships it, freemen curse it.

Nationalism, as distinguished from individualism, is the nation as a unit, acting to educate, enlighten, equalize, and Christianize the people in every element of liberty and in every idea of progress. Individualism is the favored few, always seeking to take advantage of money, power, privileges, and monopolies by which the favored shall grow rich at the expense of the subdued, at the expense of labor, at the expense of justice, decency, and humanity.

Paper money belongs to nationality and to the sovereignty of the people. It is comprehensive as the people, as expansive as population, as bountiful as our production, as flexible as our wants, as true as the planets. It is liberty blessing enterprise. It is labor winning its reward. It is industry gathering its harvest. The greenback is its child.

Specie is selfishness; selfishness is individualism. It is limited to the few; it contracts itself to the greed of the usurer; it is niggardly, never supplying the necessities of production. It cramps us most when we need it most. It is false, always flying in the hour of necessity. It is Shylock cursing the liberal. It is the taskmaster to labor, starving it. It is sacrificing industry to greed; gold is its instrument, agent, king.

Choose between liberty and slavery. Would you be protected by the nation, be national. Would you cringe to despots, accept individualism for your support. Would you prosper, cling to the greenback; it has all the strength and all the fidelity of the nation to sustain you. Would you be a slave, bend your knee and give your vote for hard-money individualism.

Would you be free from the taxes now imposed upon you to pay the bounties to national banks, and to exempt a bondholding aristocracy from taxes, you must be national; you must swear by all that is sacred in religion, home, country, and liberty to sustain the national paper money of the nation.

Would you be a slave to usury, to taxes, to national banks, to the Rothschilds, and Belmonts, and Jay Goulds, and to bondholders exempt from taxes—in one word, to an aristocracy of Shylocks—in the name of the usurer's god and the people's misery and degradation, swear that you will sustain gold as the basis of banking, and as the sole legal tender of the nation.

Nationalism is full of blessings. Individualism is full of curses. A free man may make his choice. The hour has come to say which side you will take—with the people, for the nation, or with the usurers for themselves.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD

Emphatic Condemnation of Subsidies.

The Thirty-Second Parallel Road Can be Constructed Without Pledging the Public Credit.

The Texas and Pacific Railroad.

Synopsis of the Minority Report.

The Pacific Railroad Committee of the House having by a vote of seven to six agreed to report the Texas-Pacific bill favorably—two or more of the seven expressing their desire to amend it, or defeat it on the floor—the minority members, Messrs. Morrison, Landers, Luttrell, Blair, Rice and Hewitt, have stated their views in a report of which the following are the material portions:

We are unable to concur in the views of the majority of the committee, but desire the adoption by Congress of such measures as will secure the early construction of a trans-continental railroad for the special use and development of the Southern and Southwestern States and Territories. We believe that this important object can be accomplished without subsidy from the Government, and submit the following views and the accompanying bill for the consideration of the House:

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE SOUTHERN LINE.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Texas, in the year 1871 was authorized by Congress to construct its road and telegraph from Marshall, in Eastern Texas, along and near the thirty-second parallel of north latitude through that State and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona to San Diego, a small city on the Pacific coast, on the bay of the same name, supposed to be well adapted to commercial purposes, and having a population of 4,000 to 5,000 people. The distance from Marshall to San Diego is estimated at 1,574 miles by the authorities of the Texas and Pacific Company, while those of the Southern Pacific Company believe it to be about 100 miles greater.

Failing to meet these provisions, the Texas and Pacific Company has obtained by construction and purchase and has now in operation 445 miles of road, which incloses a parallelogram in Northeastern Texas, having a base of 188 miles, extending from Marshall to Fort Worth, now the western terminus of the road, which only is a part of the trunk line. The remainder of the 442 miles is so located as to secure the more valuable lands granted by the State of Texas, probably because the pecuniary embarrassments of the company were such that its credit was based chiefly upon the granted lands. There is thus remaining of the trunk line between Fort Worth and San Diego a distance of 1,461 miles upon which nothing has been done.

Of the ten years allowed by the charter within which to complete this great work only four remain, and a considerable portion of one of these must elapse before the enactment of the desired legislation is possible. Six-tenths of the time has been consumed in the construction of less than one-eighth of the trunk line, and that at the Easterly terminus, in close connection with the great middle system of roads and the central belt of States, rather than with the Southern system of roads and the Southern States.

The corporation has fallen thus far short of the performance of its undertaking, although it received from the State of Texas the munificent grant of the alternate sections of land for forty miles in width along each side of its line, or eighty miles in all, through the State of Texas, and the same from the United States through the Territories and in California, contingent upon its compliance with the conditions of the grant.

THE SUBSIDY DESIRED MORE THAN THE ROAD.

The credit of the Texas and Pacific Company was seriously impaired before the panic of 1873, and under its influence has still further declined. It admits its pecuniary inability, and assigns that as a reason for its failure to comply with the conditions imposed upon it by law.

In 1875 it applied to Congress for a subsidy of over $60,000,000, in addition to its land grant of 22,000,000 acres in Texas, and 18,000,000 in the Territories, being a money subsidy of twice the probable cost of building and equipping its road.

The application failed. It now changes the form rather than the substance of its request, and asks for a guaranty of interest on $25,000 a mile for the easier and $40,000 for the heavier portions of the road, amounting in all to $38,000,000 at 5 per cent. annually for fifty years.

The bonds of the Government bearing 4½ per cent. interest have recently been sold at par in refunding the national debt. If the public faith is kept and its credit unimpaired, the time is not remote when the Government will be able to effect loans at the rates of 4 and 3½ per cent., as now paid by England. The difference between the interest on these 5-per-cent. Texas and Pacific bonds for fifty years and the ordinary rates which the Government will have to pay on the same amount for the same time, if invested as it might be by the Government for the payment of its own debt, would amount to much more than the cost of the road, so so that the Government would be far better off to build the road and give it to the Texas and Pacific Company outright than to guarantee the interest on its 5-per-cent. fifty-year bonds, according to its request.

The total amount of interest guaranteed by the Government would, if paid into a sinking fund, amount to more than $700,000,000 in fifty years, and we are called upon to guarantee the payment of this sum in addition to the proceeds of the land grant in order to enable the Texas and Pacific Company to complete its road.

We are opposed to all pecuniary subsidies and guarantees by the Government in whatever form for the benefit of railroads at this time, however desirable their construction. In time of peace private capital seeking profitable investment will generally promote commercial development quite as fast as is consistent with safety and permanent prosperity. If the men in charge of a meritorious enterprise command the confidence of capitalists, or even the too easily-won trust of the middle classes, there is no need of calling upon the nation for subsidies or guarantees.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company is a corporation of the State of California.

This corporation has constructed its road to Fort Yuma, on the easterly bank of the Colorado river, in the southwesterly corner of the Territory of Arizona, which it claims to be the authorized point of connection with the Texas and Pacific road, a distance of about 720 miles. Its track has been laid through and over extraordinary natural obstacles, at the expense of about $60,000,000, and the 330 miles of its Southern portion passes through a desert, and for 164 miles nearest the Colorado without an oasis. This road, built to preserve the charter, is of little value except for its anticipated connections with the Southern States, from which, owing to the failure of the Texas and Pacific Company to comply with the requisitions of law, it is now more than 1,200 miles distant.

The road is already there, with its millions of money invested over a sandy waste, upon the good faith of the Government that the Texas and Pacific road should be constructed so as to meet it at the Colorado river; or, in the event of the failure of that corporation so to do, that Congress should take such measures as should enable it to connect with the Southern States of the Union.

POSITION OF THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

The Southern Pacific railroad, by force of the absolute necessity of its securing Eastern connections as soon as possible, in order to preserve its capital, is the only party which has both the power and the disposition to build this road.

The Southern Pacific Company interposed no opposition to the guarantee asked by the Texas and Pacific east of the Rio Grande; but, contemplating the contingency of the denial of guarantee of bonds to the Texas and Pacific Company, and the consequent total collapse of its undertaking, strongly insisted that justice required that they should not be held in check awaiting the result of continued applications by the Texas and Pacific Company for the money or credit of the nation with which to perform what the Southern Pacific was ready to do at once for the land grant alone.

To this bill the Texas and Pacific Company objected. The only argument entitled to weight, in our opinion, was that the Southern Pacific, connecting with the ocean at San Francisco, and having intimate business relations with the Central Pacific railroad, might enter into combinations with that corporation against the public interest, and that the advantages of competition, and of an occasional connection at San Diego, would then be lost.

COMPETITION AND COMBINATION.

We believe that any competition between rival parallel lines of railroad for the same business, which results in a loss to the companies, is sure to end in one of two ways, either in a combination by which the public will lose far more than it has ever gained from competition, or, on the other hand, in the ruinous cutting of rates persisted in until the weaker corporation is ruined, the public is left to the rapacity of the survivor. There is no real protection to the public but in the enforcement of the law of the land. Competition which takes from corporations just compensation is quite as ruinous as combination which gives them too much.

No one can believe that the Texas and Pacific Company would, after constructing its line to the Pacific ocean, long compete with any rival to its own loss or even so as to produce any reduction of rates below the maximum to which the public would submit; or that it would fail to repair its losses or increase its gains whenever an opportunity might offer. We repeat that nothing but the law, and the enforcement of the law by the Government, can protect the public against the love of gain which is inherent in human nature.

The truth is recognized by the bill of the Texas and Pacific Company reported by the majority of the committee, and stringent provisions are therein made to hold that corporation within the bounds of justice and law; very unusual safeguards being provided for in consideration of the fact that the Government itself is really required by the bill to furnish the means necessary to build the road and give to the projectors an additional bonus of $30,000,000. Restrictions and conditions in a charter can be enforced by the machinery of the law against one corporation as well as another.

WILL THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY BUILD THE ROAD?

We submit that it will work great wrong to the Southern Pacific Railroad Corporation, to the great South and Southwest, and to the whole country, to reject this bill and to enact the bill recommended by the majority of the committee in the interest of the Texas and Pacific Company, or to reject this bill under any circumstances. This measure does not antagonize, nor did the Southern Pacific railroad antagonize before us any railroad project, branch, or connection east of the Rio Grande. It simply asks to build 600 miles of railroad, half way from the Colorado to Fort Worth, the present westerly terminus of the Texas and Pacific Company, and simply additional miles in California, to complete the San Diego connection, without any public aid and subject to all reasonable restrictions in the public interest. True, it desires the land grant, but we do not recommend it, because we believe that this corporation will build the road without.

Should the representatives of that portion of the country chiefly to be benefited, not by the subsidy, but by the road, defeat this measure, it is difficult for us to see how they can reasonably expect the rest of the country to consent to burden the taxpayer and embarrass our policy with the most dangerous precedent, which would exhaust the treasury with hundreds of subsidies throughout the unlimited future of the nation.

It would seem impossible for any man to justify himself to his constituency and to his country at large in a course which depletes the treasury when all that is desired is attainable without expense to the people.

VIEWS OF MESSRS. LUTTRELL AND BLAIR.

Both the act and its amendments required as a condition precedent that the work should be prosecuted simultaneously from the eastern and western termini. By the act of 1872 there were required to be completed not less than 100 miles on the main line in Texas and not less than 110 miles in California by May 2, 1878, whereas, in fact, less than 200 miles of the main line have been completed westerly from the Marshall terminus in Texas, and not one mile or even a foot, from San Diego easterly. There has been a marked failure on the part of the company to comply with the terms on which the lands and franchises were granted. This contingency of failure was, by the caution of Congress, foreseen and provided for in both acts, a proviso that—

"Upon failure to so complete it, Congress may adopt such measures as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion."

In this attitude of affairs it represents that it would be a great hardship to be compelled to wait indefinitely upon a disabled company for a connecting road from the East, and asks of us the privilege of continuing its road eastward through the Territories to the Rio Grande and as much farther as might be necessary to meet the Texas roads within six years. Such is the desire for an outlet to the East, which shall admit it to participation in through overland traffic, that it offers that, if its request be granted to construct a line to San Diego harbor in addition to its present ocean terminal, and to prorate on through business with all Eastern connections to San Francisco or other points, and to allow Congress to impose the rates and fares on the line between its Eastern and Western termini at Pacific ports, although asking no aid of the United States which it is not its advantage for Congress to grant. This is rather more than it is within the power of the other company to offer. No good and satisfactory reason is found why this proposition should not be promptly and cheerfully accepted.

FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT.

Two propositions are before us looking to that end. One of them, the Texas and Pacific, seeks to retain its land grant from the United States, amounting to 18,000,000 acres, to obtain two years' additional time, and a special and extraordinary grant of the credit of the nation in the form of an indorsement upon $38,750,000 of the company's bonds, pledging it to the payment of 5 per cent. gold interest for fifty years.

The other, the Southern Pacific, asks only our sanction to continue its road eastward across the Territories within the same time, but without any other or further assistance than the contiguous grant of lands now at the disposal of Congress.

Which of these two propositions as guardians of the public interest can we adopt? Which of these two candidates, as practical business men, ought we to intrust with this undertaking? We should select the proposition most favorable to the good of the people. It would seem that by the charter the grant of land along the thirty-second parallel line in the Territories was made double that of the pioneer line by the forty-first parallel, as if in lieu of future aid in money or credit.

Were we administering our own private business could we for a moment hesitate between these offers, one of which, besides being undeserved favor, involves grave responsibilities, dangerous precedent and great risks, while the other avoids all commitments, all doubtful policy, and insures all its proffered benefits within the same time without the risk of a dollar of the people's money or credit? We conceive we are not here as the almoners of the bounty of the Government to its citizens or corporations, but as guardians of the public welfare and trustees of its property and credit of the nation, sworn to obey the constitution and protect the best interests of the people, and in this view we cannot concur in the report of the majority, which proposes to grant a subsidy or guaranty of $38,750,000 of the people's money or credit to a corporation.

ANTI-SUBSIDY VIEWS OF MR. MORRISON.

The Texas and Pacific Railroad Company seeks to obtain the guarantee of the United States for the payment of the interest on $38,750,000 of fifty-year 5 per cent. bonds, to be issued by said railroad company, and used by it in building and extending its railroad from Fort Worth, in Texas, to the Pacific ocean at San Diego, in California. The road to be constructed is 1,400 miles in length; the bonds to be issued amount to $27,678 per mile; and the interest guaranteed to be paid by the United States, used as a sinking fund, and invested in Government bonds bearing the same rate of interest, would pay $300,000,000 of the public debt.

POWER OF CONGRESS DOUBTFUL.

Has Congress the power to authorize the coveted guarantee? If it has, then power has been conferred upon Congress to make gifts of the public moneys and public property to private corporations and individuals. Has any such power been granted by the constitution, or is it necessary to the execution of any power that it is granted?

This railroad, when built, will be the private property of the shareholders. It will be a military and post-road in the same sense, and to the same extent, and none other, that all other railroads of the country over which the Government may transport its mails, troops or supplies for reasonable compensation, are military and post-roads. It is submitted that the power has not been conferred upon Congress to make the United States a party in such an enterprise by subscription to its capital stock; or more, to authorize the construction of the road out of the resources of the people to be made a gift to the railroad company.

The attempt to derive such power, the power to build and give away a railroad from the power to establish military and post roads, is, in the opinion of the undersigned, an attempt to prevent the obvious purpose of a power intended for the public good to private ends. The United States are bound to provide for the general defense, but it does not follow that they may construct or operate a railroad for the exclusive benefit of a private corporation, because they may ultimately and in some possible contingency want to use it for a military purpose, any more than they may go into partnership with a stock raiser because horses are necessary in war. The United States have power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce between the States, but it does not follow that they may indorse the notes of a shipbuilder or merchant by way of stimulating and encouraging business. The undersigned is unable to perceive any distinction in principle between these cases and the demand of the projectors of this railroad for a loan of the Government credit to the extent of many millions, with which to prosecute private speculation.

DANGER OF SUBSIDIES.

The railroad company which asks for this enormous appropriation of credit presents no claim upon the public which entitles it to exemption from the general rule. The enterprise is essentially a private one, and the company has already received from the United States and the State of Texas a sufficient basis of credit to have built the road, had its assets been prudently managed.

The undersigned is not unmindful of the fact that at a later period a different rule of construction prevailed from that which in the earlier days of the republic, and which is now here insisted upon.

Undelegated power is necessarily unregulated and unrestrained. Power usurped never was and never will be honestly administered.

But it is submitted that this belief affords no sufficient justification for the guarantee and subsidy asked. For were it tendered, as it is not, that this enterprise is essentially of the Southern character with which it is attempted to be stamped, no reason can be built upon that fact which may not be urged with equal force as a reason why the Government should equalize between the lately contending sections all the losses resulting from "our unfortunate civil disturbances."

RECORD OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The statement of the majority that the Government of the United States, in view of the quantity of lands given to it by the Southern States, has been unjust to the South in the bestowal of bounties, is believed to find its refutation in the character of the men who before the war represented that section. They were too sensitive as to the rights of their section to be satisfied with less than was rightfully theirs. The undersigned is not advised as to how the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company acquired the franchise and right of way by which it is authorized to construct its railroad from Fort Worth to El Paso, in the State of Texas, whether by grant from the State of Texas or by purchase from, or consolidation with, the Memphis, El Paso and Pacific Railroad Company, under the fourth section of the act of March 3, 1871, entitled, "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road for other purposes."

In the case of Davis vs. Gray, 16 Wallace, page 203, United States Supreme Court decided that the Memphis, El Paso and Pacific was a surviving corporation, with all its property in possession, and all its franchise unimpaired. This franchise and right of way the company proposes to mortgage to indemnify the Government for its guarantee. It becomes a material fact, therefore, to know if it was ever acquired in either of the modes suggested, or otherwise, and whether it has been forfeited or lost with the Texas land grant. The undersigned expresses no opinion upon this question, which was not considered by the committee, but submits that due regard for the interests of the Government demands that before any guarantee is made, based in part on a mortgage of the said franchise and right of the way, the House should be informed and advised as to the title to what is proposed to be mortgaged.

THE STOLEN PRESIDENCY.

How the Florida Returning Board Carried that State for Hayes—McLin, a Member of the Board, Tells How It Was Done—Northern Republicans the Instigators.

As a member of the State Board of Canvassers of the State of Florida, I feel impelled by a sense of duty to myself and justice to others to make the following statement: At the time the canvass was made I was not conscious of acting otherwise than right and proper. I entered upon the canvass with the conviction that it was my privilege and duty, in a political sense, to give the benefit of every doubt in favor of the Republican party. I felt that, when a question could be decided either way without doing violence to a public sense of justice, it was fairly allowable in politics that I should always lean to my own party, and give my decision in its favor, even at the hazard of straining a point. At no time did I feel that I occupied the position of a Judge charged with the duty of a strict and nice weighing and balancing of all the evidence presented. Looking back now to that time, I feel that there was a combination of influences that must have operated most powerfully in blinding my judgment and swaying my action. I had been for many years, and was at the time of the canvass, a very active partisan. I sincerely thought that our State and the nation would suffer irreparable injury if the Democratic party were to obtain the Presidency, and the policy of hatred to the negro, and those who had been the friend of the negro should obtain control at Washington. It was the common and unanimous talk, also, that the very existence of the men in the South who had upheld the Republican party depended upon the election of Mr. Hayes. Mr. Hayes would sustain them throughout the South, while Mr. Tilden would crush them. I was shown numerous telegrams addressed to Gov. Stearns and others from the trusted leaders of the Republican party in the North, insisting that the salvation of the country depended upon the vote of Florida being cast for Hayes. These telegrams came from those to whom I had been accustomed to defer—the Chairman of the National Committee and the man who, as the nearest personal friend of Mr. Hayes, had conducted the canvass. These telegrams also gave assurance of the forthcoming of money and troops, if necessary, in securing the victory for Mr. Hayes. Following these telegrams, trusted Northern Republicans, party leaders and personal friends of Mr. Hayes, arrived in Florida as rapidly as the railroads could bring them. I was surrounded by these men, who were earnest Republicans, and especially by the friends of Gov. Hayes. One gentleman particularly, Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, was understood to represent him and speak with the authority of a warm personal friend, commissioned with power to act on his behalf. These men referred to the general destruction of the country should Mr. Tilden be elected, the intense anxiety of the Republican party of the North, and their full sympathy with us. I cannot say how far my action may have been influenced by the intense excitement that prevailed around me, or how far my partisan zeal may have led me into error. Neither can I say how far my own course was influenced by the promises made by Noyes that if Mr. Hayes became President I should be rewarded. Certainly these influences must have had a strong control over my judgment and action. Reviewing my action at this distance of time with all calmness, with my ardor cooled and my partisan zeal chilled by the President who has basely betrayed and mercilessly destroyed the Republican party of the South, and crushed the very men who did so much for his election, I am persuaded that the Florida canvass was not conducted with that cool, calm judgment and honest, unbiased decision that should have characterized proceedings involving such vast and important interests. Instead of this, I know that the whole proceedings went through upon the highest wave of political excitement; that partisan feeling, stimulated to the utmost by the most powerful agencies, usurped the place of reason and sound judgment, and political expediency ruled the hour. A large number of precincts were either contested by the Democratic or Republican party. Voluminous testimony was filed, and the lawyers of both parties argued each for their side of the issue that it was the duty of the board to throw out and not include in the count, or retain and count, precincts on the ground of illegality in the conduct of the election or fraud that was charged to exist. The Attorney General of the State and a member of the board had decided that the board had quasi judicial power, and had the right to exclude precincts from the count if the returns were shown to be so irregular, false or fraudulent as to prevent the board from ascertaining from them the true vote. With this view of its duties the board entered upon the work of the canvass with the conviction that they were invested with large discretionary powers which were of a mixed character, political and judicial, the political largely predominating. This had a powerful influence in the exercise of these powers, and, the Republicans having a majority of the board, the canvass was largely in their favor. As the result proved, if the board had acted in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the State defining the powers and duties of the board in reference to throwing out precincts, since rendered, there is no question of the fact that Mr. Tilden would have been entitled to the vote of Florida. Excluding the return from Baker county, which was counted, and which I have since learned from the parties who made it, was a falsely-manufactured return, and including the true return, which corresponded with the precinct returns of that county, would certainly have given the State to Mr. Tilden. Archer precinct No. 2, Alachua county, was included in the count. The fraud committed in this precinct was not shown to the board by the Democratic lawyers, although a contest was made and much attention given to the precinct; but I have recently learned from the Republican leader of that county that, after the returns had been brought to Gainesville, the county seat, 219 votes were added to the returns by the inspectors and clerk of said precinct.

In Leon county, seventy-four small Republican ballots were stuffed into the ballot-box at precinct No. 9, yet it was not made to appear to the satisfaction of the Democratic member of the board that these were false ballots. Subsequent confession shows that these were stuffed into the box. I had seen Joseph Bower, one of the inspectors, have tickets similar to them a few days before the election, and cautioned him against their use unless they were generally adopted, and afterward learned that he had given them up. In Jefferson county, in a certain precinct at which Mr. J. Bell was inspector, 100 votes were surreptitiously added to the ballots and counted. No charge was made as to this fact before the board. The confession of J. Bell, since made to me, discloses the fact that, had the 219 votes fraudulently added to the Archer returns, and the 74 votes stuffed in the box in Leon county, and the 100 votes surreptitiously added in Jefferson county, aggregating 394 votes, been rejected, and the Democratic precincts, which were excluded for irregularity and illegality contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court, been retained and counted, Mr. Tilden would have carried the State. The conclusion, therefore, is irresistible that Mr. Tilden was entitled to the electoral vote of Florida, and not Mr. Hayes. In making this statement my motives will doubtless be questioned by many, but the facts will stand alone as the truth, without any motives to sustain them. I am free to admit that, viewing things as I now do, and remembering that Mr. Hayes was continually inspiring his personal friends and trusted agents by every means in his power to secure for him the electoral vote of Florida and Louisiana, and believing it to have been a conscious wrong on his part done with the knowledge that he had not been elected, as his subsequent repudiation of Gov. Packard, whose title was bound up in his own, and his willful and cowardly desertion of the very men who contributed so largely to his election has shown, my contempt for the pitiable littleness of the man is beyond my power of expression. Mr. Hayes has denied the validity of his own title in denying Gov. Packard's. He has ignored his Florida friends, showing that he believed them unworthy and tainted with a fraud, yet he holds on to the Presidency, which in his own opinion was secured by this very fraud. He has cowardly abandoned and betrayed his Southern Republican friends, through fear of being ousted from an office that he believed he never was elected to by the people. Whatever may be the opinion of men in regard to my motives, I give them facts, and leave my motives to a higher tribunal.

SAMUEL B. MCLIN.

The above was signed and sworn to before the Clerk of Thomas county, Ga.

SHOOTING STARS.

What They Are and How Their Brilliancy Is Caused.

From the recent work on "Popular Astronomy," by Prof. Simon Newcomb, of the Naval Observatory at Washington, we take the following explanation of the phenomena of shooting stars so often observed in the heavens:

"It is now universally conceded that the celestial spaces are crowded with innumerable minute bodies moving around the sun in every possible kind of orbit. * * * Of the nature of the minuter bodies of this class nothing is certainly known. But, whatever they may be, the earth is constantly encountering them in its motion around the sun. They are burned by passing through the upper regions of our atmosphere, and the shooting star is simply the light of that burning. * * * The question which may be asked at this stage is, 'Why are these bodies burned? Especially how can they burn so suddenly and with so intense a light as to be visible hundreds of miles away? These questions were the stumbling-block of investigators until they were answered, clearly and conclusively, by the discovery of the mechanical theory of heat. It is now established that heat is only a certain form of motion; that hot air differs from cold air only in a more rapid vibration of its molecules, and that it communicates its heat to other bodies simply by striking them with its molecules, and thus setting their molecules in vibration. Consequently, if a body moves rapidly through the air, the impact of the air upon it ought to heat it, just as a warm air would, even though the air itself were cold. The result of theory has been experimentally proved by Sir William Thomson, who found that a thermometer placed in front of a rapidly moving body rose one degree when the body moved through the air at the rate of 125 feet per second. With higher velocities, the increase of temperature was proportioned to the square of the velocity. * * *

This result is in exact accordance with the mechanical theory of heat. To find the effective temperature to which a meteoroid is exposed in moving through our atmosphere, we divide its velocity in feet per second by 125; the square of the quotient will give the temperature in degrees. Let us apply this principle to the case of the meteoroids. The earth moves in its orbit at the rate of 98,000 feet per second; and, if it met a meteoroid at rest, our atmosphere would strike it with this velocity. By the rule we have given for the rise of temperature, the meteroid would practically encounter a temperature of nearly 600,000 deg. This is many times any temperature ever produced by artificial means. If, as will be commonly the case, the meteoroid is moving to meet the earth, the velocity and, therefore, the potential temperature will be higher. We know that the meteoroids which produce the November showers move in a direction nearly opposite that of the earth, with a velocity of twenty-six miles per second, so that the relative velocity with which the meteoroids meet our atmosphere is forty-four miles per second. By the rule we have given, this velocity corresponds to a temperature of between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 deg. We do not mean that the meteoroids are generally heated up to this temperature, but that the air acts upon them as if it were heated up to the point mentioned; that is, it burns or volatilizes them in less than a second, with an enormous evolution of light and heat, just as a furnace would if heated to a temperature of 3,000,000 deg. It is not at all necessary that the body should be combustible; the light and heat of ordinary burning are nothing at all compared with the deflagration which such a temperature would cause by acting on the hardest known body. * * * And, as the whole operation is over in a second, we may imagine how intense the light must be."

Feeding the Dead.

A large number of Chinese—ten or twelve wagon-loads—went out to the city cemetery yesterday to feed the spirits of their dead, taking with them a quantity of roast pork and such other articles as a well-regulated spirit of the Chinese persuasion is expected to relish. The food was placed upon the graves, and over each grave was poured a bottle of whisky—spirit to spirit. A number of tramps stood among the spectators, and seemed much grieved at the waste of the fluid. They made up their minds to get even by securing the food after the Chinamen left, but the latter have by experience grown smart, and, when they had given the spirits a reasonable length of time to secure a square meal, they loaded up their victuals and brought them back to town.—Sacramento Record-Union.

IN Sweden, 1,500,000 persons—about one-half the population—annually consume 140 to 170 pints of spirits each. By their indulgence in strong drinks the Swedes have deteriorated in stature and physical strength; new diseases have appeared, and old ones have increased fearfully.

Robin Hood's Miracle.

Fair, fair was the forest of Sherwood in the days of Robin Hood; long were the summers that [illegible] the forests with green, and bright [illegible] autumns that browned the thickets and coverts from which the merry hunters, clad in Lincoln-green, started the deer. The silver horns of Robin Hood's merry men divided in the morning, and their notes were lost in the great [illegible] forest, but they blended again at evening, echoing at first from afar and then drawing near.

Then merry were the tales of the hunters, as the red moon rose to the dusky shadows, and poured her light over the forest like a silver sea.

Robin Hood performed a most wonderful miracle in his day.

Perhaps, although you may not think it so wonderful after all.

We will tell it to you, as a very old ballad told it to us.

One day, Robin, being in a merry mood, took it into his head to go into the King's highway in the disguise of a friar. He put on hood, gown, crucifix, and beads, and walked off slowly, looking very demure and woe-begone.

He had not gone far, when he met two lusty priests, clad all in black, and riding gallantly along.

"Benedict!" he said. "Have pity on a poor friar, who has been wandering since morning, without meat or drink."

"In the name of the virgin," said one of the priests, "we cannot help thee. We've been robbed, and haven't a penny to help ourselves."

Robin laid hold of the priest's robes and drew him from his horse. Robin was so stout a man that the priest could not resist, and when he commanded the other priest to dismount, he dared not disobey him.

"You say you have no money,' said Robin. "Neither have I."

"You know how to pray?" said Robin.

"Yes," said the priests.

"Then let us all fall on our knees, we three together, and for money we will pray earnestly, and we will see what Heaven will send.'

The priests knelt down.

"Now, pray,' said Robin.

They prayed very dolefully. At last they negan to weep and wring their hands. Then Robin began to dance.

The priests' prayer became more doleful than ever. But Robin said—

"Pray! pray!"

They prayed a very long time.

"Now put your hands into your pockets, and see if you have received any answer to your prayers.'

The first priest felt in his pockets, then rolled up his eyes very solmenly and said—

"Nothing'

"Let me feel,' said Robin.

The priests now looked more troubled than ever.

Robin searched the pockets of one and drew forth a purse heavy with gold.

"What an answer to prayers!' said Robin, and he searched the other, and found another purse.

The two priests were struck dumb—what could they say? If they had spoken truly at first, here indeed was a miracle! The old ballad says they "sighed wonderous heavy.'

"You have prayed well,' said Robin, encouragingly, seeing their dejected looks. "Here are five hundred pounds. Now we will divide it.'

And divide it he did. He gave each priest fifty pounds for praying so well, and kept the rest himself. But the two priests did not seem very much pleased with Robin's division and liberal present but rode away looking more woeful than ever.

'Always speak the truth,' said Robin to the two priests, as they departed, and we have a sort of suspicion that if they had spoken the truth about their money to the bold outlaw, as good priests ought, the miracle would not have been so great.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens, and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health. but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Fashion Fripperies.

Olive and blue are worn together with good effect.

Scarf drapery is quite novel, and will be popular.

Street basques are increased in length this season.

Blush pink is a fashionable color for full-dress bonnets.

A perfect corset is indispensable to a perfectly fitting dress.

The most fastidious women wear hosiery to match their dresses.

New veils are narrow black net pieces to be worn like a mask veil.

The real Roman pearls are the beads most used by stylish milliners.

The Ulster will be the most fashionable garment in linen for summer traveling purposes.

Evening toilets are all made Princesse or Empress robes, and the trains are fully a yard long.

A novelty for summer dresses is colored linen in open patterns like lace or brocade.

A moderen costume of fine cambric or percale is as pretty and eleborate in its way as one of silk.

In all goods, both foreign and American, there is a marked improvement in the quality and finish.

Brocaded grenadines of two colors, or two shades, are among the richest dresses shown for summer.

Neat and pretty dresses for young ladies and school girls are made of the hair striped summer silks.

The styles in millinery are so varied and many this season that out of the hundreds displayed no two look alike.

One of the pretiest novelties brought out in millinery are flowers whose petals are formed of thin flakes of mother-of-pearl.

Mastic gray (putty color), with green, is one of the most popular combinations in spring suits sent over by French modistes.

The dress of the colored hosiery are very much improved, the colors being both faster and better in point of vividness and variety of shades.

The latest fancy in overdresses is that of making a vest with a coat that is lengthened behind to form a polonaise, yet preserves the simple outlines of gentlemen's coats.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumania, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and villiage on this continent. Sameple bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Farm for Sale.

DELIRIUM TREMENS.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Come, listen awhile to me, my lad,
Come, listen to me for a spell!
Let that terrible drum
For a moment be dumb,
For your uncle is going to tell
What befell
A youth that loved liquor too well.

A clever young man was he, my lad,
And with beauty uncommonly blessed,
Ere with brandy and wine
He began to decline,
And behaved like a person possessed;
I protest
The temperance plan is the best.

One evening he went to a tavern, my lad,
He went to a tavern one night,
And, drinking too much
Rum, brandy and such,
The chap got exceedingly "tight;"
And was quite
What your aunt would entitle a "fright."

The fellow fell into a snooze, my lad;
'Tis a horrible slumber he takes—
He trembles with fear,
And acts very queer;
My eyes! how he shivers and shakes
When he wakes,
And raves about horrid great snakes!

'Tis a warning to you and to me, my lad,
A particular caution to all—
Though no one can see
The viper but he—
To hear the poor lunatic bawl,
"How they crawl!
All over the floor and the wall!"

Next morning he took to his bed, my lad,
Next morning he took to his bed;
And he never got up,
To dine or to sup,
Though properly physicked and bled;
And I read
Next day the poor fellow was dead.

You've heard of the snake in the grass, my lad
Of the viper concealed in the grass;
But now you must know,
Man's deadliest foe
Is a snake of a different class;
Alas!
'Tis the viper that lurks in the glass."

MR. PERKINS.

Mr. and Mrs. Peregrine Paret, Peregrine junior, and Miss Grace Paret, sat at breakfast in their pleasant dining-room overlooking the garden, the avenue, the base-ball ground, and straight across the river to the steeples and high chimneys that loomed through the mist hanging over the great busy metropolis. It had been Mrs. Paret's boast that she had the finest view from her front windows of any house in Riverview, and that not one unseemly blot rested upon the landscape. So that it became a sore thing to her when her husband leased a big lot in the direction of the water to a man by the name of Perkins, who got a lot of old boards together and reared a kind of work-shop there, from which he emerged at various times in the day, sometimes in his shirt sleeves, and again in a leather apron and queer cap; if the weather was inclement, perhaps he wore a woolen jacket, and at this season of the year his pantaloons were generally thrust in his boots. The man, as Mrs. Paret justly observed, evidently belonged to the working class, and she had no objection to Mr. Paret's hiring him to superintend the various repairs necessary that spring in their household, but she did strongly object to the peculiar manner of the man; it was not so much that he had dared to use his own judgment about the wall paper, but he had actually appealed to Grace, to her daughter, to support him in his choice, and Grace, in her thoughtless way, had stood there in the hall talking with this man Perkins—talking, smiling, blushing. Why, Grace could not have shown more attention to the Grand Duke himself than she had to this paper-hanger.

"The impudence, the unparalleled impertinence," said Mrs. Paret, "of a paper-hanger, an ordinary paper-hanger, daring to intrude his choice of material, and actually using a pale gray ground instead of the shade I ordered!"

"But, mamma," said Grace, "you said yourself that it was the prettiest, after it was on the wall."

"That has nothing to do with it," said Mrs. Paret, waving her hand, and majestically disposing of her daughter's plea—"nothing whatever to do with it. It's the principle of the thing, Grace; the idea of an ordinary paper-hanger—"

"I don't think he's altogether ordinary, mamma," said Grace. "You must allow yourself that he's a little extraordinary, he's a kind of Admirable Crichton. I'm sure I never saw such skill in my life in hanging the curtains; and hung they would never have been if our people had been left to manage them. He just climbed the ladder, Peregrine," added Grace, turning to her brother, "and took the great, clumsy things in his arms, gave a twist or two here, a tack or two there, a push up and a push down, and the whole thing was lovely!"

"Hum," said Peregrine junior, tugging at the few wisps of hair he called a mustache—"hum—a—yes—no doubt; but there's such a thing as fellows being too confoundedly brisk, you know. Fellow's good enough, no doubt, in his way capital mechanic, all that sort of thing; but hang it, you know, fellow must keep in his own groove. Watkins says to me yesterday, 'See fellow over there sawing board?' And I says, 'Yes.' And says Watkins, 'Fellow wants to join our boat club.' 'No?' says I. 'Fact,' says Watkins. 'Case of blackball,' says I. And it was; club couldn't stand that sort of thing, you know—kill it quicker'n lightning."

"That's the reason you lose every race," said Grace. "Mr. Perkins is a better oarsman than any one in the club."

"Possible," drawled Peregrine. "Plenty clubs glad to get him, no doubt, but we decline the honor. If precedent is 'stablished that sort, no knowing what'll be the consequence."

"Peregrine is right," said Mrs. Paret. "'A place for everybody, and everybody in his place,' is my motto; and one thing is very certain, that ramshackle old barn over there is ruining our property. I told you, Mr. Paret, what would be the result when you leased him the land."

Mr. Paret said nothing; his half-shut but keen eyes had at first rested upon the face of his daughter, and an expression of eager anxiety, which was very rare with him, had now given way to the usual grim composure of his features. He was a very quiet man, and would sit for a whole evening with his head up against the wall, never once hazarding a remark of his own, but contenting himself apparently with the conversation that went on about him. His extreme reticence had gained for him a certain reverence when he did happen to speak. A more voluble man might be allowed to run on unnoticed, or he might be contradicted or differed with, but Mr. Paret's words, like everything rare, were held in consideration.

On this pleasant morning of which I speak he said nothing. For a brief moment a keen glance, almost haggard in anxiety, had rested on the sweet face of his daughter; but he did not reply to his wife. Two or three days later on, [illegible] however, made a remark which caused considerable confusion in the little circle about him.

This time it was the evening meal, and the subject was again Mr. Perkins. Spring had come, the bitterness of the frost had melted in the ardor of the sun, and the consequence was mud! The peculiar yellow clay that formed the upper strata in the geological classification of Riverview became very noticeable that night in the Paret household. The heavy boots of Mr. Paret were clogged with it, the gaiters of Peregrine junior were flecked here and there, and the natty, arched, high-heeled shoes of Miss Grace, as they snuggled under the dining-table, showed very plainly the sinuous designs of the [illegible] clay.

"Hum-s-" drawled Peregrine, "what's all this about fellow with board? Watkins home to-day, and says days of chivalry coming back again. Certain lovely lady's progress impeded by mud—along comes knight with board on shoulder—throws it down—lady walks over, smiles sweetly, says pretty words of gratitude; result, all fellows in Riverview hunting for boards."

"I hate that Watkins," said Grace, a hot color leaping into her rounded cheeks, her blue eyes flashing indignantly. "If he knew how I despised him, he'd stop persecuting me with his attentions. Nothing could be nicer, mamma, than the way Mr. Perkins helped me over the crossing; it was the most natural thing in the world. You know how muddy it is on that corner by the church. I didn't know how to get across; I was quite in despair, when I saw Mr. Perkins with a board on his shoulder, and in the twinkle of an eye he had thrown it down and made a bridge of it for the passers-by."

"For you, you mean," said Mrs. Paret, sternly. "If it had been some poor old lame beggar woman, he'd have kept his board immaculate. What right has this person to offer you any civility? What right has he to know of your existence—to look at you at all?"

It was at this juncture of the conversation that Mr. Paret spoke. "A cat may look at a King," said Mr. Paret. And these few words of his had the effect of a bomb bursting in the enemy's camp. Mrs. Paret started and stared at her husband, Peregrine's fork paused in mid-air, and even Gracie's eyes grew round in wonder. His opinion had not been asked. The little group, in fact, believed him utterly oblivious and indifferent to the Perkins question, and this singular and trite remark threw consternation in their midst.

But Mrs. Paret rallied sufficiently to stammer out, "A King is not supposed to look at a cat."

And Mr. Paret, who had by this time finished his meal and reached the door of the dining-room, turned upon the threshold, and said, "That depends upon the taste and policy of the King and the character of the cat." With this Parthian arrow he went out and shut the door.

The next day Miss Grace went into the parlor to practice the opening piece for the following Sunday. Miss Grace was the soprano in the aristocratic church on the muddy corner below, and it was generally conceded that for richness and compass the voice of Miss Paret had no peer in Riverview. Mr. Perkins himself in passing the church the day before had paused, with the board on his shoulder, and listened, with his heart in his mouth, to the clear, sweet, ringing notes that fell upon the balmy air of that delicious morning. And very thankful he was that he had waited long enough to be of service to her in any way. "No thanks to me," he had said, while sacrificing his board; "I should have been half a mile ahead if your voice hadn't rooted me to the spot."

"I thought I could get my part better if I tried it in the church," said Grace; "but it was so big and gloomy there, and it's so hard to practice alone; the tenor ought to be there at least."

These words of hers—as, indeed, all her words—remained in the memory of Mr. Perkins, and, on the following morning, while he was superintending the papering of the reception-room on the other side of the hall, and listening to Miss Paret's voice from the parlor, he became more and more convinced that she really did need the assistance of the tenor; the rest could be got along without, but the tenor was indispensable. He'd been humming to himself all the time, but of what service was this to Miss Paret? On the spur of the moment he walked across the hall and through the open door into the parlor. He saw that her color rose, and that she turned upon the piano-stool and quickly confronted him, and for a moment he wished that he had never learned to sing. If this impulse of his should cost this loveliest and best of God's creatures the least disappointment or even surprise, his epiglottis might as well be the most ordinary in the world—he would never sing again. But her voice held no indignation in it, nor her face, which was the purest, the gentlest, the most winning of faces.

"Shall I call mamma?" she said.

"Oh, no," he replied; "the papering is going on nicely; but I thought, if you'd allow me, I'd just supply the tenor for you. I can see that the absence of it is a great impediment. If you wouldn't mind, Miss Paret, I think you could make out with my voice for the time."

And he began, without further preamble, to sing the solo. Miss Paret followed him with the piano accompaniment, her musical soul in her ears. Oh, how vastly, immeasurably superior was his voice to the tenor she had been accustomed to—to any tenor, any voice! Presently he ceased, and trembling, but sweet, she took up the refrain. Then he joined in with her, and, for about ten minutes or so, the paper-hangers on the other side of the corridors, the maid-servant in the kitchen, and the man-servant in the hall listened, open-mouthed, to these seraphic strains that seemed straight from paradise. Unfortunately, they soared up into the sitting-room above, where Mrs. Paret was making up her domestic accounts, and so engrossed was she that she did not at first realize that a man's voice was mingling with that of her daughter. When she did, she made up her mind it was Mr. Barnes, the church tenor. But Mrs. Paret was a musical critic, and very soon concluded those full, rich notes did not belong to Mr. Barnes. Besides, he had gone to the city; she saw him go to the train half an hour before. Who could it be? The voice was certainly a strange one—wonderfully fine, but strange. Mrs. Paret dropped her book, put her pencil behind her ear, and went down into the parlor. Imagine her horror, her dismay, her indignation to find that wonderfully fine but strange voice in the possession of Mr. Perkins! And to find her daughter, the acknowledged queen of Riverview society, deigning to mingle her voice with his and accompany him while he sang.

The poor girl hung her head when she saw her mamma. She knew there was a bit of [illegible] in the situation; it was only the impulsive kindness of Mr. Perkins and the yearning for harmony which haunts a musical soul. If she could only tell her mamma—explain to her Mr. Perkins' motive and her own! But she could see that Mrs. Paret was growing redder and redder; that her usually rubicund complexion was deepening to a rich mahogany; that she was swelling up, so to speak, with rage and indignation.

Mr. Perkins could see this for himself, and hastened to apologize.

"It was merely a musical intrusion, madam," he said. "I saw that your daughter needed a tenor, and, without pausing to think, offered it to her."

"[illegible]" echoed the exasperated matron. "I'm about sick of Mr. Perkins and his kindness. He'd oblige me by taking it and himself out of the house, and never entering its doors again in any capacity or under any circumstances."

Mr. Perkins bowed his head meekly, went over to Grace, and took her trembling hands in both his own for a half second, bent his head again reverently to the haughty stare of Mrs. Paret, then went across the hall, gave a few directions to the workmen there, and walked out.

That night Mrs. Paret beamed refulgently at the head of the table. She was glad now that it happened as it did. She was rid of that intolerable Mr. Perkins at once and forever.

"The impudence of your man Perkins," she said to her husband, "overreached itself to-day. I ordered him out of the house."

"You did!" said Mr. Paret, putting down his knife and fork, and looking at the partner of his bosom. "And what did he say?"

"Say? What could he say?"

"What did he do?"

"Do? What could he do? He went out as he was ordered, and I've forbidden his entering the doors again in any capacity."

A grim smile distorted the features of Mr. Paret. He had not smiled much of late, so that this working of the muscles was really a distortion.

"I suppose he'd oblige you if he could," said Mr. Paret. "I've found him a very kind and accommodating fellow; but he can't help himself in this case."

"In what case, Mr. Paret? What do you mean?" said his wife, who saw that his chin was shaking painfully, and his hands trembled on the arms of his chair.

"A man can't very well stay out of his own house," said Mr. Paret. "Everything here belongs to Mr. Perkins—house, furniture, and all. He thought, perhaps, if it was kept quiet I might tide over; but it's no use, Maria. I'm broken up hand and foot. We'll have to go back to the farm."

Then Mr. Paret's head fell back powerless. He was carried to bed.

Shortly after, Peregrine junior came in, with that draggled look that characterizes a cock that has been beaten upon his own dunghill.

"Here's a go," he said. "Perkins black-balled at the club, and turns out that he owns the whole concern—boat-house, water-front, and all."

But nobody minded Peregrine junior. To do Mrs. Paret justice, she was a true, staunch woman in time of trouble.

"We'll go back to the farm, dearie," she said to the poor, distracted broker. "Thank God, that's mine! Nobody can touch that. Only get well and strong, Peregrine, and I'll be content to spend the rest of our days there. Of course, it will be a blow to Grace to leave Riverview; but she's a good girl."

"Yes. God bless her!" said Mr. Paret.

But I don't believe that Grace will leave Riverview with the old folks. That night as she sat alone in the parlor, her tears falling fast upon the keys, sad thoughts and heavy fears distracting her thoughts from the melody, all at once a big broad-shouldered shadow loomed up between her and the moonlight.

"I had to come in at the window," he said, "for you know I've been forbidden the doors. I came to beg you to forgive my blundering idiocy of to-day."

"It doesn't matter," said Grace, with a sweet, sad dignity that made Mr. Perkins feel as if he'd like to get down on his knees to her. "We know now that everything here is yours—papa has told us. We are going back to the farm, and then you can come and go as you like."

"That's all nonsense," said Mr. Perkins, devouring with his eyes the sweet, sad face beneath his own; "your father will pull through yet, and, as for the rest, there's only one thing in the house of any value to me, and that's so priceless and precious and unspeakably dear that I can't get courage to plead for it."

But I think he did, for I met Watkins myself the other day, and he said he was going to Mexico, the country was going to the dogs, and the franchise wasn't worth a cent. Too much power was given to monopolies. In Riverview alone was a case where one fellow, and an ordinary fellow at that, had gobbled up everything—boat-club championship, a woman that was next door to an angel, and all. "You knew her," pursued Watkins—"Paret's sister Grace; and you knew him, that masquerading chap with board. What's his name?—Perkins!"—Harper's Weekly.

JACK FEATHERLY'S ADVENTURE.

Thrilling Experience of a Hunter in the Adirondack Mountains.

[From an Allentown (Pa.) Letter.]

Jack Featherly lived in a log cabin at the base of one of the mountain ranges of the Adirondacks. He had been brought up in the woods from infancy, and the rocks, trees and flowing water were his lesson books, for in that desolate region schools were out of the question. He was the son of a guide who conducted hunters and pleasure parties over the lakes and through the woods of the Shattagee region, and, by the time he was 17 years of age, the boy was able to act as a guide himself. His eyes were so keen that he could tell at a glance, by the traces upon the dry leaves, whether a bear, deer or panther had passed by. The forest was his home, and he could lie down miles from home and sleep as sweetly upon his couch of moss or leaves as the best housed youngster on his more civilized bed. In the summer of 1878 he guided a party a distance of forty miles to the first of the chain of mountain lakes, where his father waited for them with canoes. From that point they had no further need of him, and, the same afternoon, he started on his return home. He had passed over ten miles of the way when night came on, and, taking his hatchet from his belt, he quickly put up a "lean-to."

It did not take Jack long to build his shelter, and, when it was completed, he sat down upon it and ate some cold meat and corn bread which he had in his haversack. When he had finished his supper he gathered a quantity of moss and leaves for a bed, spread them upon the floor of his rude tent, wrapped his blanket around him and laid down. The croaking of the frogs, the lay of the whippoorwill and the lapping of the river close at hand were familiar sounds and quickly lulled him to sleep. His rifle, loaded and ready for use, was at his side, and his knife in its sheath hung upon a short, broken branch above his head. Though he was but 17 years old, Jack Featherly was as strong as most men, and quite able to take care of himself, for his courage was certainly equal to his strength.

It might have been 3 o'clock in the morning, just before the light came, when he was awakened by a strange feeling of uneasiness, and gradually became aware of the presence of some large, soft body lying close to his own. He could hear the heavy respirations of an animal's breath, and even felt them on his neck. Whether the creature was ferocious or otherwise he could not tell, but certainly some wild visitor was lying close to him and enjoying the friendly warmth of his body.

Was Jack frightened? Put yourself in his position and tell me what you think about it. My opinion is that, as brave as he was, he would have been better pleased with a different bed-fellow. Not that Jack knew there was anything to fear from his strange neighbor, but the suspense was something even more uncomfortable than fear.

Painfully still he lay, without moving hand or foot, for he could not tell what deadly assault the slightest alarm might provoke. But this inaction became too horrible. Human nerves could not bear it.

Cautiously he reached out for his rifle; his fingers clutched upon it; inch by inch he dragged it toward him till the barrel lay across his breast and he could touch the lock. His thumb pressed the hammer, but even now he dared not cock it, for the cock might startle his bedfellow and force a battle before he was prepared.

Sooner or later, however, it must come, and necessity compelled him to venture. Stiffening his muscles, and drawing in his breath, he thrust back the hammer of the lock, and the sharp click, click, sounded fearfully distinct in the dead silence. The wild animal make a quick movement, but Jack lay like a stone, and in a moment his unknown enemy seemed asleep again.

Would the morning never come! Jack dared not fire in the darkness, for if he missed his aim, and the creature proved indeed a beast of prey, there was no chance for him. With his finger upon the trigger and his hand upon the lock, he waited in aching anxiety for the first light to show him the outlines of his dreaded companion.

Minutes seemed hours. Never before in his life had the boy passed such an hour.

His mind was terribly active, and vivid memories of all he had ever done, and regrets for every misdemeanor; with wild thoughts of what the end of this adventure might possibly be, peopled his vigil of danger till it became a nightmare.

There, close to him, stretched out in an attitude of repose, lay a full-grown panther. Carefully and silently the boy drew his rifle forward a little more. What if the cap should not explode? What if the rifle was not properly loaded? He raised his right arm gradually until the muzzle was within an inch of the panther's ear. He pressed the trigger, and at the instant of discharge he was on his feet with his hunting-knife in his hand ready to fight for his life. But there was no need of the knife now.

The bullet had crashed through the brain of the prostrate beast, killing him on the spot. Jack's danger was over; but even now, whenever he tells the story, he says he can feel the cold sweat gather on his flesh as it did that terrible morning in the Adirondack woods when he lay in bed with the panther.

Animal Life in the Colorado Desert.

The desert is not a solitude; life abounds in it; beasts, birds, reptiles and insects occur in quantity surprising to one who knows the scarcity of surface water. Rabbits, hares and coyotes seem to be the largest animals, but chipmunks, gophers and moles appear to be most abundant; the ground is honey-combed with their homes. All of them are found as far as twenty or more miles from any known water. In other parts of California, the presence of quails indicates proximity to water; this is not so on the desert, where large flocks are found very far from water. The buzzing of honey-gathering flies or bees lulls to sleep him who reposes under the palo-verd, or iron-wood. Mocking birds and other songsters enliven the vicinity of water and ruby-throated humming birds suck its flowers. Most of these desert denizens are of nocturnal habits; the hot sun drives them to shade by day. Ravens and crows seem to live on lizards, which in turn live on flies and ants that are abroad only by daylight. But on moonlight nights the others turn out in vast numbers. Reptiles are numerous, but we have never heard of anyone being hurt by them. A tortoise is common here, which grow among rocks and sand to a weight of twenty-five pounds, and is eaten by some Indians.

Poor, But Not Proud.

"I'm as poor as free-lunch turtle soup—but I don't glory in it," said a weak-eyed waif of trouble, with a breath like the odor of an old stocking, as he sat down on a bench among the pariahs in Washington Park the other evening.

"Magnificent Moses!" exclaimed a sparse-haired mendicant, whose back hadn't carried a new coat for twenty years, "show me the chap as does, an' he kin take my share cheap."

"Trouble has follered me like a shadder from the cradle, an' there never was a time when I was any more free from misfortune than I am of graybacks this minute, but I don't go round with a tin horn an' a banner tellin' the world I'm poor, do I?"

The crowd edged up around him and listened with open mouths.

"I say I don't flaunt my poverty," he continued. "I'm not proud of it nor puffed up over it like some folks is, an' I don't crow over them as is better off, nor make brags that I have more trials an' less to eat than any other livin' soul."

"No more do I," put in a man with a face that had long been a stranger to water. "I grins and bears it."

"Job's turkey was a fat bird to the side of me, but what's the good of my puttin' on airs? It won't make feathers grow on a station-house plank, will it? An' kin boastin' about my misery put another bean in the soup or give my stomach any more to do? Nary time, it can't. Conceit never put a full spoon to anybody's mouth. Land knows I've got plenty of rope if I wanted to brag, but that ain't my natur."

"Lots more of us can be hit with the same pole," chimed in a thin man with a tight belt.

"Yes, maybe; but if you'll hold your breath you'll say less," resumed the first speaker. "There was Lazarus now; look at him. He was poor enough to be respectable, by long odds. But I discount him, boys—I do, heavy. He had sores that was inticin' to a hull pack of dogs, but you couldn't find a scab on me big enough for a pup to smell of before its eyes was open; an' then agin, you can't prove he didn't own the hounds himself! Do I look able to kick my own dog? Well, I should say not. Poverty, boys, is my best holt. It's the only thing in this world I ever had plenty of; but, as I said before, I don't flaunt it around and glory in it, nor I don't y'arn for any more of it. Poor! You couldn't find fat enough about me to grease a watch!"—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

The Old-Fashioned Rifle.

In the by-gone days of Der Freischutz, rifle-shooting was a very different affair from the routine business now so well known to all of us—thanks to the volunteer movement. The old-fashioned rifleman, Kuno, head-ranger to the Grand Duke of Schloss-Windbeutel, used a rifle as unlike the Martini-Henry or the Snider as could well be imagined. Into the nature of Caspar's gun and bullets it is needless to inquire; but it is perfectly well known how Kuno's weapon was constructed, and what he did with it. It was a heavy grooved rifle, with a rather sharper twist than that now in fashion. Kuno carried with him a quantity of apparatus besides his flint-lock gun. He had two powder-horns, one for loading and the other for priming; he had a store of wadding and of greased circles of leather, and a little hammer. When he loaded his gun he gave his mind to a very serious operation. First of all he wiped out his gun carefully, then poured in his coarse powder and wad, and rammed all down. He next took a greased piece of leather, or, in default of leather, of linen, and placed this over the muzzle of his gun. In this greased disk was laid the old-fashioned spherical bullet—too large to enter the barrel without persuasion. This he applied with the hammer before mentioned, driving the ball by main strength into the muzzle, and then forcing it down with the ramrod. He then primed his gun with some very fine powder, and, if his hand was steady and both flint and steel were in good condition, all went well. Excellent shooting was made with these old rifles, within, of course, a far more limited range than that of the last new improvements. Whatever may be thought of the comparative merits of breech and muzzle loading in the case of infallible artillery, there is little doubt that the breech-loader has, as a small arm, completely superseded its sometime rival.—All the Year Round.

A Celebrated Case.

They have had a funny lawsuit in West Stratford. A resident owned a hen of a fancy breed that strayed upon a neighbor's premises and laid a nest full of eggs. Another hen, belonging to the owner of the land, took possession of the nest and hatched the eggs. Then the two neighbors got into a wrangle about the chickens. They were sold by No. 2 to a third party, whereupon No. 1 got out a writ of replevin, and the case was tried a few days ago, with able counsel and many witnesses. The court decided that the hen that hatched the eggs was the legal mother, and dismissed the replevin suit.—New Haven Palladium.

A Pocketbook Saves a Life.

An unfortunate occurrence took place in the office of Judge I. H. Crawford, Madison, La., yesterday, in which Major George C. Waddill and Mr. Thomas W. Watts were the principals. The difficulty arose about some business affair. The gentlemen were alone at the time, and each says the other fired the first shot. Major Waddill received four wounds from the pistol of Mr. Watts—three in the arm and shoulder, and the fourth ball struck his pocketbook, in his breast pocket, which saved his life. Mr. Watts received a ball in his hip.—Madison Journal.

THE "RANK AND FILE."

BY [illegible].

Oh, blow for the Hero a trumpet,
Let him lift up his head in the morn;
A glory of glories is battle,
It is well for the world he was born.
Let him joy in the sound of the trumpet,
And sun in the world's proud smile;
But what had become of the Hero,
Except for the "rank and file?"

Oh, grand is the Earth in her progress,
In her genius, and art, and affairs;
The glory of [illegible] is [illegible],
Let the great find a joy in their cares.
Let the kings, and the artists, and [illegible]

But what would become of the nation,
Except for the "rank and file?"

And when the brief days of this planet
Are all ended, [illegible] and told,
And the Lord shall appear in His glory,
And shall summon the young and the old,
For the Hero shall sound forth no trumpet
For the great no welcoming smile;
Before the good Lord in his glory,
We are all "the rank and the file."

A Deceptive Patient.

A story is told in the Revue Medicale de l'Est of a patient who lost his life by deceiving his doctor. The man was suffering from lead-poisoning. The physician, oddly named Prof. Forget, prescribed strychnia pills which produced no effect. The dose was increased successively to two, three, five and six pills, without any result. Finally the doctor ordered the patient to take five pills in his presence. The man did so, and died within two hours. After his death all the pills previously prescribed were found secreted behind his bed.

'Tis the tick of the clock at midnight,

  And utter these words in his ear;
'Can ye not watch for one hour,
  And our soul-stirring messenger hear?
We are God's messengers, speeding
  With swift and invisible flight,
And we speak to you best in the silence
  Of the quiet dead-hush of the night.
Remember, we carry our message
  Of what we are doing on earth
To the [illegible] in Heaven,
  Who endowed you with souls at your birth.
What are ye doing, oh, mortals!
  With God's glorious gift of a soul?
But what are your strongest yearnings,
  And what is the longed-for goal?
Pleasure, and power, and riches,
  Leisure and freedom from care—
Is it for these ye are striving?
  Such strivings must end in despair.
Like a butterfly crushed in the grasping,
  So pleasure is crushed when caught,
And power must end in weakness,
  And riches must end in naught;
While indolent leisure lies basking,
  Sleepily, selfishly glad,
Till the adder of conscience stings it
  And the terror drives it mad.
Soon the dawn will streak the horizon
  And herald the fateful day;
Prepare! Lo, the Kingdom of Heaven
  Approaches! Watch and pray!'

The Comforter.

Oh, blessed news, that God Himself is the Comforter. Blessed news that He who strikes will also heal; that He who gives the cup of sorrow will also give the strength to drink it. Blessed news, that chastisement is not punishment, but the education of a Father. Blessed news, that our whole duty is the duty of a child—of the Son who said in His agony, "Father, not My will by Thine be done." Blessed news, that our Comforter is the Spirit, who comforted Christ the Son Himself; who proceeds both from the Father and from the Son; and who will therefore testify to us both of the Father and the Son, and tell us that in Christ we are indeed, really and literally, the children of God, who may cry to Him, "Father," with full understanding of all that the royal word contains. Blessed, too, to find that in the power of the Divine Majesty we can acknowledge the unity, and know and feel that the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are all one in love to the creatures whom they have made—their glory equal, for the glory of each and all is perfect charity, and their majesty coeternal, because it is a perfect majesty; whose justice is mercy, whose power is goodness, its very sternness love, love which gives hope and counsel and help and strength, and the true life which this world's death cannot destroy.—Charles Kingsley.

"Though the Earth be Removed."

The traveler Humboldt gives an interesting account of the first earthquake he witnessed. It was at Cumana, in South America. The first shock came after a strange stillness. It caused an earthquake in his mind, for it overthrew in a moment all his lifelong notions about the safety of the earth. He could no longer trust the soil which up to that day had felt so firm under his feet. He had only one thought—universal, boundless destruction. Even the crocodiles ran from the river Orinoco howling into the woods, the dogs and pigs were powerless with fear. The whole city seemed "the hearth of destruction." The houses could not shelter, for they were falling in ruins. He turned to the trees, but they were overthrown. His next thought was to run to the mountains, but they were reeling like drunken men. He then looked toward the sea. Lo! it had fled; and the ships, which a few minutes before were in deep water, were rocking on the bare sand. He tells us that, being then at his wit's end, he looked up and observed that heaven alone was perfectly calm and unshaken. Many strange things are yet to come upon the world—earthquakes, overturnings, upheavings. But, amid them all, the Book tells us, the Christian shall look up to the heavenly one, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," and to his heavenly home, which cannot be moved.—From "Bible Echoes."

Being Born Again.

A new birth is absolutely necessary. No one can possibly be saved without it. Therefore Jesus told Nicodemus, twice, that he must be born again. As our first birth was necessary to bring us into the world, the second is necessary to bring us into the church of Christ, and fit us for its duties and privileges. No new birth, no true happiness here. No new birth, no heaven at death. But how shall I know that I am born again? If prayer to God becomes natural, and is enjoyed; if we overcome the world, instead of being led away by its follies and fashions; if we hate sin as sin, and strive and pray for deliverance from it; if we love our enemies because Christ commanded it; and love the saints, because they are holy; if we trust in the finished work of Christ, and glory in his cross; if we feel a deep concern for the salvation of others, and are zealous in spreading abroad the truth, that Jesus may be honored; then, beyond a doubt, we are born of God. Beloved, have you these evidences? Have you any of them? Let nothing satisfy you but the knowledge that you are born again.—The Standard.

Rational Belief.

Once there were a couple of men arranging a balloon ascension. They thought they had two ropes fastened to the car, but one of them only was fastened, and they unfastened that one rope, and the balloon started to go up. One of the men seized hold of the car, and the other seized hold of the rope. Up went the balloon, and the man who seized hold of the car went up with it, and was lost. The man who laid hold of the rope was just as sincere as the man who laid hold of the car. There was just as much reason to say that the man who laid hold of that would be saved because he was sincere as the man who believed in a lie because he is sincere in his belief. I like a man to be able to give a reason for the faith that is in him. Once I asked a man what he believed, and he said he believed what his church believed. I asked him what his church believed, and he said he supposed his church believed what he did, and that was all I could get out of him. And so men believe what other people believe and what their church believes, without really knowing what their church and other people do believe.—Moody.

The Defeat of the Turk.

We think that no one can read Wallace's book on Russia, published a year ago—certainly one of the most genuine and thorough books ever written—without concluding that the practical holding of the Christian religion in Russia is very incompetent, if not corrupt. There is no part of the Roman church that would seem to be any more superstitious than the Greek, as it exists in Russia. The clergy are far from being blameless and exemplary men, and the vitalities of Christianity seem to our Protestant notions hardly to be regarded at all. Yet Christianity is held, even in Russia, in such a form that improvement and growth are not only possible but practically secured. There is improvement from century to century. The light of learning grows brighter and brighter. The rule of absolutism is softened. The serfs have been set at liberty, and the logical results of this great act are all in the direction of progress, though the progress be slow. The people have simple wants, but they are comfortable, and in this last great war they have exhibited the most splendid and enduring qualities. And it is to be remembered that they have won their position in the world against the depressing influences of an inhospitable climate and a stingy soil.

The Turk, on the other hand, has had all the advantages of prestige, climate, soil and position; but the Koran has been his sacred book, and Mohammed has been his prophet. Dr. Storrs, in his recent address, characterized him as monotheist, fatalist, fanatic and sensualist. His monotheism has probably not injured him, but the fatalism, fanaticism and sensualism, that have come from his acceptance of Mohammed as the one prophet of the one God, have placed him forever outside of the path of improvement, and only decay and death lie before him. Monotheism, as taught by Mohammed and held by the Turk, forms the basis of a civilization which cannot possibly stand before the aggressive force of a nation which builds upon Christianity—though most incompetently and unworthily. Of course the Turk will not see this, and cannot be brought to admit it, but the world sees it and ought to learn its lesson from it. One nation has its eyes open, and is looking for light in all directions. It is striving to keep abreast of the best civilization of the world. It is sympathetic with freedom and education. The other learns nothing. It sees nothing worthy outside of itself, and is as savage to-day—as remorseless and sensual and intolerant—as in the days of its power and pride. So Russia is to increase until it shall become a great, overshadowing power, and Turkey is to dwindle until she sinks beneath contempt.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for May.

Enormous Prices for Paintings.

Some enormous prices were realized at a recent sale in London, of the collection of pictures formed by the late Mr. Munro. Sir Joshua Reynolds' "Kitty Fisher" brought $3,570, and his portrait of the Hon. Mrs. Stanhope, personifying "Contemplation," was knocked down for $15,300. Wilkie's "Gentle Shepherd" brought only $816, and the pictures of Richard Wilson, believed by many in England to be the finest classical landscape painter of the eighteenth century, sold for a mere song. Then came the productions of Joseph M. W. Turner. Thirty-two drawings, large and small, brought a little over $81,600. The oil pictures, which included "Ancient Italy," "Modern Rome," "Rome from the Oventaine," "Juliet After the Masquerade," "Van Tromp's Gallery," "Avalanche in the Val d'Aosta," and the "Kilgarren Castle," went at prices ranging between $10,500 and $29,700 apiece. Two others sold for over $26,000 each. The nine works in oil produced an aggregate of $211,956, and the grand total for all the Turners sold that day was $293,632. Two undeniably genuine Hogarths, being two of the scenes from the "Harlot's Progress," went cheap, one for $2,650, and the other for $1,590. Two paintings by R. P. Bonington, "The Fish Market," and "The Grand Canal, Venice," sold for $15,300 apiece. The total amount realized was $356,575, the highest ever reached for such a small number of pictures.

A Horse That Wasn't Dead.

A curious case of suspended animation occurred in DeWittville, New York, the other day. A number of teams were drawing bark to the tannery, when suddenly one of the horses in the leading team fell, apparently dead. The road was narrow, and, in order to let the other teams pass, a rope was fastened to the neck of the dead horse, and he was dragged nearly a quarter of a mile and left by the roadside. That evening a collection was taken up by the men engaged about the tannery, for the purpose of buying another horse for the unfortunate teamster, and hearty sympathy and generosity were shown toward the owner of the dead horse. The next morning, when the men went to the stable to feed their teams, the dead horse was found quietly standing in the barn-yard. He was apparently well, with the exception that large patches of skin were worn off his side dragging him along the road.

The Utmost Limit of Indifference.

Two men of this city were out the other day soliciting money for a charitable object. They came to the office of a certain rich man, and hesitated about approaching him. One of the pair finally concluded that he would try it. When he came out his partner asked him what luck. "Not a cent," said the man who had "bearded the lion in his den"—"not a cent. I told him all about the distress of the family, but it was of no use. He was as indifferent as the rear guard of a funeral procession."—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

CURIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC.

Zinc may be hardened to any degree desired by introducing ammonium chloride into zinc while in a state of fusion, 100 to 200 grammes to the kilo.

The huge granite monolith which supports the equestrian statue of Peter the Great, at St. Petersburg, Russia, was rolled from Finland on cannon balls.

A very hard metal, suitable for cutting-tools, is made by adding tungsten to gray iron while in fusion, in the proportion of twenty-eight grammes of the former to 4,077 kilos of the latter.

To remove foreign bodies from the throat, an English naval surgeon recommends blowing forcibly into the ear. Powerful reflex action is produced, during which the foreign substance is expelled.

It has been said that a diamond might be laid on an anvil and struck with a hammer, and, instead of breaking, it would be driven into the solid body beneath it. This is not true, for the jewel is very easily broken, and the thin layers of which it is composed can be divided with a penknife.

A petrified crocodile, forty-six feet in length, has been exhumed near Como station, on the Union Pacific railroad, and shipped to Yale College. The discoverers, M. Carlin, the station agent, and Reed, a section boss, get $2,200 for their find, and a monthly salary of $130 to hunt for the mate of the monster.

The following suggestion will enable one to measure the height of a tree or other standing object near enough for practical purposes: Place a small mirror in a level position on the ground at a little distance from the tree. Then step backward until the top of the tree is reflected in the center of the mirror. The height of the tree equals your height multiplied by the distance of the tree from the mirror, divided by your distance from the mirror.

Under the title of "The Gardener Bird," the London Gardeners' Chronicle gives a description, with an illustrative wood-cut from an original sketch drawn on the spot by Signor Beccari, of a bird which is not only an expert architect, building a nest like the bower bird of Australia, but also a gardener, laying out a garden in front of it. The bird is a native of New Guinea, and makes the nest of the stems of an orchid. In front of the nest a dressed lawn of moss is formed, on which the attentive husband places day by day, for the delectation of his mate, flowers and fruits of bright colors and pleasing flavor.

At a recent meeting of the North Wales branch of the British Medical Association there was a discussion which showed much divergence of medical opinion as to the use of stimulants. In the treatment of pneumonia, Dr. Eyton Jones said he had used stimulants with success. Dr. Turnerwell remembered a case in which a complete cure had been effected in forty-eight hours without the use of stimulants. Mr. Roberts added that he never used stimulants, and, in his varied and extensive practice, he had rarely lost a case. Mr. Jones, of Dolgelly, on the other hand, said he always used stimulants, and had scarcely lost a case for twenty-one years.

Dr. J. Lawrence Hamilton writes to the London Times that he saw a boy remove a small spider and place it in the center of a big spider's web which was hung among foliage, and distant some four feet from the ground. The larger animal soon rushed from its hiding place under a leaf to attack the intruder, who ran up one of the ascending lines by which the web was secured. The big insect gained rapidly upon its desired prey, the smaller creature (spiders are cannibals, notably the larger females, who are given to devour their smaller male lovers). When the little spider was barely an inch in advance of its pursuer, it cut with one of its posterior legs the line behind itself, so that the stronger insect fell to the ground, thus affording time and opportunity for the diminutive spider to escape along the ascending rope of the web. This is not the only fact which seems to indicate that a spider's instinct may also equal reason.

Emma Abbott, the well-known singer, has declared in favor of cremation. She has always had a horror of the grave, but a cremation is clean and nice. She gave Dr. LeMoyne an order to burn her after death, but her friends object, and perhaps her wishes may not be carried out.

Does your Heart ever seem to stop beating and you feel an almost deathlike sensation? Do you ever have sudden pains in the region of your Heart, or does your Heart ever palpitate, or does it [illegible] pulsations? If you have any of these symptoms we should pronounce it unmistakably Heart Disease. Do not neglect it; it is but a forerunner of worse that will follow. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. To cure this dangerous disease we offer you Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, a preparation indorsed by thousands who have tried and testify to its cures. Send your name to F. E. Ingalls, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc. For sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word and maintains its reputation, unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in hospital service. Why? Because, after years of trial in the worst malarial districts of the United States, it has proved itself a positive antidote for all diseases caused by malarial poisoning of the blood. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

A Pen Picture.

A few months, or even weeks, since, her pallid countenance was the very type of ruddy health—the delight of the school and the pride of the household. She was always welcome wherever duty or pleasure led her. Diligent, punctual and exemplary in the class-room, obedient and loving at home, she won the hearts of all. But alas! those glowing cheeks and lips are now blanched by consumption. The voice once so enchanting in laugh and song is feeble, husky and broken by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch and gently take her bloodless hand in our own. Do not shudder because of its feeble, passionless grasp. The hand once so warm and plump shows its bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins are plainly mapped upon its surface. The pulse that bounded with rapture, imparting beauty, vivacity, health and strength to the system, is delicate to the touch. The enervated heart feebly propels the thin, scanty blood. Must we lose her while yet so young and so fair? No. There is relief. But something more is required than the observance of hygienic rules, for enfeebled nature calls for aid and she must have it. Administer this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. It allays the irritable cough, improves the appetite and digestion, and sends a healthy tingle through her whole being. The blood is enriched, nervous power increased, and the heart bounds with a new impulse. Her face brightens—the blood is returning, her voice is clearer, and her requests are no longer delivered in that peevish, fretful tone so deadening to sympathy. Her step is still faltering, but strength is rapidly returning. Let us take her out in the warm, life-giving sunshine. In a few weeks she will go without our aid, and be able to join her companions in their pleasant pastimes and feel her whole being "warmed and expanded into perfect life." The change is so great that we think she is sweeter and nobler than ever before. And the medicine which has wrought this transformation we look upon as a blessing to humanity, for there are other loved ones to be rescued from the grasp of the insidious destroyer. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has raised her. It will raise others.

"A Square Meal."

We are sure our readers will thank us for calling their attention to the very handsome advertisement of the Excelsior Manufacturing Co., of St. Louis, as it would be useless for us to try to say anything in favor of their Grand Charter Oak Cooking Stove. The very word suggests the thought of a well-cooked meal followed by easy digestion, vigorous health, and a desire to have and to do plenty of real work, to say nothing of the comfort of a happy, contented household.

A "Young Man from the Country,"

Suffering with rheumatism, applied to a Chicago druggist for Dr. Herndon's Gypsy's Gift, but the druggist, wishing to clear out some of his dead stock, prevailed on him to take "something just as good," but it proved good for nothing. Don't let 'em serve you so.

Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!! Don't fail to procure Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for all diseases incident to the period of teething in children. Letter from Rev. John McMurray.

I cannot but regard the discovery of Fellows' Hypophosphites as a matter of devout thankfulness to a benign Providence.

I have used it myself, and also recommend it to others, and invariably found it to be of essential benefit.

In bronchial and other chest affections, in arresting incipient consumption, and in lessening the distressing symptoms of this disease in its hopeless stages, as well as in cases of nervous debility, in giving tone to the system, it is undoubtedly a valuable remedy.
J. McMURRAY, Methodist Minister.
Newport, N. S.

The St. John Telegraph says: "The invention of Fellows' Hypophosphites has become one of the valuable industries of the country, unique of its kind, and a credit to the Dominion of Canada."

Power of Speaking Restored.

Newark, Ont., D. C., March 28, 1870.

J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN,
DeKalb Co. Dem. Cen. Com.

EASTER SUNDAY IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, April 30, 1878.

We awoke on Easter morning with a smile on our lips and a heart full of thanks for such beautiful weather, and doning our new hat we went forth to join the crowds of well dressed people passing too and fro from worship, and all day long glad faces told in smiles of the more glad thoughts within. Short, thankful sermons were preached, telling over again the tidings of the Saviour's re-awakening. The Episcopal and Catholic churches were more observant than others according to their customs. The services were indeed beautiful—floral decorations supurb—music grand. After morning services we joined the fashionable throng on Fifth Avenue and could see at once it was the initial day of spring fashions or one grand millinery opening, rather an animated opening, as the figures arrayed for exhibition, passed you by and you could only take each one in at a glance. It may not be the correct thing to turn and look behind, but one thinks it would take more than United States laws to prevent the curiosity of feminine eyes getting the better of them on such a day as this, when some of the most gorgeous specimens of bonnets the world ever produced, gailed down Fifth Avenue, Easter. Locomotion on the avenue after church on any Sunday, is rather slow, but then it hardly exceeded a miles pace, and at times come to a dead hault on the sunny side.

But the wonderful spring bonnets—let's turn back and look at them. Some were bright as a meteor, with contrasting colors, others, one mass of flowers, black silk alone or trimmed with black velvet or satin predominated and set off all the better, the bright one. The same with dresses—black silk trimmed with jets, are most popular, but dresses of deep purple velvet and of curiously wrought silk glistening with a variety of green and yellow tints, like bronze, were numerous No very bright costumes were visible, and when one or two would appear, the wearers were curiously stared at.

Most interesting to us were the snatches of conversation we heard while passing. We remember now some of the most enthusiastic: "Such a rediculous bonnet—did you ever!" "I would not be seen with it on." "I'm going to a grand wedding in Washington next week." "Isn't Dr. Potter a splendid speaker." "Look at that hat! Isn't it too funny for anything?" "Are you going to seventh regiment reception?" "Do you know him?" "How do you like the horse-hair bonnets?" "Oh! he's too horrid for anything," and so on through a vocabulary of small nothings, interrogations and exclamations.

Every style of face and form was represented, from the delicate features and complexions of the ideal American to the more robusk English and German types of breavity—not much beauty either. We saw very few faces to be called beautiful. "Go west young man" to see beauty of face and figure, for either pretty faces are few and far between, or else we are so devoted to the decoration of the same, we fail to appreciate the natural beauty.

Brides are quite in style this season of the year, and marriages are being consumated very freely. Now I don't mean by that FREE, for the minister, of course, expect them to form quite a large item of his income, and from a few notes on that subject, I was reading the other day, I judge in New York marriages form a very important part of the clergy's functions. Wedding fees are looked after with especial solicitude. If a clergyman be popular, ginial and of good standing, his fees often amount to a respectable income themselves. The cream of the marriages in high life, usually fall to the share of Episcopal and Presbyterian ministers. The Episcopal marriage service, with its ring, accompaniments, fine music and attractions, is generally prefered by those who have an eye for style. An Episcopal rector says that in ten years of ministry he has married over one hundred couples, many of them well to do and some even wealthy who have never paid him a cent. Some of them promised to "call and settle in a few days," others excused themselves by saying, "they had no change with them," and still others walked off without one word. Wedding fees and protestant charges are usually considered the pin money of the pastor's wife. Ladies whose pin money from this source aggregates from $500 to $1,500 a year, and to be found scattered over the upper part of the city. Some are said to enjoy as high as $2,000 or $2,500 from this source. Many a fine library has accumulated in this way. One Episcopal rector with a large congregation, contributes the amount of his wedding fees toward paying the funeral expenses of the more needy. A clergyman of this city was called upon to marry the son of one of his thriftiest members and was astonished at receiving no fee. Six months afterward the heart of the disappointed pastor was gladdened by the sight of a bag of the finest Mocha coffee, which the member, a grocer, sent as a substitute. Soon afterward a second son of the grocer was married, and after waiting the same length of time, two bags of Mocha appeared. The legend does not relate whether the grocer had many sons, but if he had, his pastor would soon be able to compete with him in business. One day a couple who called at Trinity had no ring. The minister told the groom that of he had no gold a silver one would do, and the groom did not even have that, and after searching the neighborhood for something within his means, came back with a brass one and was married with it. He says he was once called on to marry a fine, hearty, young German and his fraulein, a pretty, blue-eyed little thing, so sly and modest that she could hardly speak. When he got through the husband asked how much it was. "Give me," he said, "as much as you love your wife." He looked tenderly down into the blushing appealing face that nestled along side of him, and then diving his big burly fist into his pocket brought it out running over with silver and gold Another time he was importuned by an Irish laborer and his sweetheart, who wanted to be married. They were too poor to pay a fee and said they would remember him with thankfulness to the last day of their lives. He performed the ceremony, whereupon the thrifty groom asked "his reverance" for the trifling loan of half a dollar to get a night's lodging.

But 'tis ever thus. Some marry for love, and work for money, others marry for money and work for love. Happy is the man who gets both.

THLIDIC.

Dearest Della, how we miss thee,
Since we laid thee down to sleep,
And thine eyes were closed forever,
'Mid those friends that love and weep.

Oft we shed our tears of sorrow,
O'er thy memory—ever dear,
When we think of happy hours,
We might have spent each passing year.

And when life is sweetly closing,
And our final hour has come,
Then dear, Della, we'll be dwelling,
By thee in thy spring grave home.

Then we'll gently rest together,
In our little narrow bed,
Till the morn of Resurrection,
Calls us from the silent dead.

—Do you know what your are drinking when you so enjoyably sup your cup of tea at eventide? Are you sure it is that aromatic herb which exhilerates and delights, or is it some foul weed doctored with coloring to deceive the unwary. As you are not a chemist, how are you to tell. There is only one way to escape the evils of poisonous teas, and that is to deal with those you can implicity trust. Davenport, the druggist, has just received a good article of teas, put up in tin cans, so as the strength and flavor may be retained. All the best brands of black and green teas warranted pure and unadulterated. If you want a pure, healthful article give him a call.

—A correspondent of Eel River township sends the Fort Wayne Sentinel an account of the death of a young man named Perry Klotz, aged 20 years. Friday night Klotz attended a dance. On Saturday morning he got up, and while putting on his shoes the shoe string broke, and he ejaculated "G—d d—n the shoe string to h—l!" He was instantly stricken with a fit, and died without speaking a word. The people of Eel River township regard this strange death as a sudden and awful dispensation of Divine Providence and a terrible warning to profane swearers. Avoid profanity young man, and buy your shoes at the boot upside down. Get those with buckles, and there will be no strings to break.

—HOW TO TALK.—If you have the ability to amuse, talk often in company, and in a way which shows that you understand what is said around you. But do not talk long. In that case you are apt to tire your hearers. There are many persons, who, though they have nothing to talk of, never know when to leave off talking. There are some who labor under so great and insatiable a desire for talking, that they will even interrupt others when about to speak. We should, in society, never talk of our own or other's domestic affairs. Yours are of no interest to them, and their's should not be to you. Besides the subject is of so delicate a nature that with the best intentions it is a chance if we do not make some mortifying mistake, or wound the feelings of some of the company.

—The Richland township S. S. Workers institute met at the U. B. church, Corunna, Ind., May 4th, 1878. Mr. Rahma led the singing and Miss Helmer presided at the organ. Addresses were made by Rev. L. Rice of Auburn, on the progress of S. S. Work. Rev. L. Harding of Corunna, on the Efficiency of S. S., and Rev. Dinins of Waterloo, on What Constitutes Successful S. S. Work. These addresses were followed by intesting and animated discussions which indicates that the S. S. Workers of Richland township are awake to the interest of the S. S. The question drawer called out important questions which were answered by members of the Institute. It was decided to hold the next Institute and yearly picnic at Corunna, Sep. 1st, 1878. Taking all together it was a pleasant and enjoyable meeting, and who dare say it will not prove to be a profitable one.

VISITOR.

—The Cincinnatti Enquire, of last Saturday, published reports which represent the greater portion of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Kentucky, and which show that the present prospect for a heavy yield of fruit this season is very flattering. While the peach crop on low lands is reported damaged to an extent of probably 50 per cent., apples, cherries, etc., with but few exceptions, are reported to be in excellent condition. The reports show a large increase in orchard acerage within the past five years. The total acerage of Ohio being over four hundred thousand, being an increase within the time specified of nearly 20 per cent. Grapes, although not far enough advanced to allow an occurate estimate of future prospects, are said to be in fair condition, and a large yield is promised. The entire fruit crop, like all other vegetations, is fully three weeks advanced in development over the former seasons.

—Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow. Dr. Bull's Blood Mixture will accomplish this in a short time. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Contract For Hauling.

The undersigned desires to contract within the next two weeks, for the hauling of a lot of Stave bolts from the farm of John Lutz, east of Auburn, to Beugnot & Co's. Stave factory. Prompt payment made when contract is completed. CHRISTIAN SLEOLA.

—Rev. J. E. Ervin has an offer from Bishop Bowman to be transferred to the Columbia River Conference, and to be stationed at Walla Walla, in the celebrated valley of that name. The salary offered is $1000 per year. The great expense of getting there is all that prevents an exceptance.

—We are in receipt of the San Francisco Sunday Chronicle, and we have suspicion that it is from our correspondent, Col. Dawson, who stepped over there a few days ago. The paper is a good one, and resembles the COURIER very much. We are glad he sent us a Sunday paper, as we enjoy them much more than these secular publications. Thanks, A. C.

—McLinn and Dennis, the Florida election officers who last week "confessed" to having doctored the returns from that State, in order to elect Hayes, will soon have a reputation equal to that of Mrs. Tilton. Already they have several confessions in the field, implicating both sides indiscriminately.—Press.

At the same time Hayes recommended them for high offices to pay them for the part they took in counting him in.

—Our genial friend, Tom. Starr, lately of the Albion New Era, has bought the Hicksville News, which is now under his entire control. Tom. has the energy and ability to make a good paper, and starts out with prestige fairly won in the various phases of the publishing business. We know he claims success, and we believe that the more generally he becomes known, the more largely will be the support extended.

— If you want a good buggy, either double or single, don't forget that F. D. Ryan is agent for the Tiffin vehicles, and has a large assortment on hand, just received from the factory. These buggies need no recommendation. They stand the test of use and time and none are found deficient in durability and strength. Call and see them at Ensley building south of Court House.

—Mr. D. Grates, the enterprising farmer near Spencerville, well known for the fine blooded stock he has introduced into this country, will erect a large brick flouring mill at Butler this summer. It will be located along the railroad on Main street, near where the liberty poll now stands. We trust Mr. G. will be encouraged in the enterprise, and that it will prove a good investment.

—We regret to learn that the second daughter of Mr. Jacob Thomas, formerly of this place, but now residing at Sherwood, Ohio, was drowned last Friday. Two of his daughters were going over a narrow crossing over a stream near the mill in which Mr. Thomas is employed, when the younger became dizzy, and fell into the stream pulling the other with her. The oldest one saved herself by graping a log, but the other was drowned.

—We have received the following dispatch from Bryan, Ohio, dated may 6th 1878:

EDITOR COURIER,—To-day I start around the world. Shall visit Europe, Asia, Africa, and then to China and California. Will send you a letter for publication after I cross the Atlantic. Yours &c. CHAS. C. EATON.

Mr. Eaton was formerly in business here and we shall be pleased to hear from him.

—Rev. J. E. Ervin preached at Cedar Creek Chapel last Saturday night and also Sabbath, to a very large and attentive congregation. After this he baptised twenty-one persons, eight by affusion and thirteen by immersion. The sacrament of the Lord's supper also administered—about 60 persons communing. He was assisted by Rev. W. L Meese, who has done a good work for that church. They have an excellent Sabbath School in that society and there is talk that it will not go into winter quarters, but continue to battle all the year. So may it be.

—A terrible explosion occurred in the largest flouring mills in the country at Minneapolis last Thursday. A dispatch says the whole city was shaken at twenty minutes past 7 o'clock this evening by the shock of an explosion which was discovered to have occurred in the big forty-two-run Washburn mill, located in the very center of the milling district. The explosion was followed by the envelopment in flames of the Washburn, "A" mill, the Diamond, the Zinth, the Pettit, Robinson & Co. mill, the Humboldt, and the Galaxy mills and adjacent lumber yards and cooper shops, and the big elevator owned by the mill company. The loss of life is probably twenty persons, with a long list of wounded.

To The Afflicted.

Prof. G. W. Van Vleck, M. D., of Cincinnatti, and formerly of Bellvue Hospital, will be in Auburn, at the Central House, on Wednesday, May 15th, that all who are suffering from chronic diseases may avail themselves of his superior skill and long experience in the treatment of chronic diseases, having no superior in the treatment of Catarrh, Asthma, Hemorrhoids or piles, Pulmonary diseases, and diseases of woman and children. Examination free. Come and be healed.

—It is curious that money should be called by so many different names. Some describe it as "spondulix," some as "the stuff," some as "the sugar," some as "rhino," some as "spoons," some as "the ready," others as "brads." The French call it "argent," the English "the needful," in Mexico "casting," in the South "rock," in the East "tin," in the West "rags," in Canada it goes by the name of "spelter," hereabouts it is "short."

Grand Opening at Pleasant Lake.

We were advised by Mr. Simmons, the genial superintendent of the grove at Pleasant Lake that the grand opening of that pleasure resort will take place Friday, May 17th 1878. A prize is to be given to the homliest editor, a beautitul baby carriage to the handsomest baby not over 8 months old. Besides there will be a fine programme arranged for the occasion. Lots of fun and amusement for all. Half fare on railroad. A large number will attend from here if the weather is favorable.

—The county Board of Education was in session, at the office of the County Superintendent at this place yesterday. No business of importance was transacted. The incorporated towns handed in their enumerations of school children the townships having done so sometime ago. Below are the the figures:

Butler	township	256
Jackson	"	475
Concord	"	507
Newville	"	275
Stafford	"	198
Wilmin'ton	"	564
Union	"	416
Richland	"	474

J. RAINIER, Pres.

—The attention of the editor of Garrett Herald is called to the following: "Mr George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly, a paper of unwavering devotion to the Republican party, takes a sensible view of the controversy over the election of Field, as ex-Confederate, to the office of Doorkeeper of the House. He claims that the Republican hue and cry raised over the matter is but the sheerest "Buncomb" and is simply resorted to with the hope of reviving the old war issues that are now dead as Methusalah. Curtis says: 'The "record" of neither party was in any degree changed by the affair, except that the Republicans were forced into the false position of supporting the Democratic candidate whom they could not have believed to be a fit man for the place. The whole affair was sheer "Buncombe," and in nothing more than in the attempt to renew the sectional hostility of the war. The Union has now been formerly and fully restored. The country has declined to punish in any way the ex-Confederates, even the chiefs, and the laws make no discrimination against them as citizens. They now stand upon the same footing with all others, and as they constitute a most important part of the Democratic party, it is not surprising that they are recognized by that party. * * * * * * * The performance of General Butler was too plainly a trick, and not a successful one, to be of any service to the party.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

At the time of the panic, Nathan Mathews of Boston, was a heavy operator in real estate, and was reputed to be worth $7,000,000. He has just failed for $5,000,000, and, it is said, when his debts are paid he will not have a dollar left.... A number of heavy failures are reported in New York, including Ben Wood, whose liabilities are placed at $230,000; the MacKnab & Harlin Manufacturing Company, liabilities $200,000; David T. Kennedy, builder, liabilities $540,000; Theodore Reed, liabilities $82,000.

New York papers chronicle the death of John Morrissey, ex-Congressman, ex-State Senator and ex prize-fighter. He died suddenly, of paralysis, at Saratoga. Morrissey was born in Tipperary, Ireland, in 1831, and was therefore 47 years of age....John N. Genin, the famous New York hatter of twenty years ago, is dead....The feasibility of rapid transit in cities was demonstrated in New York the other day, by the passage of the first train over the new elevated railroad from Trinity Church to Central Park in twenty minutes, or at a rate of more than fifteen miles an hour.

THE WEST.

A lady living near Connersville, Ind., astonished her husband, the other day, by giving birth to five healthy children, all boys. Mother and little ones, at last accounts, were doing well....John Runk, who murdered Policeman Coates, of San Francisco, a year ago, was hung on the 26th of April.

"Our Aldermen" is the title of a new and sparkling comedy just brought out at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, with a specially strong cast, including Charles Stanley, Harry Pearson, Roland Reed, and all the members of the regular company.

The Detroit Free Press office has been almost totally destroyed by fire. The flames burst out suddenly at an early hour in the morning, and spread so rapidly that it was impossible to save any of the material. The loss is a severe one to the publishers, but there has been no delay in the issue of the paper, the other publishers of the city generally coming to the assistance of their unfortunate contemporary.

The Cincinnati Enquirer publishes reports which represent the greater portion of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Kentucky, and which show that the present prospect for a heavy yield of fruit this season is very flattering.

A communication has been received by Gen. Sheridan from Gen. Miles, dated at Fort Keogh, bearing overtures from Sitting Bull, who is now looking forward to a peaceable settlement of his difficulties, and wants to come back to the fold.

The city of Minneapolis, Minn., the great milling metropolis, has been the scene of a terribly destructive conflagration, accompanied by a shocking loss of life. On the evening of the 2d inst. the city was shaken as by an earthquake by a terrific explosion, which was promptly traced to the groups of great flouring mills in what is known as "The Platform," just above St. Anthony falls, where the entire flouring district of the city is concentrated. The explosion came from the great Washburn Mill, from which a column of flame was seen to shoot up several hundred feet, followed by a crash which crushed the immense structure like an eggshell. Secondary explosions instantly destroyed the Thompson & Hoyt and the Humboldt Mills, and flames immediately burst out, communicating to the Galaxy Mills, those of Pettit, Robinson & Co., Cahill, Ankeny & Co., L. Day & Sons, Day & Rollins, Buell, Newton & Co., Gorton, Hayward & Co., the Washburn "A" and "B" mills, and lesser structures down the bank of the river. The destruction from the shock of the explosion extended much further, glass being wrecked for several squares, and buildings shaken throughout the city. So rapidly did the flames extend that many of the employes in the mills were unable to escape, and about fifteen unfortunate people lost their lives. The loss of property is estimated at about $1,000,000, one-half of which falls upon the milling interest.

The St. Louis and Cincinnati and Chicago authorities are becoming not a little alarmed at the attitude assumed by the Socialists. The latter seem to have the backing of a very large number of Germans and Bohemians, and are growing more and more belligerent in their talk every day.

THE SOUTH.

A San Antonio telegram reports another raid on the northwest frontier of Texas by Indians from the Fort Stanton reservation. The Indians who murdered fifteen persons near Loredo and captured a large number of horses made good their escape.

A collision on the Richmond and Danville railroad, ninety-six miles from Richmond, resulted in the wrecking of a sleeping coach, causing the death of one passenger and the serious injuring of five others.

At Tyler, Texas, recently, four negro children, left locked up at home while the mother was at church, were burned to death.

A terrible explosion occurred on the Mississippi river, opposite Memphis, one day last week. The tow-boat Warner, with five barges and a trading boat in tow, exploded her boilers. The pilot-house and roof were blown to a great height, and fell back upon the wreck, while the air was filled with splinters and fragments. The crew consisted of twenty-five persons, three of whom were instantly killed. Nearly all the others were more or less injured, some of them fatally.

WASHINGTON.

William M. Evarts, Jr., the only son of the Secretary of State, died at Washington, a few days ago, of consumption. He was 27 years old....There is little hope of the passage of the Tariff bill at this session of Congress. A careful canvass of the House reveals the fact that upon a full vote the result would be—for the bill, 135; against the bill, 156. So says a Washington correspondent.

A very ugly case is said to have been made out against George Seward, Minister to China, and Consul General Bradford, in the investigation now in process by a House committee.

Already 6,000 applications have been received from persons claiming pensions under the act lately passed by Congress, granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 and their widows, and to pay them would take $550,000 a year. When the bill was under consideration it was stated that the number of pensioners would not be more than a few hundred.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for the following bonds: Coupon bonds, dated July 1, 1865, namely, $50, Nos. 50,001 to 53,000, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 60,001 to 80,000 both inclusive; $500, Nos. 65,001 to 68,000, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 108,001 to 114,400, both inclusive. Total coupon, $3,000,000. Registered bonds, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1870, as follows: $50, Nos. 1,751 to 1,900, both inclusive; $100, Nos. 14,101 to 15,200, both inclusive; $500, Nos. 8,701 to 9,200, both inclusive; $1,000, Nos. 28,751 to 30,100, both inclusive; $5,000, Nos. 8,051 to 8,300, both inclusive; $10,000, Nos. 14,801 to 15,507, both inclusive. Total registered, $2,000,000. Aggregate, $5,000,000. The principal and interest will be paid at the treasury on and after the 30th of July next, and interest will cease on that day.... Apprehensions in several quarters of serious troubles with the Indians this summer are not thought to be groundless. The War Department is in receipt of communications from parties whose opinions are entitled to earnest attention, to the effect that warlike movements are clearly discernible on the part of several tribes.

Robert C. Winthrop, who was Speaker of the House of Representatives when the corner-stone of the Washington monument was laid, and who delivered an oration on the occasion, is in Washington urging the passage of the bill authorizing the Commissioners to strengthen and finish the structure.

The monthly treasury statement, printed below, shows the reduction of the national debt for April to have been $3,018,085:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 738,619,000

The President has approved the act prohibiting the coinage of 20-cent pieces....Subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan are coming in rapidly.

POLITICAL.

It is openly asserted at Washington that both Conkling and Butler have done much to aid Tilden in opening up the Florida business.

"It is said by prominent Democrats that a resolution will soon be introduced in the House directing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the alleged Florida frauds, and authorize them to send for persons and papers. This would include the statements of McLin and Dennis, and other proofs in that connection. The investigation will be made with a view of ascertaining all the facts, and not to interfere with the present position of President Hayes." So says an Associated Press telegram from Washington.

A conversation between the President and a Republican Congressman from Massachusetts, upon the subject of the recent statements in the Florida case, is reported from Washington: "Mr. Hayes talked freely on the subject. He said he believed the electoral vote of Florida belonged to him and not to Tilden, and that he knows of no fraud or wrong-doing in connection with the count. The only interest he took in the Florida election of 1876 was to see that an honest count was had, and for that purpose he sanctioned the visit of the statesmen."

The New Orleans Collectorship has at last been taken out of national politics, the United States Senate having confirmed the nomination of George L. Smith for that position....Springfield is the place and the 27th of June the date settled upon by the State Central Committee for the holding of the Illinois Republican State Convention.

GENERAL.

It is reported from San Francisco that, in anticipation of the breaking out of hostilities between England and Russia, a movement is afoot to fit out a privateer in that port to prey on British commerce. Letters of marque from the Russian Government are already there in blank, waiting for the declaration of war, to be filled out.

Wilbur F. Storey, of the Chicago Times, has started on a twelve months' tour of the Old World.

The peace in Cuba was short-lived. Insurgent Gen. Maceo with 1,200 men has renewed operations against the Spaniards, and there are said to be 1,800 other men in the field to continue the struggle. A new provisional government has been formed with Gen. Calvar as President. And it is announced from Madrid that the Spanish Government has decided to send 8,000 fresh troops to the island.

The bitter feud existing in Montreal between Orangemen and Catholics has culminated in more bloodshed. A few nights ago, as a party of Orangemen, who had attended a concert in the suburb of Griffintown, were going home in a body, they were ambushed by a party of Catholic Unionists. One man was shot dead, another seriously wounded, and a woman received three bullets in one of her legs. There is much excitement in Montreal over the affair, and it is feared more serious disturbances will occur.

The fifth annual convention of the Millers' National Association will be held in the Board-of-Trade rooms, Indianapolis, on Tuesday, May 28....W. S. O'Brien, one of the famous quartet of Bonanza kings, died recently in San Francisco. His property is estimated at $15,000,000 to $20,000,000.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Russian declarations of privateering is reported to have produced a depressing influence on British shipping interests....A number of German bankers, who were induced to meet at Berlin to consider the practicability of floating another Russian loan, unanimously refused to engage in the work....The Servian authorities have been ordered to prevent the Russians from recruiting in the recently-annexed territory....The Russian press have been forbidden to report or comment upon the political demonstrations, riots, or local disturbances, under pain of suspension....Gen. Todleben has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Russian forces south of the Danube.

Intelligence has been received in Constantinople that the Mussulman insurgents have surprised a Russian encampment near Philippopolis, taking 1,000 prisoners and four guns. They are now marching toward Tatarkoi....A cable dispatch says it is rumored that Prince Bismarck has retired from the position of mediator. As the principle of simultaneous withdrawal from Constantinople is accepted, he thinks the negotiations as to details can be more conveniently carried on directly between the parties concerned....A boiler burst in a foundry at Dublin, Ireland, killing fifteen persons and wounding twelve, the victims being mostly occupants of adjoining houses demolished by the force of the explosion....The Grand Duke Nicholas has been promoted to the rank of Field Marshal General, and recalled to Russia on account of ill health.

A definition of the position of Russia which is telegraphed from St. Petersburg, and which is regarded by the London Times as possessing authority, does not offer much hope for a peaceable adjustment of the European difficulty. It is to the effect that Russia may consent to modify the Bulgarian boundary and give up certain other points in the peace of San Stefano, but that it will insist to the last upon the utter wiping out of the treaty of 1856. England, on the other hand, will insist quite as rigidly that Russia must recognize the principles of that treaty, and that it must take precedence of the peace of San Stefano.

The friendship between Russia and Servia is completely restored. It has been arranged that Servia, in the event of an Anglo-Russian war, shall only observe the stipulations of the San Stefano treaty, while Turkey remains neutral....A Berlin dispatch says the ceremony of betrothal of the Duke of Connaught, the seventh child and third son of Queen Victoria, to Princess Louise, third daughter of Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, will occur at Darmstadt in a few days....Mr. Maynard, our Minister at Constantinople, has gone to Volo to investigate the massacres by Bashi-Bazouks, committed in that vicinity.

The French International Exhibition of 1878 was formally opened with great eclat, at Paris, on the 1st inst. The weather was unpropitious, rain falling most of the day, but notwithstanding this drawback the attendance was immense and the enthusiasm great. President MacMahon declared the Exhibition open amid salvos of artillery, music by the bands, and enthusiastic cries of "Vive la Republique," "Vive la France," etc. The American section, though unfinished, is said to compare favorably with the others.

The news from Europe is more peaceful in tone. It is announced that Russia and England have agreed upon a basis for negotiations, and it is possible they may patch up a temporary peace at least....The Russian Government has purchased several steamers, for the purpose of converting them into cruisers to prey upon English commerce.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, April 26.—Senate.—Not in session. House.—A bill was passed exempting from enrollment and admeasurement all vessels not propelled by steam or sail, except vessels of that character engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was passed.

Saturday, April 27.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The Indian Appropriation bill was passed. It appropriates $4,772,000....The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was taken up and discussed in committee of the whole. The total amount appropriated by the bill is $14,735,000.

Monday, April 29.—Senate.—Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky, presented the credentials of his successor in the Senate, John S. Williams....Mr. McCreery presented a petition signed by a large number of influential citizens, regardless of party, asking that Raphael Semmes be assigned to a position on the Howgate expedition....Bills introduced: By Mr. Plumb, to further define the right of pre-emption entries within railroad limits; by Mr. Cockrell (by request), to provide for ascertaining and reporting the expense incurred by the Territory of Idaho in defending themselves against the Nez-Perce Indians; by Mr. Christiancy, to amend section 5,447, Revised Statutes, in regard to assaults upon or interference with the internal revenue or customs officers; also, to amend section 5,497, Revised Statutes, in regard to embezzlements by internal-revenue officers....Bills passed: House bill making an appropriation of $10,000 for pier-lights at the entrance of the jetties in the South pass of the Mississippi river; Senate bill for the relief of settlers on public lands within the double minimum limits of railroad grants, afterward thrown out of the double minimum limits by reason of a change in the route of the roads; House joint resolution appropriating $5,000 for erecting a monument over the grave of Thomas Jefferson; Senate bill granting lands to the State of Minnesota in lieu of certain lands heretofore granted; House bill to extend the provisions of section 2,297, Revised Statutes, to other institutions of learning.

House.—Bills introduced: By Mr. Clark, to prevent the insolvency of railroad companies; by Mr. Turner, to prevent assessments for political purposes; by Mr. Phillips, setting aside the contract entered into between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Syndicate; by Mr. Acklin, repealing the iron-clad oath for jurors; by Mr. Williams, of Michigan, for the erection of a statue of Gen. Custer; by Mr. Aldrich, to establish a branch mint at Chicago; by Mr. Wilson, repealing the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March, 1870, pledging payment in gold of all bonds theretofore payable in lawful money of the United States....A bill introduced by Mr. Fort, forbidding the further retirement of greenbacks, and providing for the reissue of legal tenders redeemed, was passed under a suspension of the rules, by a vote of 177 yeas to 35 nays.

Tuesday, April 30.—Senate.—The Senate devoted the entire day to the consideration of the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law.

House.—The House consumed the day in discussing the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill.

Wednesday, May 1.—Senate.—The Senate devoted another day to the discussion of the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law, and finally referred it to the Judiciary Committee, with the understanding that it be reported back without delay....There was an interesting debate upon the subject of the tariff, growing out of an attempt by Mr. Blaine to call up his resolution declaring any radical change in our tariff at this time to be inopportune. Objection was made to the calling up of the resolution....Mr. Garland introduced a bill providing for a commission to examine into the subject of the tariff, with a view to facilitating legislation relative thereto. Referred.

House.—Mr. Chittenden introduced a bill providing for the exchange of fractional silver coin for United States notes. Referred....Mr. Robertson, Chairman of the Committee on the Mississippi Levees, reported a bill appropriating $3,871,874 for closing crevasses and strengthening the levees on the Mississippi river. Printed and recommitted....Mr. Vance, Chairman of the Committee on Patents, reported a bill amending the Patent laws. Printed and recommitted....Mr. Throckmorton introduced a bill limiting the rates for transportation, freight and passengers over the Pacific railroad bridge at Omaha. Referred....The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was discussed.

Singular Subsidence of Earth.

The owner of a piece of land in one of the suburbs of Liege was the other day measuring out a part of it, on which he intended to build a house. All at once he felt the ground moving under his feet. On looking down, he found that he was sinking, and that the earth on which he stood was giving way. So he hurried away—not a moment too soon as it happened, for, on turning round, to his horror he discovered that the very spot on which he had been working had disappeared, a surface of about eight or nine square yards having fallen in, leaving a fearful chasm of 300 yards deep. This singular accident, which might have cost him his life, is due to the practice in former times of closing the mouths of abandoned coal pits with planks, and covering the planks with a layer of earth, which in process of time became part of the field, and in this case had for a number of years been under cultivation, the very existence of the coal pit having been forgotten for generations. Some years ago, in the same neighborhood, a farmer, while engaged in plowing, all at once missed a large walnut tree which only a few minutes before had been before his eyes. The tree had completely disappeared, having fallen into one of the abandoned shafts, the covering of which, composed of planks of wood with earth over them, had through age become decayed, and had suddenly collapsed.—French paper.

The Mormon authorities in Salt Lake learned, by a thorough examination of Brigham Young's accounts after his death, that he had taken possession of $1,000,000 worth of property that rightfully belonged to the church. They have just regained about two-thirds of it by process of law, in spite of the opposition of the heirs, who will now get little or nothing.

Some signs of taverns in London are curious, viz.: "Goat and Compasses," "Salmon and Compasses," "Anchor and Bodices," "Bull and Mouth," "Green Man and Still," "Pig and Whistle," "Who'd a Thought It?" "The Splendid Shilling," etc.

THE IOWA MAD-STONE.

A Stone that Has Been Known for 130 Years—How It is Used.

[Davenport Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

Inquiry having recently been made as to the whereabouts of a genuine mad-stone, the following will give the desired information regarding one which has a wonderful record. It is now in the possession of Turner Evans, of Paris, Jackson township, Linn county, the nearest point to which by railroad is Anamosa, on the Dubuque and Southwestern railroad. Its properties were first known 130 years ago in Virginia. It has been in the Evans family since first known. The present possessor received it from his father, Adam Evans. It did many wonderful cures, and was known far and wide. He received it from his father in 1812, while living near Boone Station, Ky. On the death of Adam Evans, it passed to Turner Evans more than twenty years ago. During that period it has been tested many times, and never failed to cure the rabies, even in the most severe and almost hopeless cases. At first the neighbors of Mr. Evans were incredulous, and inclined to ridicule the thing, but, after numerous successful trials on horses and cattle, doubt was changed to certainty. During his possession of the stone nearly 700 cases have been treated, and in not one case has the stone failed to give relief and effect a cure.

It is not longer than the end of a man's thumb, weighs one-fourth of an ounce, and resembles a dark sponge, with fine pores extending from side to side. Seen through a magnifying glass it resembles flint, and at the outer end of the pores appear dark rings, like sandstone. It is triangular in form, having one flat surface, which is called the working side.

When used it is placed in a bath of one part milk to three parts water, and warmed to blood-heat. The patient is required to exercise briskly until the blood becomes active in circulation, when the skin near the parts bitten is scratched with a sharp-pointed instrument until the blood starts, when the stone is applied. It immediately begins to absorb the virus, and, when filled, is removed and soaked in the milk-and-water bath. It is thus repeatedly applied, until it ceases to adhere to the flesh, which it will do as soon as the virus is extracted, and not until then. While the virus remains, it requires considerable power to remove it. It has been applied nearly 100 times in a single case. The rule is to apply it as long as it will take hold. Applied to the flesh of a person not affected with rabies, it has no more effect than a piece of glass, unless there be present the taint of scrofulous disease, when it will adhere as in cases of rabies. The cases cured by this stone are too many and too well authenticated to permit a doubt of its efficacy. A Mr. Bunce, of Mechanicsville, bitten by a rabid dog, visited Mr. Evans, and, when he arrived there, was suffering from paroxysms and nervous spasms of the limbs. The stone was applied, and he was cured.

A Mr. Field, of Chicago, arrived there in a terrible condition. For twenty-four hour before the stone was applied he suffered intense torture from nervous paroxysms and agony of mind, which, if continued another day, would have, he believes, resulted in madness; in fact, he says death would have been a relief to him, rather than have endured the torment. He was wholly cured by the use of the stone.

Mr. Evans seeks no notoriety. What he has received has come from those who have experienced the benefits of his mad-stone. If any person afflicted with rabies visits him, he will do all he can to give him relief. He promises nothing, and makes no pretensions. He is not a visionist, nor superstitious. The properties of the mad-stone are to him an established fact, as much so as that he will reap wheat where he sows the seed. It is at the service of any who wish to use it.

The Future Wheat Fields.

Minnesota and Dakota are unquestionably destined to become the future wheat fields not only of the Northwest, but of the American continent. Advices from the latter represent the acreage of spring wheat planted there the current season as largely in excess of any previous year, and practical wheat-growers, who have made a thorough examination of the Territory, unhesitatingly pronounce the land as the best wheat soil in the United States, the prairies of Texas not excepted. The returns of last year's crop show the average to exceed that of any other State or Territory. A well-known business man, of this city, who has recently passed over the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, speaks of the Red river valley as the most beautiful country he ever beheld. The land is of unsurpassed richness, and so easily brought under cultivation that the prairie, which in September is robed in all the glory of autumnal flora, waves with a heavy mantle of golden wheat the following August. In many instances the first year's crop pays for the cost of land, expenses of cultivation, and harvesting. Lumber for fencing and other farm improvements can be delivered on the ground as cheaply as anywhere in Illinois or Iowa. The Northern Pacific road offers great inducements to actual settlers in the way of cheap lands, and there are millions of acres near the line of the railroad subject to settlement under the "Homestead act."—Chicago Journal.

Special Legislation.

A joint resolution to amend the constitution, prohibiting special legislation, introduced in Congress by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, is under consideration by the House Committee on Civil-Service Reform. The resolution is as follows:

Section 1. Congress shall not pass any local, private, or special act in any case where the subject matter thereof could be embraced in a general law, and the courts may determine in all cases whether any local, private or special law could have been embraced in a general enactment.

Sec. 2. Congress shall establish courts in which shall be adjudicated all claims against the United States, under such regulation as Congress may by general law prescribe.

The sub-committee may probably make a report in favor of the proposition. In the discussion before the committee it was maintained that an amendment of this kind would very much simplify and reform the legislation of Congress. The text does not mention general laws for the reason that there is already a provision in the constitution requiring Congress to make provision to carry into effect all the powers that are conferred upon it. Under this proposed amendment it will be the duty of Congress to pass general laws to carry out all of the matters now accomplished by special acts. This would convert Congress into a legislature for general business to be alike applicable to all classes of people, and effectually put a stop to all Congressional jobbery and claims business.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

A Telegraphic Ditty.

In a late number of the Journal of Telegraph C. C. Haskins, an old Indianapolis operator, has a poetical romance which is somewhat of a literary curiosity. Operators have established a lingo of their own, in which figures are used to express words and sentences, and he has woven these into his tale with good results. It reads as follows, and appended are the explanations for the benefit of the uninitiated:

'Twas Jimmy Dot and Susie Spaise
On number "3" were working;
And Susie's heart went pit-a-pat
To Jimmy's pulses jerking.

But Susie had two strings to her'n;
She'd duplexed her affection;
So when Jim called she'd "25"
Which caused him sore dejection.

Sometimes James asked for "77"
And "8" would come replying,
So he could scarce declare his love,
Though e'en a-most a-dying.

So Jim cooled down—became a flirt,
Her Phantom got to kicking,
And with Sue's "13" asked of Jim,
A "44" came ticking.

Jim didn't "1" an instant then,
But "73" he sputtered,
And after that the love-dots flew
Like buckwheat cakes well buttered.

And now to close my romance out
They made a wedding party,
And Susie Spaise is Mrs. Dot;
They're duplexed now, so—"30."

"3"—The same line.
"25"—Am busy.
"77"—Have something for you. Can you take it?
"8"—Am working on another circuit.
"13"—What's the matter.
"44"—Answer quick.
"1"—Wait.
"73"—My compliments.
"30"—The end.

Baby Carriages and Baby Killers.

The Providence Journal says: "The time has come for the inevitable baby carriage. A generation ago these things were little more than baskets screwed on to axles without springs. Then came a protest, originally from physicians, against trundling the little ones over the pavements in vans which would rack the bones and addle the brains of the toughest man. Out of this discussion the modern baby carriage was evolved, and, as at first constructed, was provided with real springs, and, if used with ordinary care, did not endanger life. Gradually the springs have given way to rigid strips of iron, imitating springs, leaving the carriage as unfit and dangerous as a wheelbarrow for the delicate mission of transporting an infant over rough crossings and along the average sidewalk. The baby's tissues will not bear much jolting. Its brain is gelatinous, and even its bones soft. Nature has made its bed in the mother's arms and on the mother's breast. To change this for a springless cart is almost murder. Let any man or woman try riding a short distance, on the smoothest road, in a wagon without springs. The jar will be found fatiguing and soon become painful. The intervention of a cushion or a pillow does not ease it much. If any parent wishes to get a baby carriage for a child whose life is worth insuring, let him or her buy none in which the body pressed by the hand does not rise and fall easily on its springs."

Color-Blindness.
